There is high authority for the statement that Lord Salisbury is willing to grant to Ireland a very broad measure of local self-government. Mr. Gladstone remarked to a friend that Parnell's malevolent election tactics had rendered it impossible for the Liberals to make any overtures to him; the aid he desires must be solicited.

LATER NEWS IETMS.

Mr. Gladstone and his principal colleagues have arrived at an understanding on the Irish question. Says a cable dispatch: "The Liberal leaders pledge themselves to grant a local Parliament to Ireland and to use every effort to unite the party on the question. The party will oppose any bill introduced by the Tory Ministry dealing with Irish affairs falling short of an Irish local Parliament. Mr. Gladstone, in the event of the Ministry refusing to grant an Irish Parliament, will ask leave of the House to bring in a separate Liberal measure. The extreme Whig wing declines to commit itself, and will probably coalesce with the Ministerialists to defeat Mr. Gladstone's proposals. Mr. Gladstone is assured of the hearty support of the Irish Nationalists if the concession promised is conceived in the generous spirit confidently looked for."

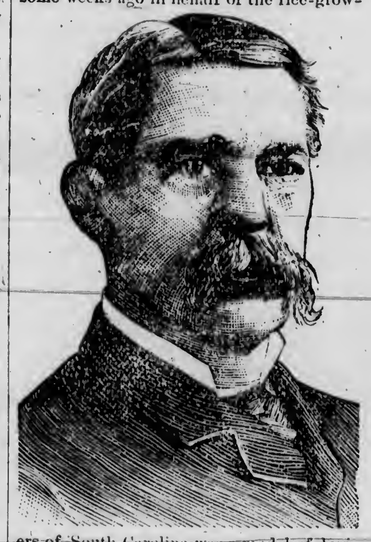
MEN OF NOTE.

William L. Trenholm, Civil-Service Commissioner.

Col. William L. Trenholm, of Charleston, S. C., is about 50 years of age, an active business man, and was recommended for the appointment by leading friends of the Civil-Service Reform movement North and South. He is the son of the late Secretary Trenholm of the Treasury of the Southern Confederacy, and has been brought into prominence lately by his address before numerous bankers' conventions on the silver question, and his writings on the same subject, which have attracted wide attention. An argument which he presented to the Secretary of the Treasury some weeks ago in behalf of the rice-growers of South Carolina was a model of logical statement. It was while he was in Washington to present the views of the rice-growers on the rice-duty question that the President sent for him and had a chat with him, one afternoon, when no one could interrupt them. The President was favorably impressed by his visitor, and subsequently offered him the Civil-Service Commissionership, which was accepted. Col. Trenholm, like Mr. Edgerton, is a pronounced civil-service reformer—a civil-service reformer on principle—and there is no doubt that he will do all in his power to carry out the views of the President on that question.



THE LAW OF SUCCESSION.

The Course to Be Pursued in the Event of the Death of Both the President and Vice President.

A few quotations from legal lore will be of interest on this subject at this time. The Constitution of the United States, Article II. Section 1, says:

"In case of the removal of the President from office, or of his death, resignation or inability to discharge the powers and duties of said office, the same shall devolve upon the Vice President, and the Congress may by law provide for the case of removal, death, resignation or inability, both as to the President and Vice President, declaring what officer shall act as President, and such officer shall act accordingly until the disability be removed or a President shall be elected."

Sections 146 to 150, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes say:

Sec. 146. In case of the removal, death, resignation or inability of both the President and Vice President of the United States, the President of the Senate, or, if there is none, then the Speaker of the House of Representatives, for the time being shall act as President until the disability is removed or a President elected.

Sec. 147. Whenever the office of President and Vice President both become vacant, the Secretary of State shall forthwith cause a notification thereof to be made to the executive of every State, and shall also cause the same to be published in at least one of the newspapers printed in each State.

Sec. 148. The notification shall specify that electors of a President and Vice President of the United States shall be appointed or chosen in the several States, as follows:

First. If there shall be the space of two months yet to ensue between the date of such notification and the first Wednesday in December then next ensuing, such notification shall specify that the electors shall be appointed or chosen within thirty-four days preceding such first Wednesday in December.

Second. If there shall not be the space of two months between the date of such notification and such first Wednesday in December, and if the term for which the President and Vice President last in office were elected will not expire on the third day of March next ensuing, the notification shall specify that the electors shall be appointed or chosen within thirty-four days preceding the first Wednesday in December in the next year ensuing. But if there shall not be the space of two months between the date of such notification and the first Wednesday in December then next ensuing, and if the term for which the President and Vice President last in office were elected will expire on the third day of March next ensuing, the notification shall not specify that electors are to be appointed or chosen.

Sec. 149. Electors appointed or chosen upon the notification prescribed by the preceding sections shall meet and give their votes upon the first Wednesday in December specified in the notification.

Sec. 150. The provisions of this title relating to the quadrennial election of President and Vice President shall apply with respect to any election to fill vacancies in the offices of President and Vice President held upon a notification given when both offices become vacant.

The electors for President and Vice President to fill vacancy shall be appointed or chosen as in regular elections as the Legislatures of the States may direct.

Article I. sec. 3, of the Constitution provides that the Vice President of the United States shall be President of the Senate and shall act as President of the United States in case of the death or removal of the incumbent. A President pro tem. shall be elected by the Senate to act as presiding officer of that body in case of the absence or promotion of the Vice President.

Secretary Lamar on the Indian Problem—Points from the Report of Secretary Manning.

SECRETARY LAMAR'S REPORT.

Another View of the Vexed Indian Question and Another Plan for Its Settlement.

The annual report of the Secretary of the Interior reviews at great length the relations of the Indian tribes to the Government and the settlers residing near their reservations. The Indian outbreaks of the year and the causes of them are considered. The recommendation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that the less guilty of the rebellious Chiricahuas should be transported to an island in the Pacific Ocean, as a penal colony, to earn their own living by fishing, stock-raising, etc., or sent to the military prison at Fort Leavenworth, is indorsed. It is recommended that the Southern Utes be located in Indian territory, and that the Pintes of Oregon, be settled on homesteads and given farm implements and other assistance. The subject of the leasing of land by Indians to cattle companies is taken up, and, after showing the passive consent of the late Secretary to such leases, and the evil that has resulted from the practice, the Secretary says:

"From all the facts developed on the subject I am convinced that the assistance rendered by the respective Indian Agents, in the making of these alleged leases, was directed more for the interest of the cattlemen than that of the Indians placed under their care and supervision. While many of the Indians favor the leasing of their lands for grazing purposes, others opposed and protested against such use and occupation of their reservations, and refused to participate in the making of the alleged leases, or to accept any share of the money received thereunder. Sufficient influence, however, seems to have been brought to bear upon a majority of the respective tribes to induce them to enter into the arrangement made. In my judgment, not the least among such influences were the encouragements and persuasion of the respective Indian agents, or some of them at least; and in many instances I fear they have shared in the profits of these speculative transactions."

After speaking of the encroachments of railroads on Indian rights, the Secretary unfolds a plan for the civilization of the Indian which is, in effect, the severalty plan on a small scale, only a small portion of each tribe being placed on homesteads at first, and the number gradually increased. The Secretary thinks it impossible to break up the tribal and reservation systems in any other way.

The Secretary recommends the appointment of a commission of not more than six men of integrity, intelligence, and experience, and of such ability as to be able to comprehend the course of treatment and methods of management best adapted to insure the speediest progress of the respective tribes and bands, to visit each of the reservations, and investigate and report the condition, peculiar circumstances, and needs of the Indians residing thereon. The Secretary recommends, in order to de troy the evil influence of "squaw men," the passage of a law providing that whenever an Indian woman shall marry a citizen of the United States she shall be deemed a citizen, and that all children born of such marriage shall be deemed citizens. Under the provisions of this law no Indian woman would marry such a man with the certainty of losing her membership in the tribe and her right to remain on the reservation.

The condition of the Indian schools, the report says, is gratifying. The Winnebago and Crow-Creek Reservation trouble is reviewed, and it is announced that the President's order withdrawing those lands from settlement has been almost universally obeyed. The exceptions, if any exist, are cases in which a removal would cause suffering. The story of the Oklahoma invasion is retold, and it is stated that these unlawful movements have rendered it unwise at present to open negotiations with the Indians owning the title of these lands for the purpose of opening them to settlement.

Three million nine hundred and twelve thousand four hundred and fifty acres of public land have been sold for cash; 16,201,213 acres have been absorbed by public entry, and 881,840 acres of Indian lands have been disposed of, making a grand total of 20,925,513. The total receipts from these lands were $8,619,598. The total area of surveyed lands up to the 30th of June, 1885, is 369,469,347.50 acres. That unsurveyed is estimated at 815,360,320.50 acres.

In speaking of the Yellowstone National Park, the Secretary recommends the establishment of a court within the park, with exclusive jurisdiction over all misdemeanors, and with power to examine and to hold to bail in all cases of felonies, to be tried in the nearest court having criminal jurisdiction. The Assistant Superintendents should be authorized to serve any process of such court, and to arrest without process any person taken in the act of violating the law or any regulations. The wholesale slaughter of game in the park has been stopped, and game is increasing. Appropriations are recommended for five Assistant Superintendents to aid in the protection of game and the suppression of vandalism; for a new building for the Superintendent for stables, and for the construction of new roads. The estimated expenses for the next year are $150,000. The reports of the Governors of the various Territories, most of which have already been published, are reviewed.

THE NAVY.

Secretary Whitney's First Report Thereon—He Thinks the Whole System Should Be Reorganized.

Secretary of the Navy Whitney, in his first annual report to the President, says the property of the navy yards, valued at about fifty million dollars, is reported as falling rapidly into a condition of extreme decay, and it is recommended that improvements be made at once unless it be the desire of Congress to abandon the property to waste and ruin. The Secretary reports that excellent progress is being made in the manufacture of steel guns for the new ships, and says that five six-inch and two five-inch breech-loading high-power steel guns have been completed and satisfactorily tested. He also says that the forgings for the eight-inch guns have arrived from England after a year's delay. These are the guns for the Chicago and Boston.

The estimates for the navy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, amount to $35,101,695, in which sum are embraced estimates for new objects, not those ordinarily for the service, amounting to $16,063,955, leaving for the customary purposes of the service $19,034,744. They embrace for increase of the navy $10,5 3,770; for the completion and armament of the double-turreted monitors $4,292,656; and for public works and improvements at the yards and stations $4,288,337.

Mr. Whitney says it is the desire of the department to avoid the long delays which have occurred in the construction of the ships now in progress, arising from the making of changes in the plans after the letting of the work, and continues:

"Upon my accession to office the department had in process of construction, under contract with Mr. John Roach three modern steel cruisers and one dispatch-boat. They constituted the first attempt of the Navy Department for many years to construct a war vessel up to the modern requirements. They should be looked upon and judged as such. As such they will, I trust, be found in the main creditable to those who have been engaged in their creation. They will certainly, if they have been well built, be no improvement upon the previous work of the department, but it is not profitable to consider them as standards of excellence for future work, nor was it to be expected that they would be. It is to be regretted if think all will now accede to this suggestion that greater deliberation was not had over the preparation of the plans. The Dolphin, as she now is, should be regarded as a pleasure-boat rather than as a dispatch-boat. At the present time it is quite profitless to discuss her characteristics."

The Secretary then goes over in detail the circumstances connected with the trial of the Dolphin and the trouble had with her, with which circumstances the public is familiar. The case is still unsettled. He also refers to the Roach trouble.

Mr. Whitney refrains from any discussion of the subject of future appropriations for war material, as Congress has made a most intelligent effort within the last three years to gather information, etc. He says it is important that the navy should be supplied with torpedo-boats. It has none while other nations have many.

He says it must be evident that there is something radically wrong with the department; that the universal dissatisfaction proves this. He thinks the present bureau systems are vicious, and says "at the present moment it must be conceded that we have nothing which deserves to be called a navy." He thinks the United States should pattern after other powerful nations in the matter of naval education and naval improvements—that it is folly to waste time and money patching up wooden hulks. It is his opinion that, as in the English service, and notably in the French and German, the Secretary should be provided with a board or boards for consultation, consisting of naval officers and experts, most of them comparatively free from executive duties, whose duty it should be to assist him in solving the technical problems of the department.

THE ARMY.

Secretary Endicott's First Annual Report of the War Department.

The Secretary of War in his annual report to the President says the expenditures or appropriations by the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, were $45,850,999.51, of which $13,164,394.60 were for public works, including river and harbor improvements. The appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, is $31,762,413.40, of which $2,247,892.31 is for public works. This large reduction as compared with the appropriations of previous years is caused by the failure of Congress to pass the river and harbor bill. The increase of expenditures for 1885 over those of 1884 was mainly for river and harbor improvements. The estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, as received by the Secretary, amounted to $81,782,123.97, which he has reduced to $48,201,184.18, of which sum $15,365,630.18 is recommended for public works, including river and harbor improvements.

The Lieutenant General commanding reports that the army at the date of the last consolidated returns consists of 2,151 officers and 21,705 enlisted men.

Desertions in the army during the past year have greatly diminished, but it is difficult to adjudge an adequate punishment where a man has deserted several times. In a case occurring recently the recruit had previously deserted six times, and the Lieutenant General remarks that, while there were more flagrant cases, this matter ought to be brought to the attention of Congress, in order that a proper punishment might be provided.

With regard to the Signal Service the Secretary says:

"I am unable to concur in the recommendations of the chief signal officer for legislation to provide for the permanent detail of fifty enlisted men from the line of the army for duty on the military telegraph lines; for including the appropriations for the Signal Service in the appropriations for the army; and for the reorganization of the Signal Service corps of officers by appointing a Colonel, Lieutenant Colonel, Major, and eight Captains, and the promotion of Second Lieutenants.

"The duties in which the corps is now engaged are civil, and not military. It performs no military service; its only exercise that is military in its character is the art of military signaling, which, owing to the pressure of meteorological duties, has been neglected in the past, though it is proposed to press the study more vigorously in the future. Nor is this study as pursued in the corps important to the army, which receives, through its own officers, all the necessary instruction. It is evident that the studies and labors of the signal service in the scientific field upon which it has entered will more and more absorb and engross its energies, and it must ultimately become a purely civil organization. It would, therefore, be unwise, with this prospect before us, to provide for its permanent attachment to the army, and to give to it the unbending organization and discipline of a military body. It must depend upon the efforts of men who are engaged in technical study, and any officer who takes part in its work must be valuable for his studious and scientific labor, rather than for his military ability and his soldierly qualities."

THE RED MAN.

Commissioner Atkins Discusses the Indian Problem in His Annual Report.

Gen. J. D. C. Atkins, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, prefaces his report with the statement that "it requires no seer to foretell or foresee the civilization of the Indian race as a result naturally deducible from a knowledge and practice upon their part of the art of agriculture, for the history of agriculture among all people and in all countries intimately connects it with the highest intellectual and moral development of man." He continues: "The increased interest in agriculture manifested since the opening of last spring and the preparation on several reservations for a still increased acreage in farming, are among the hopeful signs of Indian progress and development. This brings me directly to the consideration of the practical policy which, I believe, should be adopted by Congress and the Government in the management of the Indians. It should be industriously and gravely impressed upon them that they must abandon their tribal relations and take lands in severalty as the corner-stone of their complete success in agriculture, which means self-support, personal independence, and material thrift. The Government should, however, in order to protect them, retain the right to their land, in trust, for twenty-five years or longer, but issue trust patents at once to such Indians as have taken individual holdings.

"When the Indians have taken their lands in severalty in sufficient quantities (and the number of acres in each holding may and should vary in different localities, according to fertility, productiveness, climatic and other advantages), then having due regard to the immediate and future early needs of the Indians, the remaining lands of their reservations should be purchased by the Government and opened to homestead entry at 50 or 75 cents per acre. The money paid by the Government for their lands should be held in trust in 5 per cent. bonds, to be invested, as Congress may provide, for the education, civilization, and material development and advance of the red race, reserving for each tribe its own money. There are in the United States, exclusive of Alaska, 250,000 Indian souls; of that number there are in the five civilized tribes in the Indian Territory 64,000. There are in New York, 4,970; in North Carolina, 3,100; and there are some in Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Wisconsin, and Minnesota, and a few in California and the Northwest who are civilized, and still others who can lay claim to civilization. Many others on the reservations have cast off the blanket and are adopting the fashions and dress of white people, but among all these, except among the Indians of New York and North Carolina, a few in the Northwestern States, and a part of the five civilized tribes in the Indian Territory, there is a very large number who do not till the soil. Nearly all who are called 'The Blanket Indians' have never tilled the soil to any extent, and fully half of the Indians of the United States, exclusive of Alaska, as yet have declined to commit themselves to the life of the farmer. Exclusive of the lands cultivated by the five civilized tribes, the number of acres in cultivation by Indians during the year number 248,241, an increase of 18,473 since last year's figures."

SECRETARY MANNING'S REPORT.

He Urges a Cessation of Silver Coinage—Other Recommendations.

The report of Secretary of the Treasury Manning is a pamphlet of more than a hundred pages. Its statistical features are well summarized in the President's Message. The Secretary treats at great length of the silver question, and concludes that the disorders of the currency may be perfectly remedied without shock to business interests by the repeal of the clause requiring the treasury purchases of silver bullion, and the repeal of the act making compulsory treasury issues and reissues of the legal-tender notes. A cessation of the coinage of the silver dollar is strongly urged. The recommendations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as to an amendment to the bonded whisky law which shall postpone the collection of the tax, under certain conditions, until withdrawn for consumption; as to the abolition of the office of Inspector of Tobacco; as to the exportation of tobacco under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner, and as to the taxation of fractional parts of the gallon of distilled spirits, are approved.

It is recommended that the immigration law be so amended that all commissions or officers, to be charged with the care of immigrants at the several ports, be appointed directly by the Secretary of the Treasury.

A special report is made on the evils arising out of tariff duties, such as false invoices, extortionate consular fees, and bribes given and received at the port of entry, in closing which the Secretary says: "The law which denounces those acts as crimes or offenses to be punished ought not to be a dead letter, as it is now. But the real difficulty is, I fear, in the fact that so large a portion of the people of the country disapprove of the present tariff rates, and would condemn any adequate punitive and deterrent legislation, like that of 1799 and 1863, intended to uphold those tariff rates, or would only support such legislation because obedience to all law is, among right-minded people, a general obligation. But yet, if the existing rates of duty are to stand, and if those compound rates wherein even specific rates depend on foreign values are hereafter to be inflicted, there will be need, I think, of new deterrent legislation which will more surely and swiftly imperil the property in which foreign manufacturers and shippers seek to evade payment of duty which they know the law imposes, and which duties those who present truthful invoices must pay, since the collectors cannot levy ad valorem rates on less than the invoice or entered value."

THE PUBLIC DOMAIN.

Annual Report of Mr. Sparks, Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The annual report of Hon. William A. J. Sparks, Commissioner of the General Land Office, states that during the last fiscal year the sales, entries and selections of public land under various acts of Congress relating thereto embrace 24,113,663.37 acres, and of Indian lands 881,840.21 acres, making a total of 20,995,513.58 acres, being an increase, as compared with the year 1884, of 8,535,556.11 acres, and an increase over the year 1883 of 1,562,484.78 acres. The receipts from the disposals of public lands are $7,686,114.80; from sales of Indian lands, $933,483.52; a total of $8,619,598.32, being a decrease, as compared with the year 1884, of $4,151,532.01, and with 1883 of $3,086,167.33, to which is to be added $8,821.86 for certified copies of records furnished by the General Land Office, making the total receipts for the year from all sources $8,628,420.18.

Surveys have been extended during the last five years far beyond the needs of legitimate occupation of the soil. Nearly the whole of the Territory of Wyoming and large portions of Montana have been surveyed under the deposit system, and the lands on the streams fraudulently taken up under the desert-land act, to the exclusion of future settlers desiring homes in these Territories. Nearly all of Colorado, the choicest cattle-raising portions of New Mexico, the accessible timber lands of California, largely the forests of Washington Territory, and the principal part of the pine lands of Minnesota are already surveyed, and in all the Western land States and Territories the surveys have anticipated actual populations for years to come. To enable the pressing tide of Western immigration to secure homes upon the public domain it is necessary, not that further surveys should be hastened, but that the hundreds of millions of acres of public lands now unlawfully appropriated should be wrested from illegal control.

The Commissioner reports that ninety-eight land claims, founded on Spanish and Mexican grants, are pending, covering 8,500,000 acres, which are based upon the reports of Surveyor Generals, and not scrutinized in the land office. He recommends that no such claims should be confirmed without examination by the office, and in the field, and that as thirty years have elapsed since the passage of the act under which the claims are presented, an act should be passed limiting the time for such prosecution to one year.

Grants have been made to aid in the construction of 10,129 miles of road, of which 7,098 miles have not yet been completed. Of the lands granted 11,923,491 acres have been patented, leaving 100,000,000 acres of unpatented lands included in all the grants subject to forfeiture, an area equal to that of the combined States of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland and Virginia. The right of the Government thereto being a legal one, the default of the companies being voluntary, the power of Congress to declare a forfeiture should be exercised.

The Commissioner, referring to alleged fraudulent land entries in regions dominated by the cattle companies, says that he has suspended the issue of patents thereon until a full examination of the bona fide character of the applications can be made. He suggests the repeal of the pre-emption system, of commuted homesteads, of the timber-culture law, of the desert-land act, and of all general provisions of law authorizing sales of land for cash, and restricting the sale to the actual settler, because they offer covers for fraudulent transactions. The Commissioner recommends the abolition of the fee system in the registry offices, and that measures be taken to preserve the forests on the public domain.

LAND-GRANT ROADS.

Points from the Annual Report of the Commissioner of Railroads.

The report of the Commissioner of Railroads shows that the sinking funds of the Union and Central Pacific Railroad Companies, held by the Treasurer of the United States under the act of May 7, 1878, amounted to $8,560,807. On June 30, 1885, the Union Pacific had to its credit $5,523,343, and the Central Pacific $3,038,163. The premiums paid on account of investments for the Union Pacific amounted to $850,731, while the interest on its sinking-fund investments amounted to $210,558. In the seven years since 1878 only the sum of $8,560,847 has been paid into the sinking fund, which has produced in interest but $137,524. This proves, in the Commissioner's opinion, that the law of 1878 can not accomplish the object intended, that of furnishing a sum sufficient to pay debts due from the Pacific Railroad Companies to the United States. It is therefore suggested that it might be alike advantageous to the Government and to the companies to substitute for the present law one fixing an annual or semi-annual payment by the companies concerned, which should extinguish their debts to the Government in a reasonable time as proposed by the two bills introduced in the Senate last year by Senator Hoar.

The total debt of the railroad companies on Jan. 30, 1885, was $131,600,426, made up as follows:

Union Pacific (including Kansas Pacific):
Principal	$33,539,512
Accrued interest	35,111,924
Total debt	$68,651,436
Central Pacific (including Western Pacific):
Principal	$27,855,680
Accrued interest	28,463,485
Total debt	$56,319,165
Sioux City and Pacific—
Principal	1,628,320
Accrued interest	1,659,625
Total	$3,288,005
Central branch, Union Pacific—
Principal	1,661,000
Accrued interest	1,741,806
Total	$3,341,818

The total credits were $28,273,001, made up as follows:

Union Pacific	$8,830,288
Sioux City and Pacific	178,659
Central branch, Union Pacific	2,366,673

The balance in favor of the United States, but not due until maturity of the principal, is $102,627,425, made up as follows:

Due from Union Pacific	$48,914,056
From Central Pacific	44,488,877
From Sioux City and Pacific	43,109,356
From Central branch, Union Pacific	3,115,134

The excess of interest paid by the United States after crediting the amounts reimbursed by the several companies was as follows: Paid on account of Union Pacific, $35,116,924; on account of Central Pacific, 28,463,485; on account of Sioux City and Pacific, $1,659,625; on account of Central Branch Union Pacific, $1,741,810; total, $86,976,912, which, after deducting credits, leaves the excess of interest paid by the United States, $34,605,911. The Commissioner criticises the mode of keeping the accounts of the Kansas Pacific Railroad Company, saying that they do not give any approximation to the actual net earnings of its "unaided" part, 5 per cent. of which is due to the Government, and that the Government has been receiving far less than its due.

The Commissioner points to the fact that more than $20,000,000 credited to the Pacific roads now lies idle in the Treasury, a judicious investment of which would be of great benefit to those concerned. He therefore recommends that the attention of Congress be called to the matter. He also suggests that the Kansas Pacific, Sioux City and Pacific, and Central branches of the Union Pacific be included in the provisions of the law of May 7, 1878, creating sinking funds for the Pacific roads.

A MOST FIENDISH PLOT.

Discovery of a Scheme in San Francisco to Kill Off Many Leading Men.

Judges, Congressmen, Capitalists, and Public Officials to Be Dynamited to Death.

San Francisco dispatch.

One of the most sensational and startling plots for wholesale assassination of the most prominent men in this city came to light here to-night. Some time ago the police obtained information of the existence of an organization called "The Socialistic Revolutionary Association," which, it was asserted, was comprised of ultra-socialistic members. A close watch was kept on their movements, and the police finally succeeded in obtaining the minutes of one of their meetings, held Nov. 23.

From these facts it was discovered that it was the intention of the association to put out of the way about twenty men, including W. T. Coleman, Congressman W. W. Morrow, Gen. W. H. L. Barnes, Mayor Bartlett, United States Judge Lorenzo Sawyer, Leland Stanford, Charles Crocker, Gov. Stoneman, the principal police officials, and several others. These names were placed on the "prospective list" and placed in the hands of the Executive Committee to carry out the orders of the association.

The committee were to devise the best mode of accomplishing the ends of the base plot, and were thus engaged when their work was brought to a sudden termination to-night by the discovery of the association's headquarters at No. 900 Montgomery avenue, by the police, and the arrest of four men found therein, named Julius C. Kessler, Henry Weiseman, Charles Mittelstadt, and Oscar Eggers. In the room were also found complete laboratory for the manufacture of infernal machines. The men were taken to the city prison, when they boldly asserted they were dynamiters, and proposed to get rid of the citizens named, and then raze Chinatown. The prisoners also belong to the German branch of the Anti-Coolie League. No charge has yet been entered against the prisoners. Further developments are expected.

WILLIAM H. VANDERBILT.

A Sketch of the Recently Deceased Millionaire.

The late William H. Vanderbilt was born in New Brunswick, N. J., May 8, 1821. His father, at the time of his birth, was owner and in command of a steamboat running to New York. The family soon removed to New York City, where, and in Staten Island, William attended the public schools, finishing his education at the Columbia Grammar School. At 18 he entered as a clerk the house of Drew, Robinson & Co., a leading firm of bankers and stockbrokers. At the end of two years his business aptitude was so great that the firm offered him a junior partnership. Remaining until two years thereafter, his health failed him in consequence of close application. He then purchased seventy-five acres of land on Staten Island, which was soon increased to 350, and went to work farming. During the first years of this activity he was chosen receiver of the Staten Island Railroad, and after two years of hard work, having restored its finances to a sound condition, he was elected its President. His father was a large stockholder in this road, but, as is well understood, lent no adventitious aid to his elder son's career. After a few years of hard work on his farm and in the railroad office, Mr. Vanderbilt went to Europe, in consequence of the precarious condition of his brother George's health. He remained with him until his death, a period of several months, when he returned to Staten Island and his farm, not engaging any further in railroad administration until 1864, when he became, by his father's desire and the election of the corporation, Vice President of the New York and Harlem Railroad. He married in 1841 Miss Kissam, daughter of a well-known Brooklyn physician, by whom he had eight children, four boys and four girls. After assuming executive control of the Harlem he was, in 1865, elected Vice President of the New York and Hudson River Railroad. During the five years that followed his entrance into railroad affairs Mr. Vanderbilt was probably the hardest working executive in the country. He made himself familiar with every detail of administration, personally examining each mile of the great system under his charge and becoming acquainted with the nature of every man's duties, and work, and wages, and the relations they bore to all others employed by the corporations he controlled. Competent critics claim that he lifted the burdens of administration from his father's shoulders, and became by the date of the consolidation of the three New York lines under the Vanderbilt hand into one complete trunk line system between New York and Buffalo, which was brought about in 1869, one of the best informed and most capable railway executives in the land.

A HORROR IN GEORGIA.

A Sleeping-Car Telescoped by a Locomotive and Twelve of the Inmates Scalded to Death.

Four Others Fatally and Ten Seriously Injured—Heart-Rending Scenes at the Wreck.

Atlanta (Ga.) telegram.

A frightful collision occurred on the Georgia Pacific Railroad, about fifteen miles from Atlanta. Thirteen lives were lost, and three persons were so badly injured that it is thought death will result.

The East Tennessee and Georgia Pacific Roads use the same track from Atlanta to Austell, where they diverge, one going west and the other north. They, however, leave the city from different depots and meet just at the city limits, and from there they both use the same track to Austell. Just one mile east of Austell, toward Atlanta, is a water-tank used by the Georgia Pacific. The night passenger train of the Georgia Pacific leaves here at 10 o'clock and the East Tennessee train leaves at 10:45 o'clock. Last night, however, the Georgia Pacific was somewhat delayed, and when it stopped at the water-tank it was on the East Tennessee time. The East Tennessee passenger train came flying around a curve near the water-tank, and, without a moment's warning, went crashing into the rear of the Georgia Pacific train. Engineer Owen and the fireman of the East Tennessee train saw the Georgia Pacific train, but too late to avoid a collision. The fireman jumped. The engineer remained at his post, reversing the engine and applying the brakes. He escaped without serious injury, while the fireman is supposed to be fatally hurt. The engine tore its way into the rear of the coach, and the rear coach telescoped the one in front of it, which was forced into the one ahead of that again. The rear coach was filled with passengers, many of whom were so pinned down by the wreck that they were unable to stir, and the escaping steam soon caused the death of five or six.

As soon as possible the East Tennessee train was backed from the wreck and the work of removing the dead and wounded began. The killed are: Bernard Peyton, attorney for the Georgia Pacific, of Birmingham, Ala.; Nathan Stanley, of Anniston, Ala.; E. Y. Hnie, of East Point, Ga.; J. W. Pierce, of Texas; Jake and Mary Banks, of Fairburn, Ga., and their baby, who died in its mother's arms; C. W. Belton, bound for El Paso, Texas; two little children, one a baby, belonging to Mr. Bright; Mrs. Jane Eliza Brown, Cleveland County, Ala.; B. Bright, of Fairburn, Ga.; Mrs. Carrie Bright, Fairburn, Ga.

The blame for the accident cannot be yet placed, and an investigation will be necessary. The East Tennessee conductor says that he was on his time and following the schedule and his directions. The Georgia Pacific conductor says that he had no official knowledge of the night passenger train of the East Tennessee, and ran out as he had always done. The Coroner's inquest has been going on all day. In the examination Dr. Roy, surgeon of the Georgia Pacific, said that when he arrived on the scene the engine had telescoped the sleeping coach, passing through the entire length of the car. Water and steam from the boiler gushed through and flooded the whole train. According to his examination not a single fatality occurred from external injuries, but all met their deaths from scalding or inhalation of steam.

ROBERT TOOMBS DEAD.

The Famous Georgian Passes Away at an Advanced Age, After a Long Illness.

A dispatch from Athens, Ga., announces the death, at the advanced age of 76 years, of Robert Toombs, the noted Southern statesman and irreconcilable. He had been ill for some time, and his demise was not unexpected. The deceased was born in Wilkes County, Georgia, July 2, 1810. His father died before he was 5 years old. He was educated by an old Scotchman until he was 15, and then, well prepared for college, he went to the University of Georgia, then Franklin College. He was a handsome, wealthy, rollicksome youth, and got into some trouble with the faculty, and left Athens for Union College at Schenectady, N. Y., where he graduated at 18. He then went to the University of Virginia, studied law, and, returning to his home, was admitted to the bar when he was not 21 years old. Not long after he married and settled in the town of Washington. He was very successful in his profession, before he was 33 years of age having made $150,000 in fees and profits, his income being $20,000 per annum at least for several years. In the Creek Indian war of 1836 he was a captain of volunteers under Gen. Scott. When he was twenty-seven years of age—in 1837—he was elected to the lower house of the Legislature. Then commenced a political career unequaled in Georgia for brilliancy. He served two terms in the Legislature, eight years in the lower house of Congress, and in 1853 was elected to the United States Senate. He was re-elected to the Senate in 1859, but resigned his seat in 1861, when Georgia seceded from the Union. Mr. Toombs was one of the most striking figures in national politics during the exciting period immediately preceding the civil war. Intellectually he was one of the strongest of the Southern leaders at that time—perhaps the strongest—and certainly none of them exerted more influence on the public sentiment of their section or did more to bring about the secession movement than he. Ardent and impetuous in his temperament, Mr. Toombs was inevitably the extreme partisan of every cause with which he identified himself. From early youth he was a firm believer in the State sovereignty and nullification doctrines expounded by John C. Calhoun, and he never shrank from following them to their logical conclusions. Slavery found in him one of its most courageous and eloquent defenders, and he hailed with enthusiasm its recognition as the corner-stone of the new confederacy. He took an active part in the war: resigning a position in Mr. Davis' cabinet at an early date to enter the army. After the war he fled to Europe to avoid a prosecution for treason, soon after returning to his native State, where he lived in retirement until his death. He never became reconciled to the new order of things, and refused to petition for a removal of his disabilities, or to have anything further to do with political matters.

Special Correspondence.

The U. S. Museum has just been made the recipient of Dr. C. V. Riley's extensive private collection of North American insects. Dr. Riley is entomologist of the department of agriculture and honorary curator of insects in the National Museum. He has been twenty-five years in making the collection, which represents over 20,000 species. There are 115,000 pinned specimens and many others preserved in alcohol and by different methods. The collection is said to be worth $25,000 in cash. The doctor donates it to the museum.

Senator and Mrs. Conger are comfortably domiciled in their elegant residence at 1321 M street N. W. Mrs. C. will not keep open house until after the holidays, as she believes the thirty-days mourning over the death of vice president Hendricks should be observed by society as well as by public officials.

Under a democratic administration the clerks in the treasury department are finding a new order of things. They are required to be at their posts promptly on time in the morning and and to remain on duty until the department closes in the evening. Even a fraction of a minute's tardiness is not overlooked but meets with prompt attention and a sharp reprimand unless a valid excuse is offered.

Christmas clubs are the order of the day. The good people of the city are making an organized canvas to provide suitable observance of the day among the poorer classes. Presents for the children and a feast of eatables for old and young are to be the main features. The "C. C. C." (Children's Christmas Club) numbers several hundred members, from five to twelve years of age. They wear a badge and are among the most active workers in the good cause.

During the late Virginia campaign John Sherman and Gen. Logan, the great bloody-shirt orators of the republican party, had much to say about the "treason-stained saddle" used by Gen. Fitz Lee, democratic candidate for governor, charging that it was paraded with pride as a relic of the rebellion and everywhere greeted with cheers by the unrepentant confederates, having been during the war the property of the rebel general, Robert E. Lee. It now transpires that Gen. Fitz Lee used some fifty different saddles during the campaign, not one of which was ever seen by Gen. R. E. Lee. Thus another republican slander is prepared for burial.

A lively discussion is being indulged in by members of congress over the proposed new rules. No business of importance will be transacted in the house until this vexed question is settled. In fact, it is generally conceded that very little business will be accomplished in either house until after the holiday recess.

The National Guard association of the United States, an organization in the interest of the militin of the several states, closed an important session after the election of officers today. Steps were taken to present a request to congress for an annual appropriation of one million dollars, "for the purpose of providing ordnance and ordnance stores, quartermaster stores, and camp equipage for issue to the militia." The delegates made a formal call (by appointment) upon the president to-day and were very cordially received. In fact it is understood that the president receives all callers very cordially—except office-seekers.

The government receipts for the lost three days are: Internal revenue, $1,087,788.63. Customs, $1,769,776.27. A total of $2,857,564.90.

A long list of appointments have been sent to the senate by President Cleveland, most of them having been made during the recess, and have been referred to the proper committees. It is understood that senators will not antagonize the president's actions on political grounds, but that all appointments sent in by him will be considered solely on their merits.

The name of E. C. Henderson, of Indiana is being pressed by his friends for the position of third assistant postmaster general. He has the support of the solid delegation from his state in addition to that of several influential eastern members. His prospects look very flattering.

Notes and News.

Commissioner of Patents M. V. Montgomery and wife returned to Lansing on Monday. They expect to remain in Michigan about three weeks. The trial of Henry Holcomb on the charge of perjury begins at Hillsdale next Monday and Mr. Montgomery will go there to conduct the defence. He is in remarkably good health, and says that he is well pleased with his official duties at the national capitol. The records of the patent office show that Mr. Montgomery has brought the working of the department up to a very flattering degree of efficiency, and he has won deserved credit in his high position as his friends knew he would. He speaks in the warmest terms of Mr. Cleveland's devotion to the public interests, and believes that he will go down in history as one of the wisest and most patriotic of American Presidents.

The Cadillac Democrat has it from competent authority that the proposed curtailment of the log cut will not go into effect, but if the weather holds as it is, the present will be the heaviest season for a long time. The upper Manistee and the branches of the Muskegon will see more logging than in years before. The shortage in the finished product among the railroad mills, which were idle last winter, will be made up by spring.

We give this week another excellent letter from Washington. After the holiday recess, these letters will be a regular feature of the JOURNAL, and will discuss important topics truthfully and with a vigor that can never be obtained from the republican associated press reports. We shall be glad to give the address of the writer to any of our brethren of the press who desire letters from the same source.

We regret to see a discussion on the part of Charlevoix county papers to indulge in acrimonious, uncivil and unchristian language toward each other. Don't, boys! "The Smiths" is the name of a neatly printed periodical devoted to the doings and genealogical records of the numerous family of the Smiths. It is published at Richmond, Mich., and is a bright and well-edited publication. No person bearing the name of Smith can afford to keep house without it.

The prospectus of the Detroit Journal may be found in another column. In all respects except its politics the Journal is a good newspaper, but it is clean cut republican, notwithstanding its protestations of independence, and as such we endorse it to those wanting a Detroit afternoon republican paper.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the condition of a certain mortgage, made by Mary Blackbird to John A. Bacot, dated October 3d, A. D. 1884, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, on the 3d day of October, A. D. 1884, in liber 8 of mortgages, on page 522, which said mortgage was on the 22d day of December, 1884, assigned by said John A. Bacot to Frederick W. Mayne, said assignment being on record in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 10 of mortgages on page 610, and on the 14th day of December 1885, was assigned by said Frederick W. Mayne to Hugh Miller, said assignment being recorded in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 13 of mortgages, on page 146, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of One hundred and ninety six and 15-100 dollars, as principal and interest, and no suit or proceedings at law having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof. Now, therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and the statute in such case made and provided, notice is hereby given that on Saturday, the 13th day of March, A. D. 1886, at one o'clock in the afternoon, I shall sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the town hall in the village of East Jordan, (that being the place where the Circuit Court for Charlevoix County is holden,) the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with ten per cent interest, and all legal costs, together with an attorney's fee of fifteen dollars, covenanted for therein, the premises being described in said mortgage as all that parcel of land, situate in the township of Hayes, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, and known and described as follows: The south west quarter (¼) of the south west quarter (¼) of section thirty-six (36) township thirty four (34) north of range seven (7) west, containing forty acres according to the United States survey.

BUTTER AND EGGS WANTED

SCIPIO'S OVER-ZEAL;

—OR,—

A Hitch in a Honeymoon.

BY NATHAN D. TURNER.

"Are you quite sure we shall not appear like a newly married couple, dear?" whispered Eudocia, drawing a little closer as I at last apprised her that the next station, thirty miles distant, was our destination.

"Certainly, my love," I replied. "Not only is Scipio sure to have performed his mission discreetly, but just cast your eyes around the car. I would wager that not one of our fellow passengers suspects our secret."

"True; but is Scipio to be trusted? I can not but recall the instances you have often laughingly recounted of his excessive and even mistaken zeal in carrying out your wishes."

"To be sure; but those were instances in which his instructions were of a complex nature. Now he is merely to apprise my housekeeper of our coming, get the house ready, throw out a number of hints that we have been married several years, instead of several weeks, and, our arrival in the gossipy little town need excite no more comment than that of any tinant couple after a foreign jaunt of a year or two."

"Then I shall be satisfied," murmured Eudocia, sinking back in her seat with the refined composure of manner that so well became her.

A few lines will suffice to explain the situation.

Soon after returning from our brief wedding-tour we had decided to locate our family altar in Tattleton, my native village, which I had deserted about three years before to carry out a varied programme of travel, which had at last, as unexpectedly as happily, landed me in the arms of the one fair creature of my dreams. We were agreeably harmonious on one point especially. We both felt that shrinking dislike of attracting attention to our changed condition which is, perhaps, the natural accompaniment of sensitive and æsthetic persons upon approximating to middle age; for, if I was no longer young, neither could it be veraciously averred (behind her back) that Eudocia was any longer a chicken, though still, in my eyes, the embodiment of mellowed loveliness and womanly worth. She heartily shared, at all events, in my dread of the village criticism upon our newly married state. Indeed it was half upon her suggestion that Scipio, my old and trusted body-servant, had been dispatched to Tattleton beforehand, in the manner and for the purpose alluded to.

"Now, above all, Scipio," had been my last words at parting with him, "be discreet, be circumspect! You have your instructions. If you carry them out properly, you may look for a new suit of clothes on your birthday."

"Fore de Lord, Marse Addersley, I'se got it down fine!" he had earnestly replied. "None of dem busybodies in de ole town shall eben 'spect us how you hab jist come from de honeymoon. Jist leabe it to de ole man."

So it had been "left to de ole man" accordingly.

Scipio had a carriage in waiting at the station, and, as we passed along the crowded platform, he gave me a significant nod and leer, as much as to say that all had been agreeably arranged.

Still my wife was not satisfied.

"Theophilus," she whispered, pressing my arm, "something is wrong. I am sure some of the men here are staring at us quite rudely."

"Nonsense! All your imagination, my dove!" I replied, reassuringly, though secretly remarking something of the kind myself.

We were just seated in the coach when Deacon Stickler, accompanied by his wife, drove up to the station. The Sticklers were of considerable consequence in the place, and I lost no time in presenting Eudocia.

To my surprise and mortification, the Deacon—who had known my father before me, and had always been very friendly—acknowledged the honor by the stiffest of bows, while his good lady fairly transfixed my bride through her spectacles, and barely offered her any recognition whatever.

"Ah, indeed!" hemmed and hawed the Deacon; "Mrs. Addersly, you say? Unexpected pleasure—quite honored, I am sure!" And away drove the Sticklers, leaving Eudocia and me indignant and mystified respectively, as we also took the road.

I was trying to muster sufficient courage to meet Eudocia's stare of resentful inquiry, when whom should we meet just beyond the bridge but the Misses Trumbletry, the rich old maids, whose ground adjoined my own, and I seized the opportunity to twist my head out of the window, and order a halt.

It then struck me that the worthy spinsters—usually the kindliest of women—submitted to the stoppage with ill-disguised reluctance. Indeed, I had no sooner presented Eudocia than they recoiled shiveringly, as though encountering an iceberg. Then, with a faintly murmured "Most delighted to know Mrs. Addersly!" they at once ignored her altogether, and began to overwhelm me with stereotyped questions about my travels.

I was feeling my way out of the dilemma as best I could, when Eudocia almost screamed out: "Scipio, tell the coachman to drive on! I'm tired of this sort of thing!"

The coachman whipped up at once, and I saw the fossils exchange significant glances as we left them on the road.

Eudocia was lying back in her seat, with her teeth on edge and a slumbering fire in her fine eyes.

"Well, Theophilus?"

"Don't mind them, my dear," I responded, a little huskily. "Wretched, inflated, stuck-up old maids! They're entirely beneath your notice!"

"Ah! but how about the Sticklers, then? I've heard you vaunt them as prominent persons in this lovely village of yours," said Eudocia, in an abruptly metallic voice that actually rang in my ears like a fire-bell.

"I don't know what to make of it all!" I exclaimed. "Really—by Jove! I think I shall call the Deacon to an account."

"Perhaps, you will call the whole town to an account, then!" she cried, with positive fierceness. "Look!"

As I followed the direction of her pointing finger, I perceived that we had entered the village main street, and the sight that presented itself well-nigh appalled me.

Every door and every window had a head in it, and every head a pair of eyes that fairly gorgonized us with the species of remorseless criticism which is usually elicited by a prisoners' van or a traveling menagerie. tavern-porch and shop-entrances were thronged with gazers. Urchins, rosy and round-eyed, stared at us from the gates and fence-tops. Nurse-girls halted their perambulators on the sidewalks to give us the benefit of their gaping attention. I doubt if a "barking cur" could have made our cheeks flame any more pronouncedly than they did at that moment, but I am quite certain that, if there had chanced to be any "fantastic gables" within gun-shot, they, too, would have, "crowding, stared."

Even a faint cheer—or something worse—was bestowed on us as we rolled by the hotel.

"Your paragon of a servant has probably advertised us as pardoned convicts," commented Eudocia, returning glare for glare in the most creditable manner, considering the odds against her, and then sinking back, her iron nerve broke down in a sort of piteous wail. "They not only know we are newly married," she sobbed, "but very likely suppose we have just eloped from somewhere."

I did not know what to do. I was almost beside myself. I could only sit helplessly by her side, confused, crushed, perplexed, and eaten up with rage, while my hand had such a convulsive itching to be on Scipio's throat that I felt like a murderer.

On reaching the house, I hurried Eudocia within, hastily threw her in old Mrs. Gimp's protection, and then rushed once more into the open air to seek an explanation of Scipio.

But he had caught the alarm and was nowhere to be found.

The coachman was taking off the trunks unaided.

"I dunno what got into Scip, sir," he replied to my rather vehement inquiries. "He sort o' growed uneasy ez soon ez we was focused by the big targetin' ez was awaiting fur us in the town, and the minute we stopped he broke fur the stables ez if shot out of a gun."

"Ah! Then have you any idea, Jake, of the occasion of the—the rather inordinate curiosity excited by our arrival here?"

"I rather fancy," he stammered, while scratching his head, "ez how it's all along o' the leddy, sir."

"So! But does my wife bear any resemblance to a wild animal, that she should thus be stared out of countenance?" I cried.

"Your wife?"

"Why, certainly! Whom else should she be?" I roared, thoroughly exasperated. "What in thunder do you mean?"

"I hain't said ez how I meant nothin' outen the common run," was the rather sullen rejoinder; and Jake remounted his box and drove away.

I ran to the stables, but Scipio was too firm an advocate of self-preservation to be found there.

Returning to the house, my wife was invisible, and I was met in the entry by my housekeeper.

Mrs. Gimp was a sort of ninety-second cousin or aunt of mine, and one of those piously resigned, devoutly miserable, good old souls who seem to be continually evoking a vast amount of secretly hoarded spiritual resource to sustain them against imaginary trials. Three years had passed since we had parted, but she met me with the old-time, watery-eyed, voiceless woe, as though I had said good-by but the day before.

However, I complimented her on her good looks, adding that I was overjoyed at being home once more, and then asked if my wife was up-stairs.

"Your wife!" she echoed, with a wild, startled expression.

"Why, my good woman, whom else, in heaven's name, should she be?" I cried. "Have you taken leave of your senses, Mrs. Gimp?"

Her only answer was to point mournfully up the staircase, and then sit down beside the hat-rack, throw her apron over her head, and indulge in a few sniffling little sobs.

Not knowing what to make of it, I ran up the stairs, and, entering the front chamber, found my wife.

She had taken off her hat and gloves, and was sitting at a window in statuesque despair. But her cheeks glowed, her eyes snapped, and her lips wore the sneer direct, as she slowly turned to meet my gaze.

"Well, Theophilus, what does it all mean!"

There was a sepulchral quietude in her voice, but her foot was beating the tattoo upon the carpet which I knew by experience to presage a storm.

"I'll swear I don't know!" I exclaimed, flinging myself in a chair, and doggedly thrusting my hands in my pocket. "Spare me your conundrums, Eudocia, or ask me something easy. I feel as mean as you possibly can yourself."

She had, doubtless, expected something palliatory, and braced herself accordingly, but my undisguised disconsolateness so far disarmed her that she burst into tears.

"Take me away!" she sobbed. "Let me fly from this horrible place! I see how it is; they think I am not good enough for you. I might have foreseen this result from your marrying a dowerless girl like me!" (Poor thing! the census-taker had notched her at thirty-eight, and she had a married grand-niece of twenty odd.) "If I had only my artless beauty and my innocent heart to offer you, was it my fault? Take me away, oh, take me away!"

"By Jupiter! I'll do nothing of the sort," I cried, taking her in my arms. "Not good enough, you say? Why, there's not one of 'em, man or woman, fit to button your gaiters! We will brave it out together, my precious. That villain, Scipio, has made some outrageous blunder!"

"No, no; they think me unworthy—that is it!" she persisted. "Even in your own house—even the old woman here——"

"Ha! What next?" I interrupted. "What has Mrs. Gimp been doing?"

"Doing? Why, she—she showed me to—to this apartment as my room, saying that yo-yo-yours would be ready for you by bed-time. Then, when I hinted that we were in the habit of sleeping—I mean, of occupying the same room, she gave a sort of scream, and I thought she was going to faint. But perhaps it is one of the customs of the country; perhaps married folks occupy separate houses, as well as separate rooms. Who knows?"

"Perhaps they do nothing of the kind!" I cried. "What the deuce! is the old woman gone moon-struck?"

We were here interrupted by a knock at the door, and the female hoodlum who had been engaged by us as a waitress and chambermaid noisily intruded herself, grinning from ear to ear, to inform us that Miss Pryer had called to pay her respects.

Eudocia at first refused to go down-stairs, but, upon my representing that our visitor was the chief milliner, as well as the most unconscionable gossip of the place, she finally consented, perhaps, more out of curiosity than anything else.

We received Miss Pryer with considerable ceremony. After mercilessly scrutinizing my wife, she all at once struck up a conversation upon topics which I had never known her to evince any interest in before. She grew scientific, socialistic and æsthetic all in a breath, and at last let us know that she had been deeply interested of late in the subject of philosophical marriages.

Wholly at a loss to understand her drift, I sat smiling vapidly, while Eudocia, evidently setting her visitor down as a garrulous sort of lunatic permitted to "go at large," merely listened to her with pitying forbearance.

At last the little milliner, in a sudden impulse of friendliness, caught her by the hand, saying, half-confidentially:

"Oh, you dear, brave creature! I feel so proud to meet a really true, lofty-minded woman like you, who can afford and dare—ay, dare!—to follow the example of Heloise, Sappho, Madame Recamier, George Sand, Marian Evans, and others of the great ones of the past, in living boldly and openly with the man you love, regardless of the straight-laced opinions of a puny-brained, narrow-hearted, bloodless and unsympathetic Social Despotism! Oh, you must be as brave as a lion—as grand and noble as Hypatia herself—or as Cleopatra, Zenobia, or any of the rest of 'em!"

"You must excuse me, madame," said my wife, coldly, "if I intimate that I don't know what you are talking about."

"Capital!" cried Miss Pryer, clapping her hands. "You view it from the sublimest standpoint! You refuse to accept pure, for simply following the dictates of your courageous, untrammeled heart!

"Not at all!" said Eudocia. "I do not see that I am following any specially illustrious examples, or necessarily bidding defiance to society, in living boldly and openly with the man I love, when that man happens to be my husband."

"Better and better! The true Platonic spirit! But don't despair in your valorous departure from the time-honored, miserable custom that has so degraded and enslaved our sex. You will have me for a friend—a secret friend, at least—in the death-grapple you have inaugurated."

My wife was so surprised as not to be able to frame a reply before our eccentric visitor bowed herself out of the room. But Miss Pryer came running back in a moment to say, in a loud whisper, that, besides her stock of the sweetest things constantly on hand, she could get up anything "strong-minded" to order, from a regular Bloomer costume or divided skirt to the latest thing in vogue in intellectual circles; after which she danced out again.

"What can she mean?" cried my wife.

I shook my head despondingly, while the murderous itching again crept into my hand as the ebon image of Scipio flitted across my mind.

"At all events, I trust we are not to have any more such visitors thrust upon us," said Eudocia.

"One more is sure to come," said I, dolefully. "Old Saurian, the savant, will hardly skip us."

My words were prophetic. At that instant there was a ring at the door-bell; and then Mr. Saurian himself was ushered in.

He was an odd old genius, who had been a particular friend of my father's, and had always taken an interest in myself.

He at once bowed very impressively to my wife, and then, taking me solemnly by the hand, said in his peculiarly funereal voice:

"My dear boy, so you have come into our ranks at last! So you, too, are about to enter upon a career of defiance against the orthodoxy of the age! Gad? I am glad of it. Let me congratulate you upon having obtained so fair a partner in the life-long struggle that looms up before you both." Another bow to Eudocia. "Courage, my children, and you shall not fail!"

"I am sure both my wife and I are most grateful for your good wishes, Mr. Saurian," said I. "I even trust that you will not deem our total inability to comprehend your language any bar to our appreciation of your goodness of heart."

"Ah, indeed! Perhaps, as you are now upon the battle field for liberal ideas, you are right in not wishing to have the philosophy of your mutual relations more openly discussed at present," said he, with an owlish smile of occult significance. "But I will dine with you to-morrow, if agreeable, and then we may be able to understand each other better."

I conceived a sudden idea, and acted upon it.

"We intend giving a dinner party to-morrow to all my old friends," said I, rubbing my hands, and investing my voice and manner with as much geniality as I could. "Of course, such a gathering would be incomplete without the presence of my father's old and learned friend, Mr. Voltaire Saurian. We shall expect you at six."

"Aha! to-morrow, you say? You are bold, my boy—bold is the word—in carrying it so defiantly at the start; but perhaps you are right. Stand like an anvil! and depend on me for all the moral support you require. Bye, bye!"

"And, pray, what lunatic asylum is he from?" was Eudocia's satiric inquiry when we were again alone.

"I fancy he still runs an individual one in his own house—he used to," I replied, not without a dreary sense of humor.

"And were you in earnest about the dinner party?"

"Of course. It was the inspiration of the moment, but isn't it better, after all, my dear, to force this mystery to a final issue at once? I shall write out the invitations to-night, have them distributed in the morning, early, and we shall see what comes of it."

Eudocia was a sensible as well as a spirited woman. She hesitated but a moment, and then so far fell in with the idea as to sweep across the room and imprint a kiss on my forehead; while I forthwith exerted myself to making her feel as much at home as possible by showing her over the house and grounds. We actually managed to delude ourselves into a pretty good humor by dinner-time, which I think was really creditable under the circumstances.

After dinner, the writing of the invitations, in which Eudocia materially assisted, occupied two or three hours, and bed-time found us in a much pleasanter frame of mind than we had experienced since our arrival.

The business of the day, however, was not to be wholly shelved without a fresh manifestation of my worthy housekeeper's incomprehensibility.

Eudocia had just gone into her room, and, after securing the lower part of the house, as had been my custom, I was about to follow her, when Mrs. Gimp confronted me at the head of the stairs, with compressed lips, stern eyes, and the generally set, grimly virtuous aspect of one who had made up her mind to encounter even martyrdom, if necessary, in the fearless assertion of a great principle.

"Mr. Addersly—Theophilus," she said, in a quivering voice, "your own room has been prepared for you at the other end of the passage. I have had your trunk carried into it."

"Thanks, Mrs. Gimp," said I. "But my wife and I are quite content to occupy the same apartment; so that to-morrow you must have my baggage transferred."

"Oh, Theophilus!" cried the provoking woman, setting down her candlestick, that she might the more eloquently, the more beseechingly, extend her clasped hands toward me; "do not, my son, my old master's son, do not, I implore you, set the conventionalities at naught in this home-place of your birth!"

"My good woman," I replied, a little warmly, "as long as you choose to speak in riddles, you must excuse me from attempting to divine your meaning. Good-night."

I entered the room, and closed the door behind me, leaving her in tears.

After breakfast on the following day, Scipio being still missing, I lost no time in procuring a messenger to distribute the invitations. I would then have taken Eudocia out shopping or driving, but she declared she would not again appear in public until our mystery was cleared up.

The acquaintances whom I met individually through the day were very shy, and seemed disposed to keep up what I now seriously began to consider a monstrous and ill-timed practical joke. They were willing enough to chat about my travels, and of home affairs that had taken place during my absence, but the moment I approached the subject of my altered domestic relations they at once grew taciturn, if not surly, and began to exchange odd glances in a manner puzzling and trying to my temper, to say the least.

I at last besought one of them—Jack Whitely, an old college chum and therefore deuced good fellow—to clear away the clouds, if there were any, or let me into the joke, if joke it was. My earnestness seemed to stagger him for a moment, but immediately thereafter he looked at me half-pityingly, half-angrily, and, muttering some excuse, strode away.

So, in much mental distress, I returned home to await the developments of the evening's venture, and to cheer up Eudocia as best I could.

At a little before six we were in the drawing-room awaiting our guests; with considerable meanness on my own part, I had to confess, though my wife—who was splendidly dressed—retained her composure admirably.

Everything was a success, so far as the arrangements went. The dinner was irreproachable. The boisterous chambermaid had been thrust out of sight below stairs, her place in attendance upon the door being supplied by a gigantic footman, who stepped about in his patent-leather pumps with surprising noiselessness. The waiters (experts from the hotel) were at their posts. There was evidently nothing wanting that good taste and style demanded save the guests.

The gentlemen, it is true, began to arrive punctually, but with apologies, one after the other, for the non-appearance of their respective ladies, in words of such surprising sameness as to forcibly suggest a preconcerted agreement upon the terms. When the dinner hour arrived not a single lady guest had appeared.

Eudocia began to grow very red, and I was also so mortified as hardly to know what course to take. But suddenly a mountain was lifted off my mind by Mrs. Gimp coming to the door, and whispering to me that Scipio was in the hall, very drunk, and insisting on ousting the big footman from his post of honor.

"Excuse me one moment, gentlemen," I exclaimed excitedly, turning to my guests; "and forgive me if I force a little scene upon you at such a time and place. But this misunderstanding has become insupportable, and it is about to be explained at last."

I think I may be pardoned for the all but delirious haste with which I rushed into the hall, swooped upon Scipio, and dragged him by the collar, panting and squirming, before the assembled guests.

"Tell me, you rascal! tell me!" I thundered, "what infernal report you have set on foot against my wife or myself that has caused us to be covered with contumely and insult! Out with it, or I will not be responsible for the harm I may do you!"

"Fore de Trone ob Grace, Marse Addersly, I'se done said nuffin but what you tole me to!" gasped the miserable fellow, frightened to semi-sobriety. "I didn't tink dey'd take it de way dey did, shuh's you're borned!"

"What have you told them? Speak!"

"Didn't you say fur to gib it out as how you warn't new-married?"

"Certainly."

"An' so I did, Marse Addersly. But I wanted to make a shuh ting, so I jist done gib it out as how you warn't married at all."

The mystery was at last out. I released the marplot and staggered back with a wild laugh, while Eudocia started from her chair, her face suffused with shame.

"Gentlemen," she faltered, "is it possible that—that——"

She could say no more, but hid her face.

"Here has been some awful mistake," said Jack Whitely, coming forward and grasping my hand, after a hurried consultation with several others. "I say, can you just put off the dinner for half an hour, while we run home and make certain explanations?"

Of course we could and of course we did.

Away they went, and in less than the allotted time they were back again, accompanied by wife, sister, or sweetheart, according to the original programme; and not only was the dinner-party an unqualified success, but the ladies made their genuine and heartfelt amends so charmingly as to make Eudocia almost forget the embarrassing complications that had arisen, and at once feel herself at home in the really delightful society of which Tattleton could boast.

Now that everything is happily rectified, I need not dwell upon the false impressions that had, perhaps but naturally, prevailed, either as entertained by the Sticklers, the Trumbletries, Miss Pryer, Mr. Saurian, old Mrs. Gimp, or any of the rest.

Suffice it to say that everything was agreeable thereafter. Eudocia did not disdain to have our marriage certificate duly framed and conspicuously displayed in the drawing-room, after the prevailing rustic custom. As for Scipio, he was forthwith relegated to less delicate service than that upon which his headlong over-zeal had so nearly encompassed our domestic ruin.

THE WAITER.

O, waiter, in thine hours of ease,
Uncertain, coy, and hard to please,
Didst ever respond to aught save fees,
Thou waiter?

Does pity ne'er within thy breast
Give to thy conscience greater zest
And stir thee from thy wonted rest,
Thou waiter?

You're always looking at the wall,
Or nodding slowly down the hall,
And never present when I call,
"Here, waiter,"

There's naught, indeed, but filthy gold
Will keep your meats from getting cold.
It does no good to hate or scold
The waiter.

Fork out the cash, give him the fee,
And in a twinkling you will see How quick he'll move. No more you'll be

An Important Work.

A new map of the solar spectrum has been completed by Thollon, after four years of incessant labor at the Observatory of Nice. The chart comprises about one-third of the prismatic spectrum, is about forty feet long, and includes 33,200 lines, or double the number in the best previous work. Changes in these lines of the spectrum tell certainly of changes in the sun, and it has been the author's aim to make future changes apparent by providing an accurate record of the present state of the solar spectrum.

Young Englishman—Your country is so young, y'know, Miss Eagle. You have no pride of ancestry as yet. You——

American Girl—On the contrary, Mr. Lion, America is and has every reason to be proud of its ancestry. Much more so, in fact, than England.

Young Englishman—Indeed!

But hold! A wheel comes off! the steamer is overturned, and the brave firemen are picked up bleeding and senseless!

An investigation revealed the fact that in oiling the steamer that morning the steward had neglected to put in the linch-pin. A little neglect on his part had caused a loss of a half million dollars. The Confession of Napoleon's Wife.

Marie Louise was sitting one evening with Lady Burghersh, when the conversation turned upon Napoleon, to whom the former said she had certainly believed herself much attached, and was so, having been dazzled by his military glory and the greatness of his situation on the imperial throne, etc.

Lady Burghersh then asked if she had not kept up a correspondence with him during the time of his residence in Elba. She answered: "Yes; I certainly carried on such a correspondence to a much greater extent than was ever suspected." "Then why," said Lady Burghersh, "did you not join him during the hundred days?" The answer, "I could not," was made. On being further pressed as to the obstacles which prevented this, Marie Louise answered only "that it was impossible," but at last ended by stating that being with child by another man was the invincible reason that prevented it. That man the Empress married immediately on the death of Napoleon, having had two children by him previously and two subsequent to their marriage. Marie Louise was living with him when this conversation took place.

The Malignant Ingenuity of a Fiend

Could scarcely devise tortures more excruciating than those to which the victim of rheumatism, in the inflammatory stage, is subjected. It is also dangerous on account of its tendency toward the heart and stomach. Among the benign qualities of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, is that of expelling from the circulation those acrial impurities to which the disease is a tributable. Analysis proves that, in cases of rheumatism, the kidneys fail to eliminate these impurities from the blood. The Bitters, by stimulating these organs to activity, enables them to perform this all-important function, and, therefore, averts the disease or remedies it at the outset. The functions of digestion, and secretion of bile by the liver, are also beneficially stimulated by the bitters, which conquers dyspepsia and liver complaint, and remedies fever and ague, bilious remittent, and other ailments of malarial birth. It is also the leading tonic of the age.

AN OLD PREJUDICE DISAPPEARING.

Women doctors are so numerous now that the prejudice against them has long since died out. There are several in the United States, it is said, who enjoy an annual income of $20,000 and over, and a practice worth $5,000 a year is common. They have reached their present honorable position by hard and conscientious work, and all they receive is well earned. Medical colleges for women are now established in all the large cities, and the graduates from them number several hundred every year. Among the women doctors of Illinois is Miss Addie M. Barnes, of Danville, who recently moved to that city from Lafayette, Ind. She has recently had herself as a patient, and how she was successful in working a cure she tells as follows:

"I had a very stubborn case of sciatica and had been confined to my bed for three weeks. I had blistered the limb and used all kinds of liniments to no purpose. Rev. Dr. Buchtel told me of the wonderful remedy, Athlophoros. Our druggist sent for it and I bought two bottles of it. Before I had taken three doses I was able to get out of bed and sit up for two hours. In three days I went down the street. I believe that had I persevered with the remedy the cure would have been permanent. However, I have never been such a sufferer since. I keep Athlophoros in my office and often tell patients of the great relief it gave me, and recommend it."

E. K. Mercer, proprietor of the Princeton (Ill.) Tribune, says of Athlophoros:

"It is a good medicine and did me more good than did half a dozen doctors."

Mr. John H. Hutsel, proprietor of the West Side Pavilion, No. 678 West Indiana street, Chicago, who had been a victim of rheumatism, says:

"I never had a severe case of sickness before this rheumatism came on me, and I would just remark right here that I never want another such. When it first made its appearance I consulted a physician, but his medicine made me worse. I then went to St. Joseph's Hospital. After being there some time and getting no relief, I went back home. After being at home a few days, I heard about Athlophoros and decided to try it myself. I came from the hospital on the 3d of July. Two days after that I was unable to walk or sleep at night. I was in this condition when I commenced with the Athlophoros on the 7th inst., and by the 15th of the month I was well. You can see by my book, I have an exact record of the dates and the time I commenced using and when I was well."

"How long were you sick, Mr. Hutsel?"

"For five weeks I was confined to my bed, during which time I lost twenty-three pounds of flesh."

"How much did you use to effect this cure?"

"Two bottles did the work, and I have not felt any pain or return of the disease since."

"Have you known of any others that have used Athlophoros?"

"Yes; the lady that recommended it to me said she knew of an old chronic case of twenty years' standing that had been cured by the use of Athlophoros. I have had many persons that knew how I had been afflicted and suffered inquire what cured me. I am always glad to be able to say that Athlophoros is the sovereign remedy for rheumatism."

If you cannot get ATHLOPHOROS of your druggist, we will send it express paid, on receipt of regular price—one dollar per bottle. We prefer that you buy it of your druggist, but if he hasn't it, do not be persuaded to try something else, but order at once from us as directed. ATHLOPHOROS Co., 112 Wall street, New York.

Are You Going to New Orleans or Florida?

If so, you can go via the MONON ROUTE, via Louisville or Cincinnati, and see the Mammoth Cave, Nashville, Blount Springs, Birmingham, Montgomery, Mobile, and the Gulf coast for the same money that will take you through the dreary, uninhabited Mississippi swamps.

No one should think of going South without visiting the Mammoth Cave, the great natural wonder of this continent. So much has been written of this world-famous wonder that it is impossible to say anything new in regard to it—it cannot be described; its caverns must be explored, its darkness felt, its beauties seen, to be appreciated or realized. From Mobile to New Orleans (141 miles) the ride along the Gulf coast is alone worth the entire cost of the whole trip. In full sight of the Gulf all the way, past Ocean Springs, Mississippi City, Pass Christian, Bay St. Louis, and Beauvoir, the home of Jeff Davis.

When you decide to go South make up your mind to travel over the line that passes through the best country and gives you the best places to stop over. DROPSY TREATED FREE.
DR. H. H. GREEN & SONS,
Specialists for Thirteen Years Past,
Have treated Dropsy and its complications with the most wonderful success; use vegetable remedies, entirely harmless. Remove all symptoms of dropsy in eight to twenty days.
Cure patients pronounced hopeless by the best of physicians.
From the first dose the symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two-thirds of all symptoms are removed.
Some may cry humbug without knowing anything about it. Remember it does not cost you anything to realize the merits of our treatment for yourself. In ten days the difficulty of breathing is relieved, the pulse regular, the urinary organs made to discharge their full duty, sleep is restored, the swelling all or nearly gone, the strength increased, and appetite made good. We have cases by the thousands coming in—cases that have been tapped a number of times and the patient declared unable to live a week. Give full history of case. Name sex, how long afflicted, how badly swollen and where, are bowels costive, have legs bursted and drained water. Send for free pamphlet, containing testimonials, questions, etc.
Ten days' treatment furnished free by mail.
Epilepsy (Fits) positively cured.
If you order trial, send $1 cents in stamps to pay postage. H. H. GREEN & SONS, M. Ds.,

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS, please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

Around the County.

Eastport.

J. R. Child's house came very near burning last Friday evening. It caught from fire dropping from the stove on the carpet.

J. W. Pearl is preparing to put in a stock of goods. So we have been informed.

School has commenced in the Bay View school house recently built by Wm. Flanagin. Mrs. C. B. Zeran is teacher.

Railroad news is read very eagerly by our citizens, but the Sentinel dashed our hopes to the ground in the last issue; but we will entertain the idea if it be absurd until we get it, for we are certain of it some time. It may be this year or it may be next, but it will come. Bellaire is giving us a cold shoulder, but we have better reasons for believing it will come here than they have for believing it will go there and we can prove it. 1st. If a branch of the G. R. & I. R. R. comes here it will be built over the most feasible and direct route for its place of destination. 2d. It will get all of the railroad traffic if it is built on this line that it would if it were built 7 or 8 miles inland, which would be many miles off their direct route, through an undeveloped, hilly, and broken region, and by doing so would miss the best grain and fruit markets in Antrim county, which would be of as much interest for them to intersect as a newly settled country.

Burgess.

Another little Adventist in town. Wm. Grey is the happy man. Mother and boy are doing well.

Mr. Case is meeting with good success on his fishing ground at Ka-go-che-wing.

Squire Ross is taking his buckwheat to Cable mills to be made into pancake timber.

A dance at Arnold's Christmas night.

The woods are full of people cutting down Christmas trees.

A family reunion at Loren Hamlin's Christmas.

Henry Baker has his new residence nearly completed.

Hamlin boys have taken a contract to get out 300 cords of shipping wood this winter,

Frank Kane expects to entertain friends and relatives Christmas.

This soft weather is making long faces among those getting out logs, wood and ties.

Consting has been indulged in to quite an extent lately.

The Willing Workers.

A society of young ladies organized a few weeks ago to work for the Ironton Congregational church had their bazaar in Mrs. Adams' parlors, Saturday evening, the 19th. A most enjoyable time to all invited guests. The net proceeds of their efforts is thirty-five dollars, which certainly speaks well for the young ladies, six in number.

ENRICH THE BLOOD.

HAMILTON'S GERMAN BITTERS are highly recommended for all diseases requiring a certain and efficient tonic. Especially indigestion, dyspepsia, want of appetite, loss of strength, lack of energy, &c. They enrich the blood, strengthen the muscles, and give new life to the nerves. They act like a charm in the digestive organs, remove all dyspeptic symptoms, and whenever the stomach is weak or there is a general loss of physical vigor, these Bitters are just what you need Only 50 cents per bottle.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

THE GREATEST PAIN KILLER Yet found for cramps, colic, stitch in side or back, neuralgia, rheumatism, sprains, bruises, &c., is HAMILTON'S JAMACIA GINGER TONIC AND PAIN CURE. Bound on with hot wet cloths it never fials to cure. For dyspepsia, indigestion, sick headache, flatulence, diarrhœa, dysentery, heartburn, sour stomach, &c., it is unequalled. Warranted to cure. Try it. Price 25 and 50 cents.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter. Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 152

HELP for working people. Send 10 cents postage, and we will mail you free, a royal, valuable sample box of goods that will put you in the way of making more money in a few days than you ever thought possible at any business. Capital not required. You can live at home and work in spare time only, or all the time. All of both sexes, of all ages, grandly successful. 50 cents to $5.00 easily earned every evening. Special Correspondence.

A decision of importance to many Michigan people has recently been made by assistant secretary Fairchild, affirming the action of the collector at Port Huron in assessing duty on on certain mares, which the importers claimed, were exempt from duty "as animals specially imported for breeding purposes." The mares in question were to be worked a season in the lumber region, and thereafter to be used for breeding purposes. It is therefore held that the special purpose declared in the invoice was not the special purpose for which they were imported.

On Monday evening occurred the annual celebration of the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers on Plymouth Rock. The entertainment was one of unusual interest and at the close of an excellent banquet speeches were made by the president of the club and by Senator Hawley, Hon. B. M. Cutcheon (of Mich.), Gov. Long, and Hon. W. W. Grant. In the course of his remarks Mr. Cutcheon said:

"This day that we celebrate is a sort of paradox in the world's history. We celebrate usually victories, the rise and fall of empires; but we come here to night to celebrate—not, perhaps, a defeat; but the coming of a band of exiles, religious outcasts. They came for conscience sake, holding conscience above conduct. They came as a forlorn hope of a new civilization, of the storming parts of the immense hosts which were to follow. The rock which was first pressed by the feet of these brave men and brave women became the stepping stone to immortality, the portal of a nation which has grown to be great among the nations of the earth. They brought with them pure democracy, the government of the people, by the people, for the people; the town meeting and the Congregational church. The New Englander's character is an unique one—strong, and cast in a rugged mould; firm as the rock, strong as the mountains and enduring as the very hills."

During the holiday recess it might naturally be inferred that the senators and representatives would go to their homes; but it is not so in fact, as less than one hundred members have gone home to spend Christmas and New Years. And speaking of the members reminds us that there has been considerable quiet discussion of the civil service rules. To say that they are heartily endorsed by a majority of the members would be a very reckless expression. Many are of the opinion that the enforcement of the present rules as expounded by the commission can only result in building up an office-holding aristocracy directly antagonistic to the spirit of our free institutions. A New York writer seems to have expressed a sentiment that prevails to a considerable extent when he says, speaking of civil service examinations: "They are useful. They determine whether the applicant is qualified to do the work he asks for. There is no better way in which this can be proved. As for competitive examinations, they may be fine things in China, but they will not answer in a democratic and political country like this. Neither will non-partizan appointments." And this seems to echo the sentiments of a majority of those who venture to express an opinion upon the subject.

Christmas is celebrated here much as the Fourth of July is in Michigan minus the fire works and speeches. The guns, the music, the bells, the gongs, and the noise are all present. And the weather also contributes its share of the general enjoyment, as a finer, brighter day could not be asked for in even the golden months of September and October. All the departments are closed and Uncle Sam's employees are allowed to enjoy the day after their own tastes.

The re-assembling of congress is looked forward to with peculiar interest as a long and exciting controversy is anticipated in both houses over the silver question, Senator Beck's recent speech being considered but a prelude to the fierce contest that is to come. This speech, however, should not be looked upon as an attack upon the administration. It is rather a protest against the perpetuation of the financial policy established by the republican party, and a plea for democratic harmony on this important question.

The Religion of Jesus Christ.

Below we give a synopsis of the sermon of Rev. C. F. Van Auken at the Congregational church, on Sunday, Dec. 15th. Text: Timothy, 1:15:

Bishop Butler said, "Christ coming into the world gives us a view of ourselves." Here we see in Christ a stupendous work. Look if you please at the work he did for us.

"This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners."

Let us see whether it is worthy of all acceptation. The religion of Jesus Christ is the theme of our contemplation this morning. There are many forms and isms of religion in the world, but none ever have been worthy of acceptation, when applied to the saving of sinners, save alone that introduced by Jesus Christ. It supplies all our spiritual wants, and brings needed help to soul and body, and therefore worthy of acceptation. Go back nineteen hundred years, see how it was rejected. But did it cease to grow? Verily no! The name of Jesus was the cause of great victories. The man at the beautiful gate was healed by the name of Jesus. The preaching of Christ is the power that touches and moves the stony heart. The gospel of Christ remains while other theories are lost sight of. You will also agree with me that all men should accept this religion. It is not sectarian, it is not selfish, it is not only offered to one particular caste, people or nation, but to every nation and tongue. "It is worthy of all acceptation," because it justifies all lawful, scriptural means and ways to be used for the moral elevation of mankind. Some seem to think there is no church like "ours." No one can be saved if they don't do just as we. They are very tenacious as to apostolic succession.

Christ has only one condition by which he saves sinners, to wit: Repentence toward God and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. The question is, have we the love of God in our heart. Are we doing his will, or doing our own wills, and running counter to his. All false religion must fall. The declaration of God has gone forth, "This is my beloved son; Him shall ye hear." His kingdom must succeed. "For in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed, but shall remain for ever and for ever." Dan. 2:44.

Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners. "This is worthy of all acception." Anything outside of this can not satisfy. You will all agree with me that man has a religious nature. He possesses a soul that is capable of enjoyments, and that of a sublime nature, of a spiritual character. Neither wealth, honor or power can satisfy the achings of the soul. Let me ask in conclusion, why do you not accept Christ. Is their any other religion you prefer?

There are two great enemies in the world, antagonistic to each other, the one looks to the Lord as the true God in whom they trust, the other say Christ is a myth. Religion is the result of an excited imagination. But Paul says, "The preaching of Christ is to the Jews, foolishness, but to to those who believe, it is the power of God. To save sinners is the glory of Christ, the joy of heaven and earth, the sweet songs of angels and men.

Christmas Doings.

The services gotten up for the Sunday school children at the churches on Christmas eve were in excellent taste considering all circumstances.

At the Congregational church no attempt was made at decoration, but tables were spread, loaded with a generous array of pop corn, candy, apples, cake, etc., enough for every child in the school. Musical and literary exercises were provided, which were very entertaining.

At the M. E. church the decorations were quite elaborate, especially in the design and arrangement of mottoes. A large Christmas tree was well filled with an excellent assortment of presents for all who chose to take part in the services of the evening. Most prominent among the presents was a handsome and valuable gold-headed ebony cane, presented to W. A. Smith by the church. Before the presents were distributed the audience listened to a choice selection of literary exercises.

Among the private entertainments reported, that at the home of W. A. Atchison is worthy of mention. The families of Geo. A. Leonard and W. A. Atchison gathered around an elaborate tree at the latter's place, and enjoyed themselves as well as their friends down at the churches. Over 100 presents of all kinds were distributed.

"Happy New Year."

New Year callers will be received by the following ladies at the places named:

Mrs. D. C. Loveday, Miss Maud Loveday, Miss Flora Nelson, Miss Sadie Miller, Miss Bertha Mills, and Miss Luna Washburn, at residence of D. C. Loveday.

Mrs. J. A. Carlstein, Mrs. L. E. Allen, Mrs. G. W. Crouter, Mrs. N. L. Cash, Mrs. E. M. Clark, Mrs. A. D. Cruickshank, Mrs. A. F. Draper, and Mrs. R. Lake, at residence of Dr. J. A. Carlstein.

Mrs. O. S. Washburn, Mrs. Levi Blanchard, Mrs. A. T. Washburn, Mrs. J. R. Dixon, Mrs. A. R. Upright, Mrs. C. J. Strang, Mrs. C. J. Grier, and Mrs. D. C. Nettleton, at residence of O. S. Washburn.

Mrs. O. D. Wood, Mrs. J. E. Wood, Mrs. J. M. Eaton, Mrs. W. A. Smith, Mrs. F. A. Smith, and Mrs. E. H. Green, at residence of O. D. Wood.

A Tribute to Mr. Potter.

A friend in Ironton sends the following concerning the labors of Rev. John D. Potter in that place last week:

The people living in and around Ironton have great reason for gratitude at the great blessing God has showed on many through the efforts and faithful instruction of Rev. Mr. Potter. We cannot say enough to show our appreciation of Mr. Potters labors here. All we are sorry for is that he could not be with us longer. We hope he may have a blessing wherever he goes.

Kind Tokens.

The numerous friends of Rev. and Mrs. Parmenter met for a "social" for their benefit, at the Hilton schoolhouse on Tuesday evening. Although the night was dark and stormy, people came from as far as five miles away. After enjoying a very pleasant hour they counted up the cash and produce to the handsome little sum of $32.66. Mr. Parmenter's friends, among whom he labored during a previous residence here, are very much attached to him and he appreciates their friendship. Mr. and Mrs. Parmenter extend their sincere thanks.

Late Navigation.

CHICAGO, Dec. 26.—The high rates of freights on coal have tempted the Lehigh Valley line to send two more cargoes here and the propellers H. E. Packer and Fred Mercur passed through the straits last night enroute for Chicago. But little ice was encountered, and the vessel will probably make this port without trouble. This is the first time in the history of lake navigation that a trip has been attempted so late in the season, and will give the Mercur the honor of being the first and last boat through the straits in 1885.

I. O. O. F. Election.

The following officers of Round Lake Lodge No. 293 were elected Wednesday evening:

N. G.—W. A. Brown.
V. G.—H. S. Harsha.
Sec.—Robert O'Neil.
Per. Sec.—John Burns.
Treas.—Melvin Thompson.
Trustee for 3 years—G. W. Crouter.
Rep. to Grand Lodge—G. W. Crouter.

Firemen's Meeting.

The Charlevoix fire company will meet next Wednesday night. Everybody come. By order of committee.

NOTE—We have for distribution a number of copies of the annual report of the Michigan Horticultural Society for 1883, which may be had by subscribers of the JOURNAL on application at this office.

Concise Record of the Week.

THE WORK OF CONGRESS.

MR. HOAR'S Presidential succession bill passed the Senate on the 17th after an able argument in its favor by Mr. Evarts. In a debate on the resolution regarding the unauthorized organization of a State government for Dakota, Mr. Butler declared that no question of politics was involved, and asked if Mr. Harrison would sustain similar action by the Territory of Utah. John Hipple Mitchell, of Oregon, was sworn in. Bills were introduced for the sale of the Cherokee reservation in Arkansas, to encourage the erection of monuments on Revolutionary battle fields; to locate a branch soldiers' home, costing $25,000, in the Northwest; to provide for the issue of silver certificates; for the warehousing of fruit brandy, and to bridge the Missouri at Pierre. The House of Representatives was principally occupied in the discussion of the revision of the rules. All amendments to the committee's report were voted down by a decided majority, but without taking final action the House adjourned.

A BILL making it unlawful for a Senator or Representative in Congress to recommend or solicit appointments to office, was introduced in the Senate by Mr. Hampton, of South Carolina, on the 18th inst. A bill was passed to pension Mrs. Grant at the rate of $5,000 per year. Mr. Beck offered a resolution specifying the use to be made of coin received for customs duties. Mr. Sherman introduced a bill to pay royalties to the widow of Admiral Dahlgren for the use of artillery patents. Mr. Beck offered a resolution to allow the widow of Minister Phelps a year's salary for services in Peru. Mr. Ingalls introduced a measure to prevent the illegal inclosure of public lands. The House of Representatives amended the rules in substantial accordance with the report of the committee, thus distributing the appropriation bills among seven committees. The Senate bill to give Mrs. Grant a pension of $5,000 per annum was passed.

IN the House of Representatives, at its session on the 19th, Mr. Morrison, of Illinois, from the Committee on Rules, reported a resolution for the creation of the following select committees: On the election of President and Vice President of the United States, on reform in the civil service, on ship building and ship owning interests, on alcoholic liquor traffic, and on ventilation and acoustics of the House. The resolution was adopted. Representative Lovering presented a petition by Col. David P. Hussey, Third Massachusetts Cavalry, and sixty others, survivors of the storming column known as the "Forlorn Hope," organized for assault upon Port Hudson, La., June 15, 1863, praying Congress to grant them medals, as promised in the general order of Gen. Banks. The Senate was not in session.

THE feature of the Senate proceedings on the 21st of December was the carefully prepared attack of Senator Beck upon the financial policy of the administration. Mr. Beck believes that the word "coin" used in section 3591 of the Revised Statutes means silver as well as gold coin, and he therefore introduced a resolution instructing the Finance Committee to inquire whether the coin paid for customs duties under the section has been set apart for the payment of the interest on United States bonds and to the payment of one per centum of the entire debt of the United States made in each year as a sinking fund, and if this had not heretofore been done to report a bill for the enforcement of the law. The Kentucky Senator spoke for an hour upon this resolution, and in the course of his remarks charged that the Secretary of the Treasury had deliberately violated this provision; that he was administering the Treasury in the special interest of national banks, and that he was, also, in the same interest discriminating against silver. The Senator declared, with great earnestness of manner, that he would enforce fine and imprisonment upon any officer who would thus violate the law. Beck was so vehement in manner and so blunt in language that upon the conclusion of his remarks the Senators on both sides were too much surprised to make any response. Mr. Morrill said that the speech practically charged the Secretary of the Treasury with being a thief, and the President of the United States with being in collusion with him; and that, as no Democratic Senator seemed ready to defend the administration against the terrible arraignment, he moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, which motion was adopted. In the House of Representatives, under a call of the States, a perfect flood of bills rained upon the Speaker's desk. More than 1,000 were introduced, and the call was suspended when Maine was reached. Included in the list are the following: For the relief of Fitz John Porter, to suspend the coinage of the silver dollar, to pay Government employes wages withheld in violation of the eight-hour law, to limit the disposal of the public lands, to establish a postal telegraph, for the unrestricted coinage of the silver dollar, for the construction of the Hennepin Canal, to establish a Sub-Treasury at Louisville, to enable the people of Dakota to form a constitution, and to create the Territory of Oklahoma. Ten measures affecting railway land grants were also introduced. Both houses adjourned until Jan. 5.——The President sent the following new nominations of Postmasters to the Senate on the 21st: At Fairmount, W. Va., Newton S. Barnes; Jackson, Tenn., R. R. Bashiel; Peoria, Ill., John Worner; Mt. Pleasant, Mich., Fred A. Seddons; Evansville, Wis., James V. N. Sons; Nevada, Mo., Wm. R. Crockett; Oxford, Pa., Samuel H. Smith; Weatherford, Tex., N. B. Johnson; Wauseon, Ohio, George Hannesler; Canton, Ohio, William Archival; Delaware, Ohio, David A. Starke; Ottawa, Ill., William Osman; Batavia, Ill., Willis S. Grimes; Amboy, Ill., George E. Young; Mason City, Ill., William A. Mehan; Maywood, Ill., Samuel S. Kemp; Mount Carroll, Ill., William P. Baird; Mount Morris, Ill., Henry Sharer; Edinburgh, Ill., Charles Kelly; Macomb, Ill., Thomas Philpot; Hyde Park, Ill., Edwin S. Hawley; Vandalia, Ill., Sidney B. Stout; Shelbyville, Ky., Joseph N. Bell; Howell, Mich., Isaac W. Bush; Niles, Mich., William J. Edwards; Stanton, Mich., Patrick H. McGarry; Denison, Iowa, O. B. Keith; Oskaloosa, Iowa, William T. Smith; Hampton, Iowa, Oscar B. Hammon; Little Rock, Ark., Thomas W. Newton.

THE EAST.

WATER flowing from a pool on the surface flooded No. 1 slope of the Susquehanna Coal Company's mine at Nanticoke, Pa., in which there were at the time nearly 1,000 men and boys. All made hurried escapes save a band of thirty men, working in the Ross seam, who were cut off by the water and an accumulation of rubbish. Their condition at this writing is unknown, but there is said to be no danger of the men being suffocated.... John Hannon, a new York schoolboy aged 12 years, was arraigned in court for the third time upon a charge of attempting to take his own life. His course has resulted from his dislike for school.... Hiland Hall, ex-Governor of Vermont, died very suddenly at Springfield, Mass. He was 90 years old, and was in his usual health up to the time of his death.

THE city of Elizabethport, N. J., levied on the effects of the Singer Sewing Machine Company, and the works were closed. There is a quarrel between the city and the company, it appears, and the former is largely in debt to the latter and refused to credit the taxes due by the company on account.... Henry T. Coleman, a prominent lawyer of Philadelphia, has purchased the Bonaparte estate of two hundred acres at Bordentown, N. J., and will restore the dilapidated houses and preserve the historical features of the place.... In the Court of Common Pleas, at Philadelphia, the preliminary injunction restraining the American Association from expelling the Metropolitan Club of New York, was continued.

BECAUSE of the lockout of 3,000 employes of the Singer Sewing Machine Company at Elizabethport, N. J., the Knights of Labor suggest the boycotting of the firm until the shops are reopened.

THE WEST.

SINCE the opening of the winter packing season, the average daily receipts of hogs at Chicago have been 40,000 head.... C. D. Hess commenced in the Superior Court at Chicago a suit for $25,000 damages for slander against Lillian Russell and her husband, Edward Solomon.... Two murderers at Carrollton, Missouri, being dissatisfied with the sentence of imprisonment for life, secured a new trial. The jury convicted them of murder in the first degree, and Judge Davis fixed March 12 as the day of their execution.... The Hon. Wm. Pitt Lynde, a well-known lawyer and prominent citizen of Milwaukee died in that city last week, aged 68 years. Mr. Lynde was born in Homer, N. Y., graduated at Yale College in 1838, was admitted to the New York bar in 1841, and went to Wisconsin to reside in 1842. He was Attorney General of the State in 1844. In 1845 President Polk appointed him United States District Attorney for Wisconsin. In 1848, on the admission of Wisconsin as a State, he was elected to the Thirtieth Congress as a Democrat, being one of the three Representatives sent from the State at the time. In 1860 Mr. Lynde was elected Mayor of Milwaukee. He served as Assemblyman in 1866 and as State Senator in 1868 and 1869. He was elected to the Forty-fourth Congress over Harrison Ludington and to the Forty-fifth Congress over the late William E. Smith. He had held no public office for several years.

NEAR Miles City, Mont., an attempt was made by three masked men to rob the Spearfish stage, but the driver galloped the horses away. The Sheriff and three deputies had heard rumors of the plot, and were on hand in time to capture two of the robbers, one of whom they shot twice.... A company of the Eighth United States Cavalry, under Lieutenant Fortune, was ambushed near White House, N. M., by the hostiles. The troops lost five killed and two wounded. No Indians were reported killed.

CALIFORNIA banks held for collection forged drafts on the Camden Consolidated Oil Company of Parkersburg, W. Va., for over $67,000. One of these drafts, for $21,437.50, was discounted by the Bank of California.... A boy at Youngstown, Ohio, named Frank Burnett, possesses such electrical power as to cause chairs and tables to dance at his approach. He is to be examined by medical experts.... Natural gas has been found in several localities in Indiana, and there is considerable excitement on the subject.... Fire broke out in the four-story brick building at the corner of Michigan street and LaSalle avenue, Chicago, owned by Oberne, Hosick & Co., and occupied by them as a tallow, hide, and wool warehouse, and it was completely destroyed. The loss is estimated at $316,000.

ARTICLES consolidating the Milwaukee and Dubuque and the Bureau and Northwestern Roads have been filed at Madison, Wis. The object is to construct a railway from Milwaukee to St. Louis, to be called the Milwaukee, Peoria and St. Louis Road, with a capital stock of $6,000,000.... A boiler explosion in Trebien's distillery at Dayton, Ohio, killed two workmen and seriously injured several others, one being blown several hundred feet into the river.

THE SOUTH.

FIRE at Jacksonville, Fla., destroyed many buildings and caused a loss of over $400,000.... The contested election case at Atlanta, Ga., growing out of the recent prohibition election there was decided in the United States Court against the liquor men on every point.... A dispatch from Laurel, Miss., reports that "a colored woman named Celia Perryman was murdered, together with her two children, a boy and girl aged respectively 8 and 11 years. It was developed at the inquest that Sam Wilson, colored, aged about 22 years, had during the absence of the mother and boy attempted to outrage the girl, and then killed her with an axe. He then enticed the boy into the house and slew him, after which he broke open the woman's trunk and took money and several valuable articles therefrom. The mother returned while Wilson was in the house, and he immediately attacked and killed her. He then set fire to the house and left the scene of the tragedy. The fire was, however, discovered in time to rescue the bodies. The villain was captured and did not live to see the sun go down upon his bloody work".... The Governor of Louisiana, after standing a siege by friends and a bombardment with petitions, has granted a respite of thirty days to Ford and Murphy, the murderers of a city official of New Orleans, who were to have been executed at Baton Rouge. It was even proposed to have the people vote on the question whether or not the men should be hanged.

THE Queen and Crescent Railway system has recorded in various parishes of Louisiana a mortgage on its roadbed and cars for $1,323,000, in favor of a New York trust company.... Milton Young, of Lexington, Ky., sold twenty-three thoroughbred horses for $56,200, every prominent stable in the country having a representative present. Bakrupt, for which $8,000 was refused last year, brought $6,700. Troubadour went at $7,050.

ON a charge of disorderly conduct in which Chief of Police Connelly was a participant, Col. E. C. Bluffy, assistant city editor of the Constitution, was fined at Atlanta, Ga., $10 and costs, Connelly being let off on paying costs. The editor had challenged the policeman to fight a duel, but the latter declined.

WASHINGTON.

SENATOR CULLOM'S bill to reimburse the States for interest paid on war loans has been reported favorably by the Committee on Claims. The bill directs the settlement of all claims for interest upon loans borrowed and expended for the use and benefit of the United States under the act of July 27, 1861, to indemnify the States for expenses incurred in defense of the United States. Interest to be computed at the rate paid by the State, not to exceed 6 per cent.

REPRESENTATIVE PAYSON, of Illinois, says that settlers out West are needlessly alarmed on account of the recent decision of the Supreme Court that technically the titles of the railroad lands which have been sold by railroad companies to settlers, but have not yet been patented, still rest in the United States.

THE issue of standard silver dollars during the week ended Dec. 19 was 629,211. The issue during the corresponding period of last year was 454,995.

GENERAL.

FAILURES in the United States for the week were 217, against 221 the preceding week, a decline of 4, and as compared with 305 in the corresponding week of 1884; 280 in 1883, 236 in 1882, and 165 in 1881. This continues the marked decline in the total number of failures weekly during the last quarter of the year, as against 1884. The grand total of failures in the United States from Jan. 1 to Dec. 18 was 10,771, against 11,088 in a like portion of 1884, a decline of 316. The totals for fifty weeks of 1883, 1882 and 1881, respectively, were 9,591, 7,762 and 5,939. Special telegrams to Bradstreet's from leading business centers in portions of the West and Southwest report unseasonably mild weather, which resulted in bad roads, and, of necessity at various points, in a check to trade with interior merchants. In wholesale lines there was no special activity, but none was expected. Merchants generally feel confident that the new year will bring a better demand, which fact imparts a firm tone to most markets.

IRVING MILLER, having returned to Indianapolis from Brazil, states that only about fifty families remain of the Southerners who emigrated thither after the fall of the confederacy, and they have all lost their means in an attempt to raise cotton.... A destructive fire in St. Francis Xavier street, Montreal, destroyed the premises of the McDougall, Logie & Co., oil merchants, whose loss was $100,000. The total loss was over $150,000.... The lumber firm of W. C. Hyatt & Co., of Detroit, has suspended payment on paper estimated at $175,000. An assignment was made by R. Courteau & Co., cigar manufacturers at Montreal, with liabilities of $40,000.... The United States steamer Dolphin has left her anchorage in the Brooklyn navy yard for her trial trip. She will be out on her cruise about sixty days.

FIRE destroyed the link belt factory in Jefferson street, Chicago, causing a loss of $75,000. A conflagration at Tarentum, Penn., swept away buildings valued at $60,000. Damage to the amount of $10,000 was done to the Merrill Chemical Works, in Cincinnati. The dry-goods house of Brunet & Laurent, in Quebec, was destroyed. Twelve buildings were burned at Bartlett, Ohio.

FOREIGN.

A SERIOUS Cabinet crisis is said to be impending in Great Britain, says a London dispatch. "The landed and Democratic wings of the Conservative party are in apparently irreconcilable antagonism; the majority is solid against an Irish Parliament. Negotiations between the extreme Tories and the Whig wing of the Liberals have been renewed. The landed interests on both sides are jubilant over the prospect of defeating the Radicals and separationists. It is freely asserted in well-informed court circles that the Queen has taken means to make it known to the leaders of both political parties that the introduction of a measure creating a local Parliament for Ireland, with proper restrictions, would meet with the approval of the sovereign." The Daily Express, a Dublin paper which upholds the Loyalists, declares civil war in Ireland not unlikely if the demands of the Parnellites are granted. It says there will in such event be such a clashing of adverse interests that civil strife can scarcely be avoided.... The London police arrested a young man and his wife, named Magee, for uttering threats against the Prince of Wales unless he yielded to their demands for £750. They were given an examination and remanded for trial.... The Russian Governors of Southern Asia have been ordered to make preparations for the coronation of the Czar, which will take place in the spring.

THE evidence accumulates that the English Liberals are formulating a scheme for the creation of an Irish Parliament, by which the authority of the Crown and the supremacy of the Imperial Parliament are to be secured.... The Bank of England has advanced the rate of discount from 3 to 4 per cent.... Heavy snows are reported in the south of Italy.... By the recent cyclone at Aspinwall fifteen vessels sunk with their crews.

DISPATCHES from St. Petersburg announce a terrible dynamite explosion at the Pleijnchin Mine in Siberia. Several hundred persons are said to have been killed, but advices even as to the location of the mine are indefinite.... William Sheehan was convicted of the murder of his mother, brother, and sister in the County Cork, Ireland in 1877, and sentenced to be hanged Jan. 20.... Information from Koa Chung, in the province of Kwong Tung, China, states that a war has broken out between the neighboring villages of Ko and Ju, in which both villages have become almost exterminated, and nearly 400 people were burned alive in one of the sacred temples. Not a house in either village is left standing, and two-thirds of the inhabitants are dead.

THE leaders of the Salvation Army at London presented to the Home Secretary a petition a mile and a half long, bearing 200,000 signatures and weighing 560 pounds. This formidable document asks the release from prison of Editor Stead of the Pall Mall Gazette and Mrs. Rebecca Jarrett, who are in jail for abducting Eliza Armstrong.... The Grand Orange Lodge of Ireland, at a meeting held in Dublin, issued a manifesto addressed to the Orangemen of Great Britain, protesting against complying with the demands of the Parnellites. The four children bitten by a mad-dog at Newark, N. J., recently, have arrived in Paris, and are under treatment by M. Pasteur, the hydrophobin specialist.

ADDITIONAL NEWS.

MR. PARNELL has sent a letter to his colleagues with reference to the party's programme. He says that it would be unwise at present for the Nationalists to formulate their demands, and that they will therefore play a waiting game and watch the course of events.... Mr. James J. O'Kelly, Nationalist member of Parliament for Roscommon, said in an interview that there was now a good opportunity for settling the question of home rule, that Mr. Gladstone could confer an enormous benefit on England and Ireland, and that no one was more competent than Mr. Gladstone to solve the problem. The Irish party will hold a meeting in January to decide upon their policy in the coming Parliament.... Paris dispatch: "The four children from Newark, N. J., who were bitten by a mad dog and are now undergoing treatment at the hands of M. Pasteur are stopping at the Hotel Sorbonne, and will undergo a regular course of treatment. No opinion can yet be formed regarding the ultimate development of the virus."....A treaty of peace has been concluded between France and Madagascar. French troops are to occupy Tamatave until an indemnity of 10,000,000 francs is paid, and France will establish a protectorate over the whole country, with a resident at its capital to conduct its foreign affairs.... Counterfeit Bank of England notes of the denomination of £100, well executed, have been extensively circulated.

ADDITIONAL particulars have been received by way of El Paso, Texas, of the disastrous surprise of regular troops near Alena, N. M., by a band of Apache Indians. The detachment, comprising thirty-five men of the Eighth Cavalry, were quietly walking through a rocky defile in the mountains, about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, when, without a note of warning, the report of a dozen murderous rifles from the rocks above echoed along the mountain. The attack was so sudden, so well directed and timed, that the troops were thrown into a state of great disorder. Their horses became unmanageable, and the little cavalcade got away from the spot as quickly as possible, leaving the dead behind. After riding a short distance, and caring for the wounded, the troops dismounted and cautiously approached the spot where the attack was made. Upon scaling the mountains not an Indian was to be found. Surgeon Lieutenant Thomas J. C. Maddox, one Sergeant, and four troopers were almost instantly killed, and fell from their horses. Second Lieutenant D. C. Cabell and one Sergeant are believed to be fatally wounded, and four troopers slightly wounded.

SEVERAL members of the Cabinet have hit upon a happy scheme to avoid the trouble imposed upon them by persistent autograph fiends. They have had stamps prepared having on their faces the name of their respective departments and a facsimile of their signatures. All autograph books are turned over to the private secretaries, who apply the stamp to the page selected, and after blotting the impression it has the appearance of having been written by the Cabinet officers. No thought of a stamp enters the autograph hunter's mind, and he leaves with his book in his pocket, happy in the belief that he has added the signature of one more great man to his list.

A WILKESBARRE (PA.) special says: "When it was decided to abandon the efforts to rescue the twenty-four entombed miners at Nanticoke the town was distracted. Such a scene of grief is rarely witnessed. Several of the bereaved people were seized with convulsions. Fannie Sarver, sister of the two Sarver brothers, was prostrated with violent fits and died. Mrs. Kiveler, the old mother of the three Kiveler brothers, is at death's door from the shock, and many other relatives and friends of the victims were completely prostrated. The officials in charge of the rescuing expedition were forced to abandon all work from the air-shaft. Investigations showed that sand, rock, and culm had fallen to such an extent that the mine in which the imprisoned miners were was filled to the roof, and that the men are dead and beyond all human help."

THE locked-out employes of the Singer sewing machine factory at Elizabeth, N. J., numbering 3,500, have been set to work again.

PARNELL'S VICTORY.

Gladstone Ready to Give Ireland a Parliament with Sweeping Powers.

The British Kingdom Greatly Agitated Over the Sudden Turn of Affairs.

A Conflict of Opinion Among Political Leaders—The Editors Much Excited.

London dispatch.

Mr. Parnell has won. There is no longer any doubt that Mr. Gladstone will concede home rule of a sweeping kind. Of course the details of the eventual compromise are unknowable, but it is believed that, beyond stipulating for free trade and exacting guarantees of protection for the loyal minority in Ireland, everything will be yielded to Mr. Parnell. As the Gladstone programme is outlined, it contains a proviso that Ireland shall continue to send members to Westminster, but it is likely that he will give way on this point, as the Irish do not wish imperial representation. There will be a Dublin Parliament supreme over Irish affairs, over the police, taxation, courts, and all internal matters. This seems certain. But how it will be brought about is doubtful.

There is no question of Mr. Gladstone's ability to carry the great bulk of the Liberals for the measures, as the Liberal papers are rapidly vaulting to the home-rule side, but whether it will be done while the Liberals are in opposition or after their return to power is not seen. It must be remembered, too, that Lord Salisbury has it in his power to dissolve Parliament before the thing is done, and it is quite likely that he will do this, going to the country on a strenuous anti-Irish cry. There is immense excitement in London over the news. A dispatch from Dublin says the public here is intensely enthusiastic.

The following additional telegram was received from Mr. Gladstone at a late hour last night:

"My reply in regard to the Standard's statements applies also to those of the Pall Mall Gazette and Daily News. Although those statements were unauthorized, proposals may conveniently be canvassed.

"Only an Irish Parliament will meet the case. Local councils, etc., would be useless. The right to veto the acts of an Irish ministry would be an illusion. I propose instead the exercise of sovereign power on the part of a Minister responsible to the Imperial Parliament. The suggestion of an Irish privy council is unworthy of attention. The privy council survives only as a relic. The substitute is a cabinet. The questions of commerce and police are difficult ones, but with limitations I believe that home-rule may safely be granted, and that it would tend to raise the character of the Irish members."

The Press Association says that Mr. Gladstone, foreseeing the increase in strength of the Parnell party, drafted a scheme four months ago for the self-government of Ireland, according to which the power of veto by the Crown could be exercised only on the advice of a privy council convened especially to discuss the subject in question. The other points in the scheme were the same as already published. The project was submitted to a few political friends of Mr. Gladstone. Since the elections there have been no formal consultations on the subject, and it is not known whether or not the details of the scheme have since been modified. It is supposed that Mr. Goschen, who is almost certain to be Chancellor of the Exchequer in the next Gladstone Cabinet, will support the scheme.

The Standard deplores Mr. Gladstone's political profligacy.

The Morning Post predicts civil war.

The Times says: "The real danger is that, amid endless protestations against separation and illusory safeguards of imperial unity, the control of the Commons will be gone, and will never be recovered except by civil war. We trust Englishmen will see this before it is too late. It would be better to cut off connection absolutely and to prepare for dealing with Ireland as an open foe than to arm traitors by the farce of pretending to maintain unity without the power to enforce a single law disapproved at Dublin."

Sir Charles Dilke, in a speech at Chelsea last night, expressed anger at the action of the conservatives in rejecting proffered support. He said it was impossible for Lord Salisbury to expect the Liberals to give him a vote of confidence in addition to permitting him to remain in power. Sir Charles adhered to the views previously expressed by him on the Irish question.

Opinions of Various Leaders.

London special.

The opinions of various leaders have been sought on the subject of the Irish home-rule proposals, which have caused a great sensation in political circles. The Pall Mall Gazette having alleged that Earl Spencer had acquiesced in the scheme, Earl Spencer telegraphs: "No scheme of home rule has received my approval."

Mr. Chelders telegraphs that he has no knowledge whatever of Gladstone's alleged proposals.

Sir Charles Dilke says it is premature to discuss the subject.

Mr. Healy says he cannot express an opinion on the subject before his party meets.

Mr. O'Connor declares that Ireland will not be satisfied with less than Canada enjoys, and will not contribute to the British exchequer.

Mayor Sullivan, of Dublin says: "I cannot understand how any assembly can save what landlords call their interests. They will perish by the inexorable law of nature. The minorities creed of politics is as safe in Ireland as in England. Long home rule will be certain to work satisfactorily to both parties."

Queen Victoria Accepts the Inevitable.

London dispatch.

It is understood that the Queen has intimated her approval of the introduction into the Imperial Parliament of a suitable measure with provisions securing imperial control of a Parliament or a council for Ireland.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

THE relatives of Farmer Dickson, of Georgia, who left an estate of $100,000 to his mulatto children, have failed to break the will. The only proof that the deceased was of unsound mind was the singular request that he be buried with a gold toothpick in his right hand and a penknife in his vest pocket.

A TRADITION prevails among the Indians of Alaska that on Summer Island, one of a group about 4,000 feet high, with almost perpendicular sides, an extensive lake exists with shores and bottom of "glass rock," probably crystallized quartz. The Indians say that a kind of fog overhangs the mountain about half way up, which, when reached, takes a luckless hunter in its embrace and carries him away, never to be seen again. Hence they carefully avoid even landing on the island for fear of being spirited away.

A CHICAGO special says: Dr. James M. Hutchinson, one of the surgeons at the Cook County Hospital, performed a peculiar surgical operation. He says: "A young man of thirty-five years was taken to his mother's home, on Laflin street, on Nov. 4, sick. On Nov. 6 I was called to see him. He had led the rapid life of a bachelor who seldom goes home, and he had a fat, pouchy stomach on him. I made an incision and drew off three quarts of a milky-white fluid. I could not account for it. I could find no light in medical literature. I kept tapping him, and in twenty-seven days drew off eighteen gallons of the strange fluid. He was dropsical, but why the fluid was milky white I could not tell. I decided upon an investigation, and on Tuesday made an incision in the abdomen. I drained him out and made an opening six inches in length, laying the intestines bare. They looked natural, but I reached in under his liver and found a malignant sore—cancerous, I should say. Then I went for his spleen, and found it adhering to the abdominal wall. But this did not account for the milky color of the secretions, and I traced up the lacteal duct, which empties into the left sub-clavical vein, and found a rupture. The fluid, instead of going to nourish the body, had been going to color the matter in the abdominal cavity. I was satisfied. I closed up the opening in the duct, washed the man out, carbonized him, stitched up the opening; but I left a vent tube, and the man will get well."

WM. H. VANDERBILT'S social position was not considered very high. Like Mr. Gould, he was almost ignored by many of what are termed the best families. He is said to have been practically ignored by such families, for example, as the Astors, Livingstons, and Rhinelanders, the Van Rensselaers, Beekmans, and Roosevelts. They still thought there was a little too much of the nouveau riche about him; too much of the horse-jockey, and too little of the cultivation usually supposed to be associated with families whose wealth dates back further than yesterday. Still, whenever Mr. Vanderbilt gave a ball or an entertainment of any sort his stately parlors were crowded. The Astors, it may be added, went there on such occasions, even if they afterward made "party calls;" and as to the rest, more persons were glad to respond to his invitations whenever he sent them. His children, and especially his grandchildren, will have a much better social position, just as the Astors, descendants of John Jacob Astor, now stand well in the most exclusive society, though their famous ancestor enjoyed little or no social distinction.

He had, it is said, expressed some regret that he built his house where he did on Fifth avenue; it was too noisy and crowded; there was a ceaseless roll of equipages over the Belgian pavement, and the street, as the tide of population moved up-town, attracted such throngs, especially Sundays, that there was little sense of seclusion.

THE heir, the crown prince of the Vanderbilt dynasty, is Cornelius. The future railroad monarch is now about thirty-five years old, says a New York correspondent. His personal appearance is decidedly prepossessing. He is very tall and has an erect, slender, and graceful figure. His hair and eyes are very dark, and his face, which is clean-shaved with the exception of small, closely cut side whiskers, shows strength and decision in every line. He began his commercial education as a clerk in a broker's office, in Broad street, and, after being thoroughly grounded in the principles of business, was transferred to one of the clerical departments of the New York Central Railroad in the Grand Central Depot. There his position was by no means a sinecure, and he was obliged to perform exactly the same duties as his fellow clerks whose futures were less brilliant. By steady application and natural business ability, without one particle of favor being shown him, he gradually rose step by step, passing by degrees from one department to another and mastering successfully every detail of railroad management, until he had thoroughly fitted himself for the exalted position he now holds. It is probable that no one in this country is more thoroughly conversant with railroad methods than he is. Although most of his time is devoted to the care of the vast interests in his charge, Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt yet finds leisure to indulge his taste for art, of which he is an enthusiastic lover. His gallery of paintings in his splendid home on Fifth avenue and Fifty-seventh street is one of the finest in the city, and is constantly receiving additions.

THE launch of the Eureka at one of the Brooklyn yards, the other day, is one step in a notable experiment for doing away with steam in naval propulsion. The main idea in the new system is to drive the vessel forward or backward by the expulsion of gas from the submerged bow and stern against the water. The idea is not a new one among scientists, but it is claimed that in the Eureka it has been made practical for the first time. The vessel itself is of about seventy-five tons, being 100 feet by twelve, with a depth of seven feet. On each side, about eight feet forward of the stern-post, are two lid-covered ports, connected with chambers. There are also two forward ports of the same kind, and through these the discharges are made from a central point, those from the stern forcing the vessel forward, and vice versa, while a simultaneous discharge from a forward port and aft starboard chamber, and vice versa, will turn her sharply round in either direction. The engine only takes up six feet of room, and only enough power is required to compress air into a steel globe two feet in diameter, into which vaporized petroleum has been forced. The explosive material to be used has been kept a secret, but the New York Sun intimates it is a gas generated from oil and ignited by electricity. Should the experiment prove successful its application will be watched with great interest. It seems a daring move to try to dethrone King Steam, but invention grows bold in these days, and he would be rash who should say that people will not soon be exploded across the Atlantic.

DRS. DOUGLASS and Shrady, who used cocaine a great deal during General Grant's illness to relieve the pain, have been talking with a New York correspondent about its effects on their patient. Dr. Douglass said: "I never used it hypodermically or internally, and only in weak solutions. The effect on General Grant was most obnoxious. I used it on him first on Dec. 16, 1884. He came to my office and said he had not been able to swallow for several days, and a few moments after the application he was able to take a small drink of water. We did not feel justified in using it constantly, and for at least three months no applications were made. Later on we began again, and as the patient grew weaker and the pain became more intense we had to apply it frequently. The General was never allowed to treat himself, and a physician always watched him when it was administered. We never dared to administer more than a four per cent. solution of it, for the case was too grave to experiment with. I have General Grant's own opinion of cocaine as an anæsthetic, and some day I may publish it. It is not the use, but the abuse, of cocaine that the papers should decry." Dr. Shrady said that he thought the discovery a great blessing, but thought it would be confined to narrower fields of operation than people supposed. He said: "Dr. Leonard Corning has recently invented a process whereby by the construction of that part of the body to be anæsthetized the power of the drug can be concentrated to the field of operation, and a much weaker solution of the cocaine can be used. This prevents the drug coming in contact with the greater part of the blood, and there can be no deleterious effect. If this proves to be what is claimed for it, all will be well. Cocaine is going to prove a valuable aid in therapeutics, but, like all drugs, it can not be trifled with."

MEN OF NOTE.

Don Carlos, the Spanish Pretender.

By the death of Alfonso XII. the claims of Don Carlos to the throne of Spain have been revived. Don Carlos, who insists that he is the rightful heir to the throne of Spain, would be heir to the throne if the Salic law, which formerly governed the succession in Spain and prohibited the succession of a female, had not been abolished by King Alfonso's grandfather, Ferdinand VII. in order to secure the crown to his daughter, Isabella II., Alfonso's mother.

Don Carlos claims that Ferdinand had no right to abolish the Salic law; that it is, therefore, still in force in Spain, and that he is King by right. The growth of public sentiment is, however, in favor of liberal government, and the possibility of Don Carlos, who represents ultramontane bigotry and intolerance, being called into power, is very remote. A republic might be a possibility if the Republicans were united among themselves, but they are not. Their leaders are divided; there is no cohesion in the Republican party. Besides, the Catholic Church and the property interests, two powerful factors in the politics of Spain, fear a republic and are opposed to it. Don Carlos was born March 30, 1848. His father, Don Juan, was the brother of Charles VI. of Spain. As Charles VI. died without issue his rights devolved upon his brother and subsequently to the present Don Carlos. The latter was educated in Austria, and was married in 1867 to Margaret de Bourbon, sister of the present Comte de Chambord (Henry VI.) of France. In 1872 the adherents of Don Carlos raised his standard in the north of Spain, and in July of that year he published a proclamation addressed to the inhabitants of Catalonia, Aragon, and Valencia, calling upon them to take up arms in his cause. Don Carlos made his entry into Spain in 1873, and the various governments from time to time in power at Madrid strove in vain to suppress the revolution. When Alfonso was called to the throne Don Carlos issued another proclamation calling upon his volunteers to continue in their efforts, exhorting them to remember their many brilliant achievements, and that they were fighting for the welfare of Spain. He also promised them to reform the government should he come to power. Alfonso's forces, however, made continued advances, forcing the Carlists, who fought with desperation, to Tolosa. In January, 1876, this, their last stronghold, fell. Their leaders sought refuge in France. July 18, 1881, Carlos was expelled from France on the ground of his having ostentatiously allied himself with the partisans of the Comte de Chambord. Don Carlos has five children—the Infanta Blanca, born in 1868; Infante Jaime, born in 1870; Infanta Elvira, born in 1871; Infanta Betrix, born in 1874, and Infanta Alix, born in 1876.

Don Carlos is a true scion of Bourbon, lilies and all. Since Henry V. of France refused the crown because the deputies would not permit him to change the tricolor for the fleur-de-lis, there has been no such royal antiquarian upon the European political stage as Don Carlos. Both preserve the traditions of the fifteenth century with a tenacity born and bred in centuries of communal institutions, and as difficult to separate as life itself. The Don will not sanction the marriage of his son and the infanta sired by Alfonso, because he considers the mesalliance would ruin his chances to the throne.

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

Ex-Congressman Sidney Clarke's Comprehensive Measure to Open Up a Part of the Indian Nation.

Ex-Congressman Sidney Clarke, of Kansas, has prepared a bill to be presented to Congress organizing the new Territory of Oklahoma. The boundaries include the country within the present limits of Indian Territory known as Oklahoma, and the public land strip north of the Pan-Handle of Texas. The bill provides for all the necessary machinery for the executive, legislative, and judicial functions of a complete Territorial Government. The Indian tribes who had absolute titles by patent from the United States are exempted from the operations of the bill. The unoccupied Oklahoma land and the public land strip are declared to be a part of the public domain and opened to settlement under the homestead law, embracing about 7,000,000 acres.

Another section of the bill disposes of the unoccupied portion of the Cherokee Strip west of 96 degrees of longitude to actual settlers only in tracts not to exceed 160 acres, at $1.25 per acre, the proceeds to be placed to the credit of the Cherokees, less the cost of sale and the appropriations already made for the payment of said land.

For the purpose of securing the assignment of homesteads in severalty to the Indians of the various tribes, their education and civilization, the reduction of the reservations, and the sale and settlement of the surplus lands, and the final adjustments of all questions relating to Indians, a commission is authorized to be appointed by the President, composed of three civilians and two military officers. Full authority is given to the commission, under the direction of the President, to enter into such negotiations with the Indians as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of the act.

FOOD FOR FLAMES.

A Detroit Family of Four Persons Perish in Their Burning House.

An Oregon Crazy Woman's Insane Act—Other Fatalities by Fire.

A DETROIT FAMILY CREMATED.

Frank Knoch, His Wife, and Two Children Perish in Their Burning Building.

Detroit special.

The house of Frank Knoch, a market gardener living in the suburbs of Detroit, was destroyed by fire at an early hour this morning. In the flames perished Frank Knoch, aged 26; Susan Whitman Knoch, his wife, aged 22; George Knoch, their eldest child, aged 3 years; Frank Albert Knoch, a babe.

The origin of the fire, the hour of its beginning, or any of the circumstances attending its outbreak, or the efforts of the family to escape, are alike unknown. The fact of the sad fate of the entire family is apparent in the three charred and blackened bodies, out of which every semblance of humanity has disappeared. These are the bodies of the father, mother, and one of the children—which one it would be impossible to say, for the shriveled little form has nothing distinctive. A few bones of the back and a twisted limb are about all that remain. Nothing could be more horrible than the sight of these remains as they were laid together in a heap beside the smoldering ruins in which the search for the other child was being prosecuted.

It is learned that B. Joseph Knun, George Lamrin, and James Whipple were returning from their lodge meeting about 1:30 o'clock. The house of Knoch was burning and they raised the alarm, but it was too late. The entire structure was in flames, and by the time they reached it the roof had fallen in and the walls had begun to fall. There was nothing to be done in the way of suppressing the flames. The water supply was limited to the well, which was inclosed in a kitchen. The creek below was a full quarter of a mile distant and covered with ice, and the men were helpless. They gathered snow and ice and attempted to beat out the flames, but their efforts were futile. For a moment the floor of the house withstood the flames, and in that instant they saw the remains of the family, which almost immediately sank into the cellar. Willing hands cast aside the charred rafters and beams, and in a few minutes the bodies of Knoch and his wife, apparently clasped in each other's embrace, were exposed. The effort to lift them out was attended with difficulty, as they crumbled away on being touched. But by slipping beneath them some planks they were taken up and brought into the snow. Then it was seen that the body of a child was between them, but only one. Shortly after ten o'clock the searchers came to what they supposed to be the remains of the other child. There was scarcely anything left; certainly nothing by which it could be distinguished as being the younger or older one. What remained was taken out and placed with the rest. The Knoch family were sober, industrious German Lutheran people.

Frank Knoch was known to have money in the house, which he had been saving to make some payments. The searchers in the ruins found a revolver, and it is said Knoch never owned one. These two facts led to the suspicion that murder was committed for the sake of robbery, and the building then fired to cover up the crime. The position in which the ashes of the family were lying would seem to oppose this opinion. However, nothing is definitely known, everything about the house having been completely consumed. One body was not at first found, and it was thought the flames had entirely devoured it. Later the searchers found the crumbling ashes of what had once been the youngest child. The Coroner's jury met and adjourned till later in the week.

A CRAZY WOMAN'S DEED.

She Fires Her House and Cremates Herself and Four Children.

Olympia (Wash. Ter.) telegram.

At Long Prairie, about eight miles from this place, a deplorable event occurred. Mrs. Miner, a relative of Mr. David Chambers, had for some time manifested symptoms of insanity, and, according to report, she last evening saturated papers with coal oil and distributed them around the house, telling one of her children, on inquiry, that she was wetting them with water. Early this morning she made the remark that she was about to destroy the whole family, and her husband, fearing that she was about to attempt his life, proceeded to put her out of the room, but on opening the door discovered the house in flames. Reaching the front door with one of his children, he found it locked and the key removed; thereupon he ran to the back door and found it nailed up. Finally he and his little daughter succeeded in escaping through a window, but were both badly burned. The unfortunate woman, with her four other children, was burned to death.

LOCKED THE DOOR.

A Colored Father's Imprisoned Children Burned to Death.

Starkville (Miss.) dispatch.

A negro man, by the name of Bladen, living near Starkville, absented himself from his home several hours, locking his three little children in the house. When he returned the building was reduced to ashes, and all that was left of his children were a few bones and charred flesh.

DEADLY GASOLINE.

A Little Boy Burned to a Crisp at Cleveland.

Cleveland dispatch.

William White, a telegraph operator, living at No. 36 Ontario street, was engaged in cleaning his little son's dress with gasoline. The father had stepped from the room for an instant, and when he returned he found that the fluid had ignited, and that his child, aged three years, had been burned to a crisp. The mother was away from home at the time.

Notes and News.

It is to be regretted that in some portions of Michigan there are a few democrats who seek to annoy the administration by entering objections to certain of President Cleveland's appointments. For the most part the "other feller" is the most conspicuous in raising the fuss. This should not be. If a disreputable or incompetent person is named for a position, or underhanded methods are used to thrust a person into office contrary to the wishes of a community, then it is right and proper that the candidate should be defeated and the scheme frustrated. But when a choice is made of a good man from several perhaps equally as good, the situation should be at once accepted. There may be grounds for the objections now made to some of the Michigan appointments, but it is fair to presume that they are no more serious than when at first entered. If ever a president stood fair and square to the pledges of his party, and against pressure that would weaken nine hundred and ninety nine men out of one thousand, that man is President Cleveland. In offering obstacles in the way pointed out, democrats not only annoy the administration needlessly, but give the republicans material to work upon, and also jeopardize the interests of the democratic party.—Big Rapids Herald.

The Detroit Free Press is spending some of its surplus profits in the finest advertising matter we have ever seen. The latest received is a finely engraved card, representing the Free Press Christmas greeting extended around the world, and showing the mammoth building in which it is printed, with facsimiles of the the first page and statements of circulation of each edition, viz: Daily, Weekly, and London. The combined circulation of the Detroit and London editions of the Weekly amounts to over 200,000 copies per week.

We live in the nineteenth century. As a matter of fact, we are veterans of the nineteenth century, having lived in it long enough to bring us to the verge of the twentieth. Since the year 1800 was born the world has made great progress. The American republic has grown to be one of the greatest nations of the globe. Steam has carried the commerce of the earth over land and water. Electricity has brought the to-morrow of Europe into to-day of the United States. The human voice has gained its power to reach for miles through the telephone.

Last Thursday was a red-letter day in the office of the Clare News-Argus, which, on that day, enlarged from a six-column folio to a five column quarto, changed its name to the Clare Democrat, and printed its edition on a bright pink book paper. One by one the democratic press of the country takes a long step forward, showing unmistakable signs of substantial prosperity.

At Cadillac, matters are assuming such shape that it looks almost certain that the T., A. A. & N. M. R. R. will be extended to that city from St. Louis during the coming season, and will eventually seek a harbor on Lake Michigan. Frankfort and Traverse City are live candidates for the honors of the terminus.

An Anecdote of Leonard Bacon.

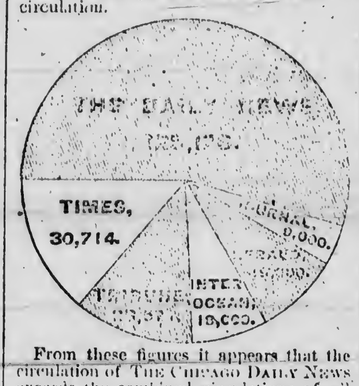
I am reminded of a characteristic anecdote of the venerated Leonard Bacon. New Haven's theological seminary had one particularly promising student in a class that graduated a few years before Dr. Bacon died. He had done wonderful things in a literary way; he was known of all the college for his originality, his depth, and his brilliancy. And when the time came for graduation this extraordinary young man, whose face was not set against parade, read his commencement thesis before a club whose members included not only many of Yale's upper classes, but representatives of the faculty and prominent congregational clergymen. Dr. Bacon was a member; likewise Dr. Beecher was sent on this particular evening, and with the rest he gave close attention to the reading, nor was he without evidence of interest as one by one conspicuous members of the club rose to discuss the paper, and complimented the brilliant student on the brain power that had given him such a mastery of metaphysics. Finally came his turn when everybody else had exhausted their adjectives. At first he had determined to say nothing, for people who write and chew Leonard Bacon understood how in the end he could not longer restrain himself. He didn't say much. This was all: "I liked this evening's paper, too.—I always did like it." I liked it forty years ago when I first read it. I like it now. As one of the things that will last. And I am delighted to discover such excellent taste in this young man who so judiciously copies it for us." If any of the rest of the club desire to make notes I will gladly loan the volume containing it." But that plagiarizing man wasn't criticised. He is now pastor of a rich church in Times.

The Chicago Daily News

Has the Largest Daily Circulation in America.

Its issue for the year 1884 averaged 125,178 copies daily, and it is now regularly printing over 130,000 papers a day.

The magnitude of this unequaled circulation is best appreciated when it is said that it exceeds the circulations of all other Chicago dailies combined. Taking from the three standard newspaper directories—Ayer & Son's Annual, Rowell's Directory and Hubbard's Directory—the quotations which most nearly represent the actual circulations of the Chicago press, the following diagram correctly illustrates their relative positions as to extent of circulation.



From these figures it appears that the circulation of THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS exceeds the combined circulations of all the other Chicago dailies by 19,823 copies daily. The reasons for this phenomenal success are obvious:

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is a complete newspaper in all that constitutes the best type of American journalism.

It is a member of the Associated Press, and is the only 2 cent paper in the West that possesses this first essential to a complete news service. In addition, it has its own private wire (by lease from the Western Union Telegraph Co.) connecting its Chicago office with New York and Washington, at both of which points it has its own news bureaus. THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS prints ALL the news.

It is an independent paper. It recognizes the utility of political parties as means for the accomplishment of proper ends, but it declines to regard any mere party as a fit subject for unquestioning adoration. It seeks the patronage of intelligent, thoughtful, honest people, who love country more than party.

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is a "short and to the point" paper. It believes that newspaper reading is but an incident of the day, not its chief business. It accordingly serves to the "Gradgrind sheets" the monopoly of tiresome and worthless information. It seeks to say all that the reader should care to read, and to say it in the shortest possible manner. It is a daily paper for busy people.

It is a clean paper, fit for the family circle. It is a cheap paper—2 cents per day, 12 cents per week, 50 cents per month, $6.00 per year. Sold by all news dealers throughout the Northwest. Mailed to any address, post paid, upon receipt of price.

Where the facilities of a daily mail are not enjoyed THE CHICAGO WEEKLY NEWS is recommended as "the next best." It is a large 8 page, 64 column paper, carefully made up to meet all the varying needs of the family circle. It is the largest "dollar weekly" in America. It is equal to the best.

OLD NEWSPAPERS FOR SALE

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage, made and executed on the twenty-sixth day of August, A. D. 1881, by Eliza Petegnoun, of Charlevoix county, Michigan, of the first part, to William B. Sargent, of Rock Island, Illinois, of the second part, recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for said county of Charlevoix, on the twelfth day of September, A. D. 1881, in liber "4" of Mortgages, on page 336, which mortgage was on the second day of March, A. D. 1885, assigned by said William B. Sargent to Margaret K. Blackmer, of Berrien county, Michigan, said assignment being recorded on the fourth day of March, A. D. 1885, in liber "10" of mortgages, in the registry of said county, on page 639; by virtue of which default the power of sale in said mortgage contained has become operative; and whereas, at the date of this notice, there is claimed to be due upon said mortgage for principal and interest the sum of forty-five and 58-100 dollars [$45.58]; and whereas, no suit or proceedings have been instituted at law to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained and of the statutes of the state of Michigan in such cases made and provided, the undersigned will sell at public auction or vendue, to the highest bidder, on Tuesday, the Nineteenth day of January, A. D. 1886, at 12 o'clock noon of that day, at the front door of Loveday's Hall, in the village of East Jordan, in said county of Charlevoix (that being the place for holding the Circuit Court for said county), the premises described in said mortgage, or sufficient thereof to satisfy said indebtedness, interest thereon, and costs, solicitor's or attorney's fee, and expenses of sale; said premises being described in said mortgage as follows: The east half of the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section twenty-five (25), in township thirty-four [34] north of range seven [7] west, containing twenty acres more or less, according to the United States survey thereof, together with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining.

Dated Charlevoix, Mich., October 14th, 1885.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the condition of a certain mortgage, made by Mary Blackbird to John A. Bacot, dated October 3d, A. D. 1884, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, on the 3d day of October, A. D. 1884, in liber 8 of mortgages, on page 522, which said mortgage was on the 22d day of December, 1884, assigned by said John A. Bacot to Frederick W. Mayne, said assignment being on record in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 10 of mortgages on page 610, and on the 14th day of December 1885, was assigned by said Frederick W. Mayne to Hugh Miller, said assignment being recorded in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 13 of mortgages, on page 146, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of One hundred and ninety six and 15-100 dollars, as principal and interest, and no suit or proceedings at law having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof. Now, therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and the statute in such case made and provided, notice is hereby given that on Saturday, the 13th day of March, A. D. 1886, at one o'clock in the afternoon, I shall sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the town hall in the village of East Jordan, (that being the place where the Circuit Court for Charlevoix County is holden,) the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with ten per cent interest, and all legal costs, together with an attorney's fee of fifteen dollars, covenanted for therein, the premises being described in said mortgage as all that parcel of land, situate in the township of Hayes, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, and known and described as follows: The south west quarter (¼) of section thirty-six (36) township thirty four (34) north of range seven (7) west, containing forty acres according to the United States survey.

Dated Charlevoix, Mich., Dec. 15, 1885.

HUGH MILLER, Assignee of Mortgagee.

FREDERICK W. MAYNE, Attorney for Assignee of Mortgagee.

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage, made and dated the 14th day of September, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four, executed by Hemming Frizzell to the Pine Lake Iron Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, and doing business in the County of Charlevoix, in the State of Michigan, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of the said County of Charlevoix, in Liber 11 of mortgages at page 11, on the 18th day of April, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-five, at one o'clock in the afternoon, and the same is now owned by the said Pine Lake Iron Company. And whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of Fifty-Five Dollars and Twenty-two cents, principal and interest, which sum is a part of the purchase price of the premises herein described, and a further sum of fifteen dollars provided by law as an attorney's fee in the foreclosure of said mortgage, which is the whole amount claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage, and no suit or proceedings at law or in chancery having been instituted to recover the debt now remaining secured by the said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in the said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises herein described at public auction to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in the township of South Arm, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, which is the place of holding the circuit court for said county, on Friday, the 2d day of April next, at twelve o'clock meridian, which premises are described in the said mortgage as follows, to wit: Lots twenty (20) and twenty-one (21) in block number twelve (12) in the Pine Lake Iron Co.'s plat of Ironton, town of Evelyn, county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan.

Dated December 30th, A. D. 1885.

The reading room will be open every day after next Monday from 9 a. m. to 9 p. m., under the charge of Miss Effie Berdan, librarian. Papers and magazines will be supplied, and an effort made to make this one of the pleasant places in which to spend the winter days and long evenings. There is a desire on the part of some to have the room open on Sundays, but this, it seems to us, is imposing too much on the good nature of the librarian. With the liberty of drawing books, most people can supply themselves with sufficient reading matter to stay at home on Sunday.

Rev. John D. Potter is conducting an interesting series of union meetings at the Congregational church this week, which promise more than usual excellent results to the churches composing the union. He is a fluent speaker, and discusses his subjects in a calm, dignified manner, without the fire and excitement usual to evangelists, yet he never fails to strike deep into the hearts of his hearers. Another departure from ordinary revivals is the holding of meetings at 10:30 a. m. every day for the benefit of business men, who are urged to close their places of business and give the meetings their attention.

Communication.

There has not been a time in the last few years when the Christmas enjoyments at the M. E. church were so great, nor participated in by so many. The decorations were of a high order, and elicited many expressive compliments. In the midst of the enjoyment, Lieut. Gov. Buttars called a halt, and requested W. A. Smith to step forward, which by some effort he did. Mr. Buttars then said:—

"Mr. Smith:—I am requested by your friends in this church and congregation to convey to you their good wishes and sincere thanks for your long and eminent services as musical director in church and Sunday school, and to present you with this beautiful cane, upon which you may lean in the years to come, with the reflection of the appreciation of the donors."

The cane is of solid ebony, with a rich and beautifully chased gold head, appropriately engraved. The gift was a spontaneous testimony of the church and its friends of their appreciation of Mr. Smith's services.

THE LAST PIPE.

When head is sick, and brain doth swim,
And heavy hangs each unstrung limb,
'Tis sweet, through smoke-puffs, wreathing slow,
To watch the firelight flush and glow,
As each soft cloud floats up on high,
Some worry takes its wings to fly;
And Fancy dances with the flame,
Who lay so labor-cramped and lame;
While the spent Will, the slack Desire,
Rekindle at the dying fire,
And burn to meet the morrow's sun
With all its day's work to be done.

The tedious tangle of the Law—
Your work ne'er done without some flaw;
Those ghastly streets that drive one mad,
With children joyless, elders sad,
Young men unmanly, girls going by
Bold-voiced, with eyes unmaidenly;
Christ died two thousand years agone,
And kingdom come still all unwon;
Your own slack self, that will not rise
Wide-hearted, for the great enterprise—
Well, all these dark thoughts of the day,
As thin smoke's shadow, drift away.

And see, those magic mists unclose,
And a girl's face amid them grows—
The very look she's wont to wear;
The wild-rose blossoms in her hair;
The wondrous depths of her pure eyes;
The maiden soul that 'neath them lies—
That fears to meet, yet will not fly
Your stranger spirit drawing nigh.
What if our times seem sliding down?
She lives, creation's flower and crown.
What if your way seems dull and long?
Each tiny triumph over wrong,
Each effort up through sloth and fear,
And she and you are brought more near.

So, rapping out those ashes light,
"My pipe, you've served me well to-night."

EDITH'S PUNISHMENT.

BY HELEN E. STANDIFORD.

Rodbrook Farm, extending over many hundred acres of rich prairie land, and embracing within its limits a forest of valuable timber, was indeed a property of which its possessor might be proud.

So thought Edith Norton, as she paused for a moment in her walk through the grove of magnificent oak trees, on whose edge the farm-house was located. No wonder that a smile of triumph overspread her face, and her eyes sparkled, as she thought how excellent were her prospects for becoming mistress of this vast estate. She was fairly amazed at her own success, for in two short months she had succeeded in fascinating young Albert Rodbrook, a shy country lad, who had nevertheless grown bold enough to declare his love for this bewitching, graceful girl, with her city manners and dainty clothes.

She was a visitor at the house of her aunt, whose sign in front of a very modest dwelling in the adjoining village read:

MRS. HARGRAVE,
DRESSMAKER AND MILLINER.

This lady and Miss Peeriam, housekeeper at the Farm, were cronies of many years standing. Thus it happened that not long after Edith's arrival she met young Rodbrook, not at a church sociable or other gathering, where his timidity would probably have prevented him from addressing her, but in this identical grove of oak trees, through which she was passing to deliver some message from her aunt.

A huge mastiff, usually chained in his kennel near the stable, had broken loose and sprang upon her as she neared the house. Her cries attracted the attention of Albert, at that moment coming from a rear door. Advancing to the rescue, like some knight of old, he silenced the animal, thereby earning a look of gratitude that set his heart to beating far more rapidly than was its wont.

He was dazzled from the first, and Edith, with her natural graces and superior knowledge of the world, took care that the spell should not be broken.

She had resumed her walk, and presently the old house came in sight. A careless observer could hardly have failed to be impressed with the charming surroundings and attractive appearance of the place, despite its evident age and old-fashioned adornments. True, the bricks had crumbled in some of the more exposed portions, and the roof of one of the wings was in evident need of repair, but most of the ravages of time were hidden by masses of ivy and Virginia creeper. The porch at the side of the house was fairly covered with the latter, while immense bushes of lilacs and snow-balls grew in close proximity to the front windows. The flower garden bore marks of having at some time received careful attention. Beds were artistically arranged, walks laid out, and numerous supports erected for the vines and larger plants. But it was further evident that, for the past year at least, the vegetation had been allowed to grow without human aid or interference.

Some of those flowers, self-sown in a previous season, which had the hardihood to confront a mass of weeds, showed glimpses of bright color here and there, but many of their associates, whose duty it was to bloom at this time of the year, were sickly, spindling stalks, bearing a few leaves and no blossoms whatever. The shrubbery needed trimming; the ornamental railing was broken down, and the whole was characterized by that air of neglect which frequently visits a garden when the owner dies or removes to foreign parts.

Jacob Rodbrook, grandfather of Albert, had been a famous horticulturist, and had taken an immense amount of pride and pleasure in the cultivation of these plots. Since his death the entire place had been left chiefly to the care of servants.

Of his two sons, the elder had married early, and died a few years afterward, leaving a widow and one child, the hero of our story. The other was a wanderer in strange lands. His love of adventure had led him from country to country, from one continent to another, until he was now believed to have visited nearly every part of the globe. Nor had his father disapproved of this mode of life. After spending a few hundreds in the purchase of a suitable outfit for his son, no further outlay on the old gentleman's part was required, Jane being able to maintain his independence in whatever part of the world he found himself.

Upon receiving the intelligence of his father's demise, he had written to inform his nephew that his return might be expected during the following winter.

Albert's mother had soon followed her husband to the grave, leaving their little boy to the care of his grandparent and Miss Peeriam.

As Edith gazed upon the varied beauties of the scene, bathed in a flood of morning sunshine, to her ambitious mind several improvements had already suggested themselves.

"I should have that wing torn down and a new porch built, running the whole length of the house," she was thinking, when Albert Rodbrook emerged from a side-path and stood before her.

His beaming face showed sufficiently the pleasure that the meeting afforded him, and her greeting was as affectionate as his own.

"I have some news to tell you," he said, as they stood for a few moments in the shade of a gigantic oak. "My Uncle James is coming home, and may be here this week."

"Your Uncle James?" she said, in some surprise.

Until this moment she had never even heard of the existence of this member of the Rodbrook family. His long absence had done much toward effacing his memory from the minds of Elmdale's residents, and it chanced that during Edith's short visit no one had mentioned his name to her.

"Yes," replied Albert. "Have I never told you about him? I was a child when he started on his travels, and scarcely remember how he looked. He wrote last winter that he might be at home next Christmas, but it seems he has altered his plans, and is coming sooner."

"Is he married?" asked Edith.

"No, he is an old bachelor."

During the remainder of the walk up to the house, in which Albert accompanied her, Edith was silent and thoughtful, so much so that Albert inquired if she were not feeling well.

"Perfectly," she answered. "I am only a little tired from the long walk I have taken."

"We will have Miss Peeriam give us a lunch, and, after you are rested, will you play one of those new pieces for me?"

Edith assented, and they went into the house. At the foot of the great staircase they met a young girl, perhaps a few years Edith's junior, who blushed deeply as she saw them. This was Agnes Draper, who had once been Albert's playmate, and, until Miss Norton's arrival, the only young woman with whom he was ever known to stop and converse. He now greeted her rather indifferently, while his companion beamed upon her with the utmost cordiality.

Her appearance formed a striking contrast to that of the city girl. She was plainly dressed in a dark print, with coarse shoes and a brown straw hat. Edith wore a dainty lawn, edged with lace and looped up with ribbon bows. Yet Mr. Draper was a wealthy farmer who could well afford to deck his daughter with "gew-gaws," as he called them, while Mr. Norton struggled hard to maintain a large family on his clerk's salary of five hundred a year.

Agnes had also come on some errand connected with Miss Peeriam's department, and remained but a few moments.

Albert and Edith were soon seated before the ancient pianoforte, where she was playfully instructing him in the first principles of music, a course of study which he occasionally varied by discussing his plans for the future.

They had already decided that their marriage should take place as soon as possible after he had attained his twenty-first birthday. For the present, the whole matter was to be kept a secret. His guardian, Lawyer Holden, had arranged for him to spend the next six months at a business college, there to supplement what knowledge he had acquired under the tuition of the schoolmaster.

"After that," he said to Edith, "I shall be my own master, and can manage affairs to suit myself."

"And the first use you will make of your freedom will be to leave home and see something of the world."

"Not unless you are with me," said Albert, putting his arm around her waist.

She smiled, a self-satisfied smile, and professed her intention of departing for the village. He accompanied her, and so busily were they engaged in conversation that they had neared her aunt's house and were observed by that lady herself before he turned to retrace his footsteps.

Edith was scarcely seated in the little room which served as shop and parlor when her aunt began. "Seems to me young Rodbrook is getting wonderfully attentive to you. What does it all mean?"

Edith considered a moment, then thought best to make a confidante of her aunt.

"He has asked me to marry him," she replied, somewhat proudly.

"Well, well," said her relative, evidently surprised, "you are both rather young to think of getting married, but he may be a rich man some day."

"May be!" repeated Edith, with heightened color. "Doesn't the farm, or part of it, belong to him?"

"Bless your heart, no. His grandfather made a will leaving it all to Albert's uncle, that's traveling in some heathenish country, and if he dies without any children, it goes to the grandson."

"How unjust," said Edith, "to cut his oldest son's child off in that way."

"I suppose he didn't want the farm divided, and it's pretty certain James will never marry. Besides, he always said that he believed in a young man's starting out for himself. Albert gets an allowance of three hundred every year until he's twenty-one. Then I hear he is going to study for a book-keeper or cashier."

Three hundred a year, and that to cease at the end of six months. How suddenly had all of Edith's air-castles fallen to the ground. Instead of owning this vast estate, her lover was a poor boy, hardly better off in this world's goods than herself.

She was too proud, however, to allow Mrs. Hargrave to witness her chagrin, and merely requesting the latter not to mention her engagement, she went to her room.

Then she thought over the matter long and earnestly. It had been a great disappointment to learn how Albert's pecuniary affairs stood; but, then, there was a possibility of his some day being a wealthy man, that is, if another plan which had half shaped itself in her mind, while she frequently glanced in the mirror opposite, did not succeed.

Her recent conquest had increased the vanity natural to her disposition, and she scarcely doubted her ability to charm any lord of creation she might encounter.

She wound up her meditations by resolving to treat Albert, for the present at least, as if these disagreeable tidings had never reached her ears.

There was only one more meeting of the youthful lovers before Albert was obliged to depart for a distant city. Then he informed Edith that his uncle had arrived, and so far had been very generous to him.

"I should like to have you see him," he whispered, as they stood on the little porch in front of Mrs. Hargrave's residence, bidding each other farewell; "but you leave for home so soon I suppose it will be impossible this summer. He has a great many legal matters to look after, and spends nearly every day in the city."

Edith thought differently, but she changed the subject, and inquired if he would not spend Christmas at Elmdale.

"I hardly think so. Mr. Holden is anxious for me to devote every minute to my studies, and I should lose nearly a week by coming home; but I will write often, and you know how eagerly I shall look for your letters."

There was much more said in a tender, confidential undertone, many vows of constancy exchanged, and then Albert went on his way, cheered by the thought that the girl he loved was interested in his welfare and cared for his success in the new path he was about to pursue.

Mrs. Hargrave was not a little surprised when Edith announced her intention of spending another fortnight in Elmdale; but the girl was lively and companionable, besides affording her considerable assistance in the dressmaking line; so she raised no objection.

One day, when the elder lady was employed elsewhere, Edith donned her freshest muslin, and slipping a roll of music under her arm, set out for the Rodbrook mansion. Miss Peeriam readily gave her permission to practice the songs she had brought, and presently Edith's fingers were wandering over the keys. She played on, apparently unconscious that there was a listener in the next room, though she had caught a glimpse of him as she passed the half-opened door. A tall, grave man of forty-five or thereabout, deeply engaged in the perusal of a volume before him, he did not observe her light footsteps in the hall.

Not until the sound of music fell upon his ears did he glance toward the parlor in some bewilderment. It was years since he had heard the old instrument, a gift of his mother, when she came a bride to the farmhouse, and he wondered now who could have the audacity to open it.

He arose and went into the hallway. Edith's back was toward him; but presently she turned to reach for some music, and he beheld, with a thrill of admiration, the delicate profile, surmounted by masses of rippling hair. She had finished the accompaniment to the song she was practicing, and commenced an old Scotch air, which he remembered having heard his mother play in years gone by.

He stood for a moment as if rooted to the spot, and before he could make up his mind to retreat she had left off playing and turned to encounter his gaze.

She started slightly, and James Rodbrook advanced into the room.

"I beg your pardon," he said, "but your playing charmed me so that I came nearer to listen."

She smiled reassuringly. "It is I who ought to apologize for taking possession of the room, but Miss Peeriam said I might use the piano, and I thought we were the only persons in the house. Mr. Rodbrook, I presume."

He bowed and considered what next to say. For several years he had been unaccustomed to ladies' society, and at the outset it did not appear easy to continue a conversation with this fair girl.

"Have I the pleasure of addressing one of my neighbors?" he inquired at length.

"My aunt, Mrs. Hargrave, lives in Elmdale, but I am only a visitor at her house. My name is Norton."

"But she is not the Millie Norton who married Sam Hargrave?"

"Yes, that was my uncle's name."

"Poor Sam. I heard of his death when I was in South Africa. We were boys together, and often played truant from school to go hickory-nutting."

"He was always ready for any expedition of that kind," responded Edith. "His nephews and nieces generally had a good time when they came to visit Uncle Sam."

There was another pause, then Edith said:

"I wish I could find the words of that old song. There are only a few lines that I can remember."

"The one you were playing as I came in?" he asked.

"Yes, sir."

"I believe that I have them stored away in an old trunk upstairs. At least I packed up a great many of those Scotch pieces, and, if I remember rightly, that was among them. I will look for it this afternoon."

"I couldn't think for a moment of putting you to so much trouble."

"It will be a pleasure, and if I succeed in finding it, and you will allow me, I will take it around to your aunt's house this evening."

There was a little dash of triumph in Edith's eyes, but she cast them down modestly, and he did not perceive it.

"Auntie will be very glad to see you, I am sure," she said demurely.

Thus it was settled that he should call at Mrs. Hargrave's, and so pleasantly was he entertained that the visit was repeated several times during the ensuing fortnight.

Many and varied were the comments which this proceeding elicited from the village gossips. Some of them were of the opinion that his attentions were bestowed upon Mrs. Hargrave, who was his junior by several years, but it soon became apparent that her beautiful niece was the attraction.

So rapidly had their acquaintanceship progressed that when Edith left for her home he had obtained permission to call there on the occasion of his next trip to the city.

To her mother and sisters she gave a glowing account of his evident devotion, and they were not surprised when the brief courtship resulted in an engagement shortly after his arrival.

Mr. Norton, poor, hard-working man, was glad to know that one of his daughters would be well provided for, and received his future son-in-law with open arms.

It was decided that the marriage should take place on New Year's Eve, and preparations were forthwith commenced.

To Albert, working hard over books and bills in the distant metropolis, no tidings of the approaching nuptials were sent. It did not occur to James Rodbrook that there was any necessity of informing his nephew of the step he was about to take, and since the latter part of October Albert had not heard from Edith.

He attributed her silence to pique, caused by a correspondence he had been obliged to carry on with Agnes Draper, in regard to her brother, a student at the same college, who had fallen in with bad companions and narrowly escaped expulsion.

Albert wrote several times, endeavoring to explain the matter, and receiving no response, determined at Christmas time to go home himself.

What was his surprise, upon reaching Edith's residence, to be told that she was to be married a few days later and did not receive callers.

"But I must see her," he said, turning pale, and some desperate resolve to carry her off in spite of her relatives and betrothed husband flashing through his mind.

"What name shall I give?" asked the girl.

"Albert Rodbrook."

She ascended the stairway to an apartment on the upper floor, and presently returned to admit him to the family sitting-room, which chanced at that time to be vacant.

When Edith appeared, he burst into a storm of apology and entreaty, which could hardly have failed to move the heart of a less worldly minded person.

She had not previously heard of his letters to Agnes, but she was a quick-witted girl, and his words decided her as to how she should act in this emergency. She was cool and disdainful, refusing to accept his apology, and it was not until he had exhausted every species of pleading he could command that he asked the name of her intended.

Consternation was visible upon every feature when he received her reply.

"But my uncle James is twice your age," he exclaimed; "he cannot love you as I do?"

Then followed another impassioned proposal for her to fly with him, and become his wife at once, defying relatives on both sides.

There were real tears in Edith's eyes before he had finished. He was young and handsome, and she had bestowed the small amount of affection her nature was capable of displaying upon him. But she was firm in her refusal to accede to his request, and, seizing his hat abruptly, Albert left the house to return no more.

Two months afterward, when the honeymoon was nearly over, and Edith and her husband had settled at the farm, they heard that Albert had joined a party of surveyors in the far Western States.

She certainly had no reason to complain of her lot. The idolized wife of a man who anticipated her every wish, the aim of whose existence seemed to be to shower luxuries upon her, there were yet moments when she felt that she would have resigned them all for the companionship of that blue-eyed boy away on the Western prairies.

In the late spring there came a change. The strong man she had married was stricken down with a low fever. Medical aid proved unavailing, and one week after his first attack James Rodbrook was a corpse in the home of his fathers.

But, until a few hours before his death, he had been confident of recovery, not crediting the physician's statement that, unless great precautions were used, his iron constitution might succumb to a disease of this kind. Accordingly, he had died without making a will, and his widow found that part of his property allowed her by law to be very small.

The early summer days found her still at the old home, but knowing now that she had no claim to it nor to the surrounding acres.

Albert's return was expected in August, and this she awaited with a hopefulness that not all the remembrance of their last interview could destroy.

He came, but, instead of going at once to his home, stopped over night at Mr. Draper's, and walked up to the farmhouse on the following morning. He remembered, perhaps with a tinge of sadness, that it was on just such a day as this, the previous summer, he had first met the woman who had proved false to him.

She was waiting now to greet him, with dewy eyes and trembling lips. In response to his formal bow and proffer of his hand, she exclaimed:

"O, Albert, you have not forgotten the old times; you will let bygones be bygones?"

"Certainly," he said, evincing no warmth of manner whatever; "I quite agree with you that it is better to bury the past entirely. We will, if you please, proceed to the business that has brought me here this morning."

And then she knew that all was lost, that she could never hope to charm him again. On the following day she left Elmdale to take up her residence under her father's roof.

Six months later her humiliation was complete, when she learned that Mrs. Albert Rodbrook, nee Agnes Draper, had been installed as mistress of Rodbrook Farm.

Beleaguered Chattanooga.

All supplies for Rosecrans had to be brought from Nashville. The railroad between this base and the army was in possession of the Government up to Bridgeport, the point at which the road crosses to the south side of the Tennessee River; but Bragg, holding Lookout and Raccoon Mountains west of Chattanooga, commanded the railroad, the river, and the shortest and best wagon roads both south and north of the Tennessee between Chattanooga and Bridgeport. The distance between these two places is but twenty-six miles by rail; but owing to this position of Bragg all supplies for Rosecrans had to be hauled by a circuitous route north of the river and over a mountainous country, increasing the distance to over sixty miles. This country afforded but little food for his animals, near ten thousand of which had already starved, and none were left to draw a single piece of artillery or even the ambulances to convey the sick. The men had been on half rations of hard bread for a considerable time, with but few other supplies, except beef driven from Nashville across the country. The region along the road became so exhausted of food for the cattle that by the time they reached Chattanooga they were much in the condition of the few animals left alive there "on the lift." Indeed, the beef was so poor that the soldiers were in the habit of saying, with a faint facetiousness, that they were living on half rations of hard bread and "beef dried on the hoof." Nothing could be transported but food, and the troops were without sufficient shoes or other clothing suitable for the advancing season. What they had was well worn. The food within the Federal lines was exhausted, even to the stumps of trees. There were no teams to draw it from the opposite bank, where it was abundant. The only means for supplying food for some time before my arrival had been to cut trees from the north bank of the river, as a considerable distance up the stream, form rafts of it and float it down with the current, effecting a landing on the south side with no other lines by the use of paddles or poles. It would then be carried on the shoulders of the men to their camps.—General U. S. Grant.

THE QUEEN OF SPADES.

A teacher, all goodness and smiles,
Asked who it was traveled for miles,
And feasted her eyes
On Solomon wise
And his wealth as it lay in great piles.

The teacher believed much in skiis

So he said, "You can guess——
It begins with an 'S.'"
And a little boy said, "Queen of Spades!"

Was a fellow to do when you looked just so,
With your blue eyes tender, your sweet voice low?
Yes, 'tis true I forgot.

You are laughing at me—oh, take care, take care.
You still lead on. You're a flirt, I swear!

An Old Family.

There is a peculiar family of people living a few miles from Adairsville. It consists of three members, but they have everything to themselves. Each has a cow which is milked by its owner. The husband has his own milk in pans, the wife the same, and the son takes care of his own. They have separate gardens, sell everything individually, enjoy their own tobacco, and can be seen hauling their own wood to burn.—Savannah News.

UNITED STATES TERRITORY.

The Array of Foreign Possessions Which Are Ours by Right of Discovery.

From the Detroit Free Press.

Thousands upon thousands of the square miles of territory dominated by the Lion and Bear are entirely uninhabitable, including as they do most of the north polar regions of both hemispheres and arid deserts and steppes in other climes. The United States is nearly the equal of either empire in the extent of habitable area over which the spangled banner floats. And she, too, has great, almost limitless, areas of ice-covered continents and islands which are never counted as part of her landed possessions, and yet which she may quite as justly be credited with as Russia or England, with certain of their uninhabitable possessions in frozen zones. Few geographies show on their maps these foreign possessions of the United States, and a brief reference to them is likely to surprise the citizen who has been unaccustomed to contemplate the possessions of the American Union as hedged in by the bounds of her States and Territories.

But she can really make quite an array of foreign possessions, which are hers by the divine right of discovery, which has given to most of the powers of the earth their foreign dependencies. The voyages of Kane and subsequent American explorers thus gave the United States the whole northwestern portion of Greenland as far as discovered, and Grinnell Land on the opposite shore of Smith Sound. The famous statisticians, Behm and Wagner, give the area of the Greenland stretch of ice and glacier, known as Lincoln and Grant Land (from 78 degrees to 83 degrees) as 192,700 kilometers, and of Grinnell Land at 5,650. Wrangel Land has 66,100 kilometers. There are no estimates even of the area of the various islands north of Siberia discovered by the Jeannette, and it is doubtful if they do not belong to the New Siberian group, classed for many years as belonging to Russia.

The great American exploring expedition of 1840 discovered most of the vast ice-hedged coast of the Antarctic Continent, which has been roughly estimated to extend over 2,000,000 square miles. Some of the lands discovered by Commodore Wilkes have thus been estimated, the figures being in kilometers: Graham's Land, 100,000; Alexandra, 30,000; Wilkes, 165,000; Enderby, 28,000.

The following islands and groups in Polynesia belong to the United States: Barber, Palmyra, Prospect, Fanning, Christmas, Starbuck, Penrhyn, Swan, Pitt, McKean, Hull, and Enderby. The United States also owns the Bay of Pago Pago in the Samoan islands.

There are no obtainable statistics of any of these "foreign possessions," and the ordinary American citizen is quite content to think of the Union as embracing only the sweep of land from ocean to ocean and lakes to gulf, not even counting in frozen Alaska, and the girdle of Aleutian islands that span the Pacific Ocean. If other countries were but granted by geographers their equally "important" possessions, popular knowledge of respective areas would be greatly increased.

A Much-Used but Little-Known Wood.

"Did you ever wonder what knife-handles are made of?" asked a dealer in fancy woods of a New York reporter, as he hauled out a shapeless block from his store of spoils from many tropical forests. "Outside of bone and tortoise-shell and pearl, so-called, which every one recognizes, the majority of knife handles are made out of a close, fine-grained wood, about the name and pedigree of which 9,999 out of every 10,000 persons are ignorant. It is known to the trade as cocobola wood, and it comes in large quantities, millions of pounds a year, from Panama. It is of special value for knife-handles because of its close texture, freedom from knots and flaws, and consequent disinclination to split. Many well-known kinds of wood require varnishing and polishing and filling up of crevices before they attain the beauty for which they are famous. Of course that sort of thing can't be done in the case of knife-handles, and something must be used which doesn't require fixing up. Cocobola is rarely used for cabinet-making, because being a gummy wood, it doesn't glue well. The same qualities that make it of use in the manufacture of knife-handles render it valuable for the making of wind instruments like the flute. It comes to us in chunks, not in strips and planks like other woods. Sometimes these pieces will weigh 500 and 1,000 pounds, but generally much less than that. It costs 2½ cents a pound now, but before freights went down and the Isthmus was opened up so thoroughly it used to cost double that price."

It Balanced.

"What are you doing down town at this time of night?" asked one pedestrian of another, in front of the City Hall, at 10 o'clock at night.

"Been working at my books down at the office."

"What ailed 'em?"

"My cash account wouldn't balance. Old Smith was looking over the books this afternoon, and he said he'd give me till to-morrow noon to see that cash balanced cash-on-hand account."

"Can you find the error?"

"Oh, I've found it, and made everything balance. I brought $39.65 down from the house, you know!"—Detroit Free Press.

Why Jews Live so Long.

The New England Medical Monthly comments very favorably on the proverbially long and healthful lives of the Jews. Dr. Pickard holds that this superiority is due to their stringent health laws. The Mosaic, like the older Egyptian code, is very stringent regarding the eating of flesh and other articles of food. Of the animals examined, a large proportion are always condemned as unfit for food. People who eat meat indiscriminately are very prone to disorders of the blood and of the kidneys, for meat is composed of nitrogen, which the kidneys have to remove from the blood, and of course they cannot do this successfully except by the aid of Warner's safe cure, the best kidney strengthener, unless it is temperately partaken of and only the very best meat is used. Jews also use alcoholic liquors very sparingly, and thus keep up good digestion, and then again they are a holiday-loving and Sabbath-observing class—Housekeeper.

Tears.

Crocodile tears are things of ancient history, and tears produced with the aid of onions are equally well known, but it has remained for modern science to find a way to produce onion tears without betraying the presence of the aggressive onion itself. In fact, the aggressive onion need not be present at all. An essential oil is extracted from it which has all the tear-compelling qualities of the solid vegetable itself. One drop of this oil on a handkerchief is good for one flood of tears, two drops produce a persistent fit of sobbing, and three drops an appearance of utter abandonment to consuming grief.—Philadelphia Times.

Maryland, My Maryland.

Maryland legislators, who are always alive to the public interests, have indorsed the new discovery, Red Star Cough Cure, because it contains neither morphia nor opium, and always cures. The price is only 25 cents.

An interesting comparison in the mechanical work of past and present times is presented in the claim made by James Watt, namely, that he had attained remarkable accuracy in boring a cylinder of a steam engine and fitting its piston so closely that "the thickness of a half-crown could not be introduced between them," and the fact that standard gauges are now made that show errors of but 1-100,000 of an inch, and work is positively exacted to 1-50,000 of an inch. Such accurate work is not, however, generally necessary, except in the construction of gauges, these standard gauges being the means provided for keeping or producing within proper, useful, and practical bounds thousands of pieces of the same size and shape, in which oftentimes a certain amount of variation is allowed, both plus and minus. A certain amount of looseness is to be allowed, for instance, in the fit of journals and bearings, the amount to be determined according to the length and size of the journal; but this variation is to be referred to some particular gauge as a standard, hence the value of accuracy in the latter.

A Valuable Medical Treatise.

The edition for 1886 of the sterling Medical Annual, known as Hostetter's Almanac, is now ready, and may be obtained, free of cost, of druggists and general country dealers in all parts of the United States, Mexico, and indeed in every civilized portion of the Western Hemisphere. This Almanac has been issued regularly at the commencement of every year for over one-fifth of a century. It combines, with the soundest practical advice for the preservation and restoration of health, a large amount of interesting and amusing light reading, and the calendar, astronomical calculations, chronological items, &c., are prepared with great care, and will be found entirely accurate. The issue of Hostetter's Almanac for 1886 will probably be the largest edition of a medical work ever published in any country. The proprietors, Messrs. Hostetter & Co., Pittsburgh, Pa., on receipt of a two-cent stamp, will forward a copy by mail to any person who cannot procure one in his neighborhood.

Experiments with the Phelps method of telegraphing to and from trains in motion continue to be made with satisfactory success; but Mr. Edison has a method which dispenses with the insulated line between the rails. According to the report, Mr. Edison says: "By putting up this tinfoil-covered board lengthwise on the top of each car I can catch a message from the wire strung on poles thirty-five feet off, and can fling an answer back to the wires of any sort. The secret of it is in the machine for transmitting. When I was investigating what I called the 'etheric force' a few years ago, I accidentally discovered certain curious properties of static electricity. These I have now applied. The process is very inexpensive, as three men could equip a road 300 miles long for $1,000 in three or four days. It seems certain that its adoption will be general, so that every train will be run from headquarters, and every passenger will be accessible to his friends."

ARE HAIR PINS INJURIOUS?

The largest percentage of neuralgic headache seems to be among ladies, and most certainly they have a cause. Some have attributed it to the hair being tightly drawn over the head and held in place by hair-pins; in this way the nerves of the scalp are irritated and neuralgia caused. Relief is sometimes experienced by removing the hair-pins, but it is only temporary.

J. P. Mallette, of the Mallette & Raymond Manufacturing Company, No. 329 South Canal street, Chicago, tells as follows how his wife was completely cured of neuralgia:

"Yes, she was sick off and on for a long time, but a half bottle of Athlophoros cured her so that she has not suffered any since. When it was first recommended to her she would not get it, as she was always opposed to taking any kind of patent medicine. But as the treatment she was under gave her no relief, I insisted on her trying Athlophoros. After using half a bottle the neuralgia was gone, and has not returned since. I told a gentleman at the Walnut House, Greencastle, Ind., where I was stopping, to get a bottle, and if it did not cure the intense suffering that he was enduring he could have the cost of the medicine added to my hotel bill."

"Well, did it cure him?"

"Yes; it cured him at once. I have recommended it to at least fifty different persons, and in every case that I know about it has always given the same good results."

James D. Gibbin, room 33, No. 125 Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill., is enthusiastic in his praise of the medicine that has cured him of his rheumatism after he had tried in vain many different remedies as well as physicians.

"It was inflammatory rheumatism that had a firm hold on me," he says. "Many times it laid me aside from my business, confining me to the house and many times to my bed. Medicine did me no good. It looked as if I was doomed to suffer on without any relief."

"How did you come to use Athlophoros, Mr. Gibbin?"

"It was in this way. My occupation being that of a traveling man, I had the opportunity of coming in contact with many rheumatic sufferers, and consequently was recommended to use all the leading remedies on the market, many of which I used with no benefit whatever. During my trips to Beaver Dam, Wis., I became acquainted with a lady who was a confirmed invalid from rheumatism. She could not walk at the time I first met her, but was rolled around in an invalid chair. Whenever I went there we always compared notes on the rheumatic question. One day last winter I was astonished to find her walking around and well from the rheumatism. Upon inquiry as to how she got well she said Athlophoros had done the work. Knowing what a wonderful cure this was, as her case was a very severe one, I at once commenced using the medicine myself. The relief and cure was very quick."

"How much did you take in all?"

"Four bottles."

"Have you had any return of the complaint?"

"Not at all."

If you can not get Athlophoros of your druggist, we will send it, express paid, on receipt of regular price—one dollar per bottle. We prefer that you buy it from your druggist, but if he hasn't it, do not be persuaded to try something else, but order at once from us, as directed. Athlophoros Co., 112 Wall street, New York.

"Voltagal" on Electricity.

The Passenger Department of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway announce the publication of a new and valuable work—whose scope and intent is best expressed on its title-page, which reads as follows: "Voltagal, Genius of Electricity; or, Ned Benson's Adventures and Talk with One of the Genii," by "A MAN" of the Rock Island Route—respectfully dedicated to the Boys and Girls of America, by the General Ticket and Passenger Agent of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway. It is an appropriate sequel to Watt-Stephens on steam and its uses, which attained such a popularity a year ago. It is a carefully written pamphlet of 80 pages, elegantly printed, and will be sent to any applicant on receipt of 10 cents in postage stamps. Address Rescued from Death.

William J. Coughlin, of Somerville, Mass., says: In the fall of 1876 I was taken with bleeding of lungs, followed by a severe cough. I lost my appetite and flesh, and was confined to my bed. In 1877 I was admitted to the Hospital. The doctors said I had a hole in my lung as big as a half dollar. At one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of Dr. WILLIAM HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I got a bottle, when, to my surprise, I commenced to feel better, and to-day I feel better than for three years past.

Catarrhal Headache.

I think Ely's Cream Balm is the best remedy for catarrh I ever saw. I never took anything that relieved me so quickly, and I have not felt so well for a long time. I used to be troubled with severe headaches two or three times a week, but since using the Balm have only had one, and that, was very light compared with former ones.—J. A. Alcorn, Agent U. P. R. R. A Pitiful Sight.

What sadder sight can be imagined than that of a noble man, whom the world can ill afford to spare, stricken down in the prime of a useful life by consumption. It is the best alterative and pectoral in the world. All druggists.

Man's inhumanity to woman makes countless thousands mourn, would be an applicable rendering of Pope's line, in view of the indignities she has suffered and pains undergone at the hands of unskilled physicians and quacks. All this embarrassment can be avoided and a cure effected by purchasing Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" of your druggist, and taking as directed. Price reduced to one dollar.

CARLYLE ON SLAVERY.

Unpublished Letters Written to a Virginian Before the War.

The following very characteristic letters from Mr. Carlyle are now published for the first time, says Harper's Magazine for October. They were addressed to Judge Beverly Tucker, of Virginia, in response to letters and pamphlets received from him; and the second letter is the most complete, serious, and restrained expression of Carlyle's view of American slavery that we have seen. * * * The chief letter was written in 1850, when Carlyle was publishing the "Latter Day Pamphlets," his most direct and vigorous and biting onslaught upon "Sir Jabesh Windbag," and "government by-talk" in England—the sharp awakening cry of a strong man in "a blatant land" who felt that he was in a minority of one. It was the year of the passage of the fugitive slave law in this country, the darkest and ungriest hour of the tremendous anti-slavery agitation. The letter was written to a Virginian, a slaveholder, a man of high character, of ability and accomplishment, and of eminent official position, who had recently delivered a speech at the southern convention, which met at Nashville in 1850.

CHELSEA, London, 25th October, 1846.—SIR: The New York booksellers have duly forwarded to me a few days ago, your volumes of "Lectures," for which I beg to return you many thanks. The candid, ardent, and manful spirit which shines everywhere thro' these Discourses renders the Gift welcome in itself, and as a token of your kind feelings toward me still more so.

I have always said of America, in looking at its books, meliora latent; the best meaning of America has not yet come to words (or even to thought)—it is but still struggling to come! And surely, if it be true, as one sometimes prophesies, that huge changes lie not far ahead in your republic as elsewhere, whosoever has in his heart a clear word longing for utterance, ought to do his best to utter it. With many thanks and good wishes, yours very sincerely, T. CARLYLE.

To Prof. Tucker, etc.

CHELSEA, London, 21 October, 1850.—DEAR SIR: Your letter and pamphlets have duly reached me; for which accept my acknowledgments. The style, both of what you write and of what you have spoken, invites a considerate perusal, and such accordingly you have had from me. If it were in [illegible] to forward, in the way you [illegible] hat I find to be right and [illegible] nst in your endeavors, sure- [illegible] ot neglect it. But that, I [illegible] little likely, in the present [illegible] flairs, as of yours! Our [illegible] 5 street," as the present [illegible], is still at a great dis- [illegible] ark as we are in regard [illegible] you rather exaggerate [illegible] mporance as to your es- sential position in that big controversy. I find it a settled conviction among rational Englishmen, which they frequently express in a careless way, that the southern states must ultimately feel driven to separate themselves from the northern, in which result there is not felt here to be anything treasonous or otherwise horrible: our grand shortcoming is that we regard the matter as one in which we have no concern, or a much smaller one than the fact might indicate if we would look at it—that, in short, the rational class, on this, as on some other subjects, is at present a dull and lukewarm one, and that Exeter hall, having all the talk to itself, a windy, foolish, and otherwise inconsiderable minority (for such I really take it to be, even by a count of the heads, if you insisted on having any degree of sense in them) usurps the name and figure of England in treating of this matter. Perhaps now at last the dumb sense of the country does begin to stir and growl a kind of inarticulate contradiction to the platforms; but I foresee it will be a long time, such is the complicated depth of this emancipation question, and such the general numb bewilderment of men's minds before the wise result be insisted on with emphasis and get the majority in its favor.

For you and other men of sense and manfulness of spirit who stand in the very coil of negro complications and feel practically that you must retain command of your servants or else quit your place and task in the world, I find it natural that you should in silence resolve to front all extremities rather than yield to an extrinsic demand of that nature, however big-voiced and pretentious it became, in which quarrel, too, what can I say except 'God stand by the right,' which I clearly perceive you in part are!

But, alas, the question is deep as the foundations of society, and will not be settled this long while. For the cry about emancipation, so well pleased with itself on humanity platforms, is but the keynote of that huge anarchic roar now rising from all nations, for good reasons, too—which tends to abolish all mastership and obedience whatsoever in this world, and to render society impossible among the sons of Adam. And I doubt we have hardly got to the crisis of that yet—at least among speakers in England I find myself in a painful minority of one in regard to it—and after the crisis, when the minority shall have even become considerable, I feel too well what a task will lie ahead of them. It is truly time that each brave man consulted solemnly his own most religious oracles on the subject, and stood piously prepared to do whatever God's mandate he felt to be laid on him in regard to it.

Give me leave, in my dim light, but in my real sympathy with your affairs, to hint another thought I have. It is that this clamor from your "Exeter hall" and ours, which few persons can regard with less reverence than I, was nevertheless a thing necessary. My notion is that the relation of the white man to the black is not at present a just one according to the law of the eternal, and tho' "abolition" is by no means the way to remedy it, and would be a "remedy" equivalent to killing it (as I believe), yet, beyond all question, remedied it must be, and peace upon it is not possible till a remedy be found, and begins to be visibly applied. "A servant hired for life instead of by the day or month;" I have often wondered that wise and just men in your region (of whom I believe there are many) had not come upon a great many methods, or at least some methods better than those yet in use, of justly enunciating this relation, and relieving such asperities of it as become intolerable. Have you, for example, a law by which a negro, on producing a certain sum of money possible for the thrift and foresight of a superior negro, can demand his Freedom? I could conceive many other laws and practices not quite in use at present, but nm at the bottom of my paper and must end. I shall say only, the negro question will be left in peace when God Almighty's law about it is (with tolerable approximation) actually found out and practiced; and never till then. Might this also be a word to the wise! With many regards and true wishes, yours sincerely,

T. CARLYLE.

Killed by Mosquitoes.

Mr. Murray, in a letter from Denver to Professor Baird, describes what he saw under the shade of some willows skirting a shallow place in a creek. A small swarm of mosquitoes was circling over the water, where some fresh-hatched mountain trout were readily discernable. Every few minutes the baby trout would rise to the surface of the water and remain there an instant, with the tip of the head exposed. A mosquito would at once alight upon the shining spot and transfix the trout by inserting its proboscis, or bill, into the brain of the fish, which apparently was completely paralyzed and unable to escape. The persecutor would not relax his grip, but holding its victim as in a vise would extract all the vital juices from the trout's body. When this was done the dead trout would turn over on its back and float down the stream. The observer witnessed the murder of twenty trout under the willows in the course of half an hour by these Western mosquitoes, each victim being sucked dry in his lifeless shell.—The American Angler.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 152

The Race.

Tiptoe, dainty fine!
When you are caught, I will make you mine!
But till you are caught, I must follow;
And after your tiny, dancing feet,
And your gay, shy smile so sooney sweet,
Up hill and over hollow,
With a call and a cry, don't doubt but I Shall fly,—like the swift-winged swallow!

Tiptoe, dainty fine!
Now you are caught, and you are mine!
My little lass—I've caught her!
She laughs and pouts and hides her face,
She springs away with an agile grace
The darning birds have taught her;
But I must not miss my lord-earned kiss!
Like this!—my bonnie daughter!

Oh, ay! Away, away!
What can the parting mother say?
Why,—now she is last, and I hold her!
I kiss her blue eyes and sunny hair,
Her dimpled arm and her cheek so fair;
To my loving heart I fold her!
And then I swing the captured thing,
With a 'swing!—swung!—swing!' to my shoulder!"

THE IMMIGRANT'S STORY.

Police Court Scene.

BY SIGISMUND.

A voice calling the name of "Jane Le Croix" resounded through the dilapidated corridors of one of our police courts one morning last week. The variegated audience that graces the judge's entertainments were startled by the peculiar manner in which the calling of Jane Le Croix fell upon their ears. Where it came from, none could tell. The clerk looked as innocent as a sphinx, and as silent as a Gen. Grant. None dreamed that from behind the stern and placid mask that hides his mind from human eye came the voice that called the next unfortunate from the bull pen of the police court.

"Jane Le Croix," echoed the policeman, as he opened the door of the bull pen.

Out stepped a creature, in shape a woman, but her eye appeared so much like that of an enraged bull, just leaping into a Spanish bull ring, that one doubted in what grade to place her between human and demon. Her face was once beautiful; it was now temptingly bold; dark eyes, surrounded by bloodshot eyelids; eye lashes that would sway ordinary men from the right road; hair black as night between two flashes of lightning, like a mountain torrent flowed in waves over a neck that would serve for a model for Venus. As she stepped out of the bull pen she folded her arms and looked at his honor, then at the crowd with a peculiar defiance that can only come from desperate misfortune, a kind of bravado that human wrecks assume when no friends are present to witness their degradation.

"Step up to the bar of the court; guilty, or not guilty?" again came from the lips of the clerk.

"Guilty of what, you please?" says Jane, marching up before his honor.

The judge eyed her through his glasses for a moment, and was preparing to hurl a section of his peculiar wrath on her head, for the contemptuous manner in which she came before the judicial bench, when something in her brazen defiance appeared unnatural to his experienced eye. It was like hate on the face of a Madonna; in a moment the judge departed and the man leaned over the rail and said: "My child, you are playing a part that nature never intended you for; you are a stranger to this court and should be a stranger to the vocation that brings you here."

At the words "my child" the muscles of her face relaxed and the quivering lips indicated that the judge's words were carrying the mind of the culprit away from the bar of a police court; she looked at the judge, yet, far beyond him, as he continued, her lips trembled, her parched eyes were supplying the water that had been a stranger to them. Unfolding her arms she pressed her hands to her burning temples. The judge was becoming affected, but continued: "I have no doubt a vacant chair stands like a skeleton in the family circle that mourns your absence. The thoughts of that family no doubt are occasionally clinging to the hopes that your childhood gave birth to, but that vacant chair, like a dismantled parapet, plainly indicates the crumbling away of that family circle. The fond kiss of a mother——"

Here the unfortunate culprit groaned, as if in the most intense agony. At the word "Mother" she pressed her hands still more to her head, turned her face upwards, convulsively running her fingers through her flowing hair, she suddenly pulled the hair over and pressed it close to her face, as if to hide it from somebody, then bowed low her body and wept as though her heart would break.

"The impression of the fond kiss of a mother," continued the judge, "should never leave the lips of a daughter. The kind advice and virtuous teachings that evidently came from the mother that gave you birth must have received some terrible shock to permit you to wander into the fold of a class whose recompense here is death and whose reward hereafter is death! death!!"

The judge, the policeman, and even the clerk was affected at the intense grief that Jane Le Croix now writhed in.

The court paused. In a few moments Jane Le Croix drew a long breath, lifted her head and brushed back the hair that covered her face, which showed evidence of a complete revolution. Instead of the brazen, defiant look of the hopeless Magdalene, the face of a weary pilgrim overburdened with woe, looked up at the judge. In a sweet voice she said:

"You will excuse me from this unusual outburst of feeling, but the words 'my child' coming from your lips were the first home words I have heard for eight years; I thought my heart proof against kind words, particularly coming from man; but now they have tore open the crust of crime that encased my heart. When you pictured the vacant chair, the breach in the family circle, all! all! came up before me like a vision, and when the word 'mother' dropped from your lips I thought a fond but scrutinizing eye of a dear mother looked from that vision down into my guilty heart. Then it was that I hid my face, and like a balm to the lips of the wounded, a stirred up tempest burst its barriers, my heart opened. These tears have brought more ease to this aching head than it has known for many a year. To be changed from what I was to what I am has been so sudden that I scarce know myself.

"From the bottom of my heart I thank you for calling me to reason, and for the first moment approaching to happiness I have known in eight years. To convince you that those tears come from an almost broken heart, permit me, in a few words, to trace the dark and thorny path that brings me before your honor. You judge me right when you say I am playing a part that I never was intended for.

"I was born in one of the loveliest vales in Munster, Ireland. Young and educated well, I had some reason to be proud of the attention paid to me by the farmers' sons of my native village. I was the oldest of my brothers and sisters, but the silent but deep affection of a kind father and mother watched with pride the growing promises that my youth gave birth to. In an unlucky hour the landlord's son visited our village; I attracted his attention. Oh! what fervent maledictions could I pour out on the whole landlord race, root and spawn, for the curse they have been to my country and people. How many a white virgin soul they have started on the broad road to hell, God alone knows. Of course he used such means as best suited him to get me to return his lascivious love; my nature revolted. I made a confidant of my mother, who in turn told my father. His mind was made up at once, as he was in no condition to brook the displeasure of the landlord, being behind in his rent, and knowing well that a struggle with him would end in poverty for the entire family; fearing, under such circumstances that I would be in danger, he determined I should leave the country. In a week I was ready; in three weeks I was in Philadelphia. The world seemed so new to me that I knew not whether it was grief or joy that throbbed around my heart. I soon got in charge of the linen room of ——— hotel. For a few months I was happy; I had weekly letters from home. My father was preparing with the family to come to America. The proprietor of the hotel treated me with marked kindness. In my innocence I did not distinguish true kindness from attentions that were paid to me, for reasons that were hid behind the mask of this scorpion devil. I was invited to the parlor one night. I went; other women were there, God, what kind? I was offered wine, I refused, was pressed, and fearing I would be considered rude, I tasted—would that it was poison. From that moment until morning I knew not what happened; when I awoke I found the sun high in the heavens, and I in a strange bedroom. I lifted my aching head, and the proprietor of the hotel lifted the curtains to speak to me. In a moment everything flashed through my mind; at once I felt a singular sensation, my head reeled, and I could but see the surrounding objects in an indistinct manner. I pressed my hands on my painful eye balls and through the mist tried to bridge the void that lay between my family and me.

"It seemed as though some winged devil had dragged me from the abode of virtue and separated me by thousands of miles from those I heretofore knew. I wept and wept; I could not pray; I threw myself on my knees and cursed my betrayer; I begged that the weight of the outraged virtue might press on his conscience and be to him an eternal nightmare in this and the next world. For a while I was his toy; soon he tired of me. I had lost track of my family. Picking up the papers one day I saw that my father was in Philadelphia, and looking for me. That night I fled from the city, like one that was doomed. I wandered from city to city, avoiding the homes of virtue, and herding with the unclean.

Memory, that flowery path that carpets the thorny road of misfortune to the poor and virtuous was to me a curse. I drowned it in the bottle; reason and thought I tried to drown but they would not down. Oh, God! if I could but pour the feelings of my soul into the ears of the young and virtuous—few, very few, would be tempted by the tinseled and bedaubed surrounding that lure the innocent under the guise of pleasure, to have them really live in a burning hell. I tried to get out of the circle, but some invisible influence held me back. Self-destruction floated before my vision, but I dared not. I drank—drank, hoping to make a life that I hated oblivious. I was mad, and wallowed in all kinds of excesses, fearing a return of reason. In this manner I have lived for eight years. O, sir, have pity on me and save me from myself; punish me, send me to some place where the eye of a man will not see me. I wish you could hide me from God's!"

While she was speaking to the judge the crowd of spectators gathered around the judicial railing. So absorbed had his honor become in her story that it was only when she had finished that he noticed the situation. Immediately the man departed and the Judge rapped on his desk and in a very severe manner called upon the policeman to rid the court of such familiarity. Even the clerk soliloquized over the remarkable incident. After the crowd had relegated to their normal condition, the judge remanded Jane to the care of a policeman to be put in communication with the Sisters of the Good Shepherd.

In an after conversation, she acknowledged that Jane Le Croix was an assumed name. She confided her true name to his honor, who entered into communication with her father, where the weary wanderer found rest on that bosom where the worst of crimes can be forgiven, on repentance, and a father gladdened by learning of the whereabouts of his long-lost daughter.

Poisonous Plants.

The progress of the series of lectures on botany and sylvaculture by Prof. Rothrock in Horticultural hall, Fairmount park, says the Philadelphia Times, is being marked with increased attendance, the lecture-room becoming quite crowded. The subject selected for yesterday's lecture was "Flowering Plants to Be Avoided."

"Plants may be poisonous by one's proximity to them, by touching them, or by being taken into the stomach," said the lecturer. "The manchiniel of the West Indies is nearly as poisonous as the fabled upas tree of Java. Plants containing acrid or poisonous properties come largely from the tropics. This is true of spices, also; while, on the other hand, the plants of the polar regions are deficient in these active qualities. One of our most popular groups of plants is the buttercup, but many of these are sufficiently acrid to produce blisters when applied to the skin. The poisonous sumac is probably the most dangerous of all our plants which poison by proximity."

The lecturer then described the two species of sumac as the climbing and the swamp sumac. "Avoid all sumac which has not red berries and you will be safe from poison. The common horse-chestnut is used in Europe as food for the horses and cattle; but the small horse-chestnut of the south, the "buckeye," is claimed to be poisonous. The laburnum or gold chain, which grows twelve feet high in our gardens, is exceedingly dangerous, as its roots, which taste like licorice, are apt to tempt children to chew it. On one occasion fifty-eight children were poisoned at the Forest Hill school in England by eating it." Among other plants named by Prof. Rothrock as containing in a greater or less degree poisonous qualities were the water hemlock, digitalis, aconite, and the common pokeweed.

"Dr. Darlington," continued the lecturer, "states that he has known pies to be made of the pokeberry and eaten without injurious results, while, on the other hand, a southern physician has known evil consequences from eating pokeberries."

NEWS CONDENSED.

Concise Record of the Week.

EASTERN.

Joseph Wilkins, formerly agent of the Michigan Central Road at Buffalo, has been sentenced to five years in the Auburn penitentiary for embezzlement.

At Mount Vernon, N Y., a laborer named Thomas Donohue was so firmly grasped by a mad dog that the aid of two men was required to choke him into relaxing his hold.

For the last week the imports of merchandise at New York, exclusive of dry goods, were valued at nearly $6,500,000.

A fire at Georgetown, Mass., burned thirteen business places and a residence, the losses aggregating $80,000. Two men were killed by falling walls, and five others were injured.

Mahlon Hulrizer, who went to the war from a Jersey town twenty-one years ago, and has since been mourned as among the dead, returned to his parents on Christmas night. He owns large beds of nitrate in Peru.

At the gate of General Grant's tomb, on Christmas Day, the widow and her son Frederick placed a wreath of flowers. A white-haired veteran from Galena obtained permission to touch it with his lips, but a lady vainly offered the guard $10 for a single flower.

Work at the Nanticoke, Pa., colliery, where the recent accident occurred, burying nearly thirty men, has been abandoned. The company will recompense the relatives. The victims are doubtless buried deeply beneath sand, culm, and rock, and can never be found.

WESTERN.

The trouble resulting from the removal of a Polish Catholic priest in Detroit by the Bishop resulted in a tragedy. Sunday last the church was closed against the congregation, who, augmented in number by other Poles, made threatening demonstrations against houses of the Bishop's friends. Some shooting occurred, one man was instantly killed, and others were injured.

The Seney syndicate, represented by ex-Governor Foster, of Ohio, intends to purchase at foreclosure sale the Toledo, Cincinnati and St. Louis Road.

The real-estate transactions in Chicago for the year amounted to about $48,000,000 and the value of buildings erected was $20,000,000, the number of residences being 1,057.

Patrick F. Murphy, ex-Mayor of Omaha, died in that city after a brief illness from some mysterious malady which affected his whole family.

Mannix, the assignee of the Purcell estate of Cincinnati, is charged with a defalcation of $300,000. Gov. Hoadly is one of his bondsmen. A criminal prosecution is threatened.

A Leavenworth, Kansas, liquor-dealer was enjoined from selling liquor pending the hearing of the case against him under the nuisance provision of the prohibitory law, and his place was closed. The other dealers are packing up and preparing to leave the city.

The international billiard tournament in Chicago ended in the winning of the championship by Jacob Schaefer. He has been matched with Vignaux to play six nights in New York, within forty days, for $2,500.

In the United States Circuit Court in San Francisco a decision was rendered in the case of Sharon vs. Hill to the effect that the marriage of the parties was invalid on the ground that the signatures to the marriage contract had been forged.

A fresh outbreak occurred in the congregation of St. Albert's Polish Catholic Church, at Detroit, Mich. Col. Larned, a well-known lawyer, was almost killed by a stone, thrown by one of a mob of 3,000 enraged Poles. The crowd almost completely demolished a grocery, belonging to a man who was a member of a faction to which they were hostile.

Thomas King, a laborer residing in Cologne street, Chicago, went home to supper on Christmas eve and found his wife intoxicated. The neighbors heard a violent quarrel, and the next day found that King had killed and his wife had been beaten to death. The murderer was arrested and admitted that he struck the woman with a chair. He has served in the British army, and once kept a saloon in Washington.

An infernal machine was found on the doorstep of the $200,000 mansion of Judge Lambert Tree, at No. 94 Cass street, Chicago. A policeman took the tin can of nitro-glycerine to the Lake Front and exploded it, boring a hole in the earth two feet in diameter. The scheme bears evidence that its author was an ignorant crank.

Chicago elevators contain 14,459,855 bushels of wheat, 1,921,998 bushels of corn, 252,453 bushels of oats, 200,377 bushels of rye, and 223,220 bushels of barley; total, 17,156,903 bushels of all kinds of grain, against 15,419,736 bushels a year ago.

SOUTHERN.

A gentleman in Chattanooga desires to find the rightful owner of a cane cut by Andrew Jackson and presented by him to a friend named Mullenbrink. The relic was found on the battlefield of Lookout Mountain.

Fire at Artesia, Miss., destroyed every store in the place.

Mrs. Lucinda Helm, widow of the late Governor John Helm, of Kentucky, died at Elizabethtown, Ky., aged seventy-six years.

Miss Carrie Boyer, a local belle of Gainestown, Clarke County, Ala., was murdered within sight of her home by a negro named Aleck Reed, who attempted to outrage her. When the news was made public all the county hastened in pursuit of the murderer. He was discovered in hiding at Tompkinsville by a white man and two negroes, and carried back to Gainestown. He confessed the crime, and declared that he had been guilty of outrage in Mississippi also. After his confession was heard he was escorted to the spot where he had murdered Miss Boyer, which was a short distance from town and in a lonely and deserted wood. Here the murderer, screaming and shouting, was tied to a stake, and a fire built around him. He writhed and twisted in it but a few minutes, when death came to his rescue. A number of negroes witnessed his burning.

WASHINGTON.

A Washington dispatch says a bill is to be introduced in Congress to lend the name of the Government to the International Exposition to be held in Chicago in 1892, in commemoration of the 400th anniversary of the discovery of America.

A relief steamer will be sent by the Government in search of the whaler Amethyst, carrying a crew of forty men, supposed to have been cast away in Behrings Sea.

Commissioner Sparks, of the General Land Office, in view of the almost universal comment as to his policy, has felt constrained to issue a new series of regulations for registers, receivers, and special agents of the Land Office, which have just been promulgated. They modify in many important particulars his recent sweeping orders. They provide that homestead or pre-emption claimants who have made bona fide settlements upon public lands, and who are living upon, cultivating, and improving the same in accordance with the law, with the intention of acquiring title thereto, shall be permitted to cut and remove from the portion to be cleared for cultivation so much timber as is actually necessary for that purpose, or for buildings, fences, or other improvements on the land entered. In clearing for cultivation, should there be a surplus of timber, the entry-men may dispose of such surplus; but it is not allowable to denude the land of its timber for the purpose of sale and speculation before the title has been conveyed by patent.

POLITICAL.

Washington telegram: "Mr. Evarts, in his New York interview, has not chosen to affirm or deny the report that upon the reassembling of the Senate he will make a speech upon the silver question which will much resemble that of Senator Beck. It is reported here that Senator Evarts is going to charge in his speech that but for the attitude of the Arthur administration the Silver Commission to Europe, of which he was a member, could have secured an international agreement which would have solved the silver question and given the United States all the advantages that such an arrangement can bring."

It is reported that Justice Miller, of the United States Supreme Court, holds that under the tenure-of-office act the President cannot remove an official without the consent of the Senate, and in case the Senate refuses to confirm nominations made to succeed suspended officials the latter are restored to office until their successors are confirmed.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Professor Brooks announces the discovery of a comet in the constellation of Aquila, which in the early evening is low in the southwest.

In reply to a dispatch from Secretary Bayard counseling efforts to prevent violence, in relation to the threatened expulsion of the Chinese, Governor Stoneman, of California, sent a dispatch saying that, as to the proper method of preserving good order in that State, he was capable of performing that duty "without gratuitous suggestions" from the Chinese Minister to the Secretary of State.

Amelia Sheehan, of New York, once noted as an oarswoman, has been rendered insane by the action of drugs used for the purpose of bleaching her hair.

FOREIGN.

The Greek Chamber has sanctioned the raising of loans for war purposes.

Efforts to adjust the difficulty between the Cork Steam-Packet Company and the Cattle-Dealers' Association have failed.

In a political riot at Limerick, Ireland, where both sexes used sticks, stones and guns, no less than twenty persons were dangerously wounded. The police failed to restore order until two hours had elapsed.

The prediction is made by the London Economist that the Americans will not permit much gold to be shipped until the silver question has been settled. A Berlin banker placed a Russian gold loan of 20,000,000 rubles, for which the subscriptions were ten times that amount. A Chinese railway loan of £35,000,000 is being negotiated by the discount company.

LATER NEWS IETMS.

Paris dispatch: The four Newark children, Austin Fitzgerald, Patsy Ryan, Willie Lane, and Patrick Reynolds, who have been under treatment by M. Pasteur, will leave for home Sunday next. They are all well. Kaufmann received his first inoculation at half-past 11 this morning. He continues confident and in good spirits.

The creditors of the King of Bavaria have petitioned for a distrain of his goods, but the General of the Army has forbidden bailiffs to take any such action.

The value of the crops in Ireland this year reached nearly £1,670,000. This is largely above the average for the last decade.

The Municipal Council of Cork will try the experiment of erecting seventy-four cottages for laborers, to be rented for half a crown per week.

Gen. Booth, of London, in asking for $30,000 for the expenses of the Salvation Army for 1886, states that he will not publish the accounts of past years.

The following is the visible supply of grain, as compiled by the New York Produce Exchange: Wheat, 58,431,813 bushels; corn, 8,320,695 bushels.

Mobile (Ala.) dispatch: "By the explosion of the boilers of the Gulf City Oil Works, ten men were killed or injured. Morris Wallace, Willie Black, Daniel Jackson and Peter Chastein were burned to death. Israel Brassey was fatally scalded and has since died. Archer Hicks, fireman, and J. S. Staunton were fatally injured, and F. P. Jones was fatally scalded. Richard Hunter and William Borden were also seriously injured. The explosion is attributed to lack of water in the boiler. It occurred just after midnight. The whistle had just blown for lunch or the casualties might have been greater."

The Hon. E. A. Jones, a well-known Tennessee politician, died at Hot Springs, Ark.

James E. Bailey, who succeeded Andrew Johnson as Senator from Tennessee, died at Clarksville in that State.

Two organ-grinders in New Orleans, leaned against an electric-light pole in St. Charles street. One was killed instantly and the other had his head burned to a crisp.

The Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution banqueted its correspondents, scribes to the number of 350 being present from different sections of the Union. The traveling and incidental expenses were furnished by the paper.

Secretary Manning has issued a call for $10,000,000 of 3 per cent. bonds, interest to cease Feb. 1.

In regard to the project to erect a monument to the memory of Vice President Hendricks President Cleveland has written to Senator Voorhees indorsing the plan and hoping that he may be permitted to aid in the undertaking.

About a month ago John T. Morton, of Arkansas, was appointed, through the Civil Service Commission, to a thousand-dollar position in the Postoffice Department. Nothing was known of him except that he was a school teacher, and the result of his examination had been entirely satisfactory, and when, the other day, a colored man presented himself everybody was surprised. He is the first colored man appointed to a clerkship in that office.

Engineer Loring, of the navy, will shortly make a proposition to the assignees of John Roach to give the Puritan a new dock trial. The vessel has had one dock trial, which was not in all respects satisfactory, and some changes in her machinery have since been made.

Pork tenderloin, imperfectly cooked, has caused trichinasis in the bodies of Frank M. Westerfield and wife, of Wilmette, Ill. Both are suffering terribly.

William C. Page, attired in the habiliments of a widow, was arrested upon his arrival at St. Louis. He was railway and express agent at Golden City, Mo., stole a money package containing $6,000, and, dressing himself in a suit of his wife's clothing, skipped.

CRIMINAL RECORD.

JANUARY.

Geo. Travis hanged at Wellsboro, Pa., for the murder of Martha Sylvis; Travis cremated the corpse to conceal the crime. Wright Leroy swung off at San Francisco for the murder of Nicholas Skerrett; and Wm. F. Henry served in like manner at Alton, Ill., for the murder of two colored friends. Thomas J. Chapman, a farm hand, hanged at Charleston, Ill., for the murder of Nicholas Hubbart, a farmer, in September, 1881. Chas. J. Rogers, penitentiary warden, hanged at Portland, Oregon, for the murder of another prison official. Lafayette Melton, who four years before was captain of a band of Ku Klux that murdered Franklin Hale for betraying their secrets, paid the penalty on the gallows at Corning, Ark.

FEBRUARY.

Elijah Weuse, aged 75, arrested in Hardy County, West Virginia, confessed that he murdered twelve persons prior to or during the war; he was the leader of a band of robbers who ravaged that section. John L. Jack and Carter B. Page fought a duel in a street at Portsmouth, Va.; nine shots exchanged, Page being mortally wounded and Jack escaping injury; meeting occasioned by alleged breach of social courtesy. Three men confined in the jail at Audubon, Iowa, charged with murdering an old man named Hiram Dellerson, were lynched by a mob; two of the men were shot in their cells, and the remaining one, who was a son of the murdered man, was hanged. Ben Hawkins, a colored murderer, taken from jail and riddled with bullets by a mob at Franklin, Texas. Wayne Powers and George Gibson, who killed William Gibson for $12 and a suit of clothes, hanged at Estillville, Va. A butcher at Gibraltar, Spain, believed to be insane, murders the Vicar General of the diocese in the cathedral. Thomas Morris, a negro, charged with assaulting a little girl of 13, was left dangling to a tree at Schulenburg, Tex. A Georgia negro attempted to poison an entire family, giving as an excuse that "dere was too many white folks in de world, and dat it was time to get shut of some of dem." Reinsdorf and Knechler, anarchists, who attempted the life of the German Emperor and other royal personages at the Niederwald celebration, beheaded at Hulle. Lige Parker and Rush Johnson, negroes, were hanged at Little Rock for the murder of John C. Wall, a white man. Richard Trenke at Philadelphia, for the murder of Augusta Zimm, his paramour. Dr. L. N. Beach hanged at Hollidaysburg, Pa.; uxoricide. James W. Murray suffered death at Portland, Ore., for the murder of Alfred Yonke. George Schneider, convicted of murder in the first degree at Hamilton, O., for killing and robbing his own mother. Sanford Jackson hanged at Selma, Ala., for the murder of Rufus Gill; both negroes. Franklin J. Moses, of South Carolina, on being sentenced to the Boston House of Correction, argued that the petty nature of his crime showed his mind had given way under his troubles. Bob Johnson, a negro boy, assassinated a citizen at Princeton, W. Va., and was tied to a tree and riddled with bullets. Babe Ellison, colored, was hanged by a mob at Shellyville, Tenn., for assaulting a white lady. Mrs. Mack, who was once sentenced to the Wisconsin State Prison for life for murdering her husband in Rock County, in whose case the jury disagreed on a second trial, checkmated the prosecution by marrying its chief witness, and was released on her own bond. In the District Court, Chicago, after a trial lasting fifteen days, J. C. Mackin, W. J. Gallagher, and Arthur Gleason were convicted for perpetrating election frauds, and Henry Riehl was acquitted; motions for new trials were entered, and the first-named two were held in $20,000 each—Gleason in $10,000. Three unsuccessful attempts were made at Exeter, England, to hang John Lee, who killed a woman near Torquay because she refused to marry him; the machinery of the gallows was swollen from moisture, and the trap refused to work; the execution was postponed. The cases against Frank James, the Missouri bandit, were dismissed at Booneville, on motion of the Prosecuting Attorney. Minnesota adopted a new penal code restoring the death penalty for murder in the first degree.

MARCH.

Dr. Albert G. F. Goerson, who poisoned his wife five years before, was hanged at Philadelphia. Lee Shutter (colored) was taken from jail at Monroe, N. C., by a mob and hanged. Fifty citizens of Fairfield, Neb., captured and hanged Mrs. Taylor and her brother to a bridge on suspicion of complicity in the murder of a farmer named Roberts. Wm. Neal, the third and last of the gang who murdered two girls and a boy and burned their bodies at Ashland, Ky., in 1881, was hanged at Grayson, Ky. George Rouse, a negro, outraged a farmer's wife near Vienna, Va., and then cut her throat; he was captured, mutilated by a mob, and hanged naked to a tree.

APRIL.

Nelson Edwards, a New York dentist, spent two days in killing himself with a razor; his throat and body were horribly gashed. Richard Fraser was hanged at Charleston, S. C., for the murder of Jack Gethers, and Columbus Crawford was swung off at Yorkville, in the same State, for taking the life of Ellison Sanders; all four were people of color. Geo. A. Mills, a wife murderer, expiated his crime in the jail-yard at Brooklyn, N. Y. An extremely sensational murder excited St. Louis; crowded into a trunk in the Southern Hotel was found the partially decomposed corpse of a man known as Arthur Preller, of London, Eng., with a note placed on the body reading: "So perish all traitors to the great cause;" on the breast of the dead man was a cross cut with a knife; Preller was believed to have been chloroformed and murdered by a companion named H. Jenox Maxwell, M. D.; both parties were disaffected Englishmen. The people of Union City, Tenn., took from the Sheriff and hanged a negro boy named Pierson, and Ward, a white man, members of a desperate band of robbers. At a farm-house in Holt County, Missouri, Wm. Clark shot Mrs. Harding and her son and daughter on account of a husbandly suit, and then killed himself. A party of lynchers from Blunt and Harrold, Dakota, forced the jail at Pierre, and hanged James H. Bell, the murderer of Forest G. Small, to the flag-staff of the Court House; Bell and Small were rival lawyers. Thos. Simon, who two years previously murdered Mrs. Ford, his landlady, and a man and a child, was hanged at Laconia, N. H. Near Lewiston, Idaho, the bodies of Peter Brazil and James Flynn, stock cauchers, were found near each other, with pistols and clubs by their sides. The Abbe Gaumidet was guillotined at Paris for the murder of Mgr. Bauhelch. A shocking tragedy was reported from Concordia, O., a German named Adolph Hess beheaded his child with an ax, beat his wife to death with the same weapon, and then hanged himself.

MAY.

George Mack, a colored murderer, was taken from officers near South Bend, Kan., and, with a rope about his neck, was dragged by a galloping horse into town, where he was suspended to an awning in front of a billiard saloon, the scene of the murder. A passenger train on the L., N. A. & C. R. R. stopped for water at Hardinsburg, Ind., where it was boarded by an unknown man, armed with a hickory club; he entered the baggage-car, fractured the skull of the express messenger, snatched a revolver from him, and then compelled the baggageman to open the safe, from which he took about $1,000; then he shot the baggageman in the head, and escaped from the train as it slacked up at Bloomington. W. H. L. Maxwell, the murderer of C. A. Preller at the Southern Hotel, St. Louis, was arrested at Auckland, New Zealand, on landing at that port. At Benito, New Mexico, Martin Nelson, an insane man, killed Dr. Wm. H. Flynn and then shot dead M. S. Mayhurry, his wife and three children, and also a neighbor; a guard of citizens surrounded the house, but were surprised by Nelson, who shot one of the party, and was then himself dispatched. Six thousand people flocked to Morganfield, Ky., to witness the execution of Moses Caton, who had beaten his wife unmercifully and then hanged her; Caton's crime, for inhuman and diabolical cruelty, surpassed anything ever heard of in the criminal history of Kentucky. In a dispute over cards at Walthamville, Ga., five negroes were killed and four wounded; a flat-car standing on a side-track was the scene of the tragedy; the negroes were all in debt, and had just been paid off. Mrs. Pfatteicher left Erie, Pa., to go over to Gibson to spend a day, and after kissing them three times into her waiting arms seems brought help, and three of them were rescued, but the mother and two others were drowned. Andrew J. Johnson, a noted outlaw of Bell County, Kentucky, lay in wait behind a building in Pineville and killed Thomas Nolder and Joshua Hoskins and his daughter as they were returning to church. Charley Chambers was arrested at Bennington, Ind., and identified as the person who robbed the express car on the night of April 27, and shot Baggagemaster Webber and Express Agent Davis. Charles Henry Rigg, a negro, who murdered Mrs. Lydia Maybee and her daughter Annie at Oyster Bay, L. I., two years previously, was hanged at Hunter's Point. Goodwin Jackson (colored) suffered the death penalty at Clarendon, Ark., for the murder of Sandy Redmond with a fence-rail; Jackson protested that he was unlawfully executed, as he did not mean to kill Redmond.

JUNE.

A deadly feud in Knott County, Ky., between two rival families named Jones and Hall, resulted in the killing of nine persons within three weeks. Five negroes, one of them a woman, convicted for outraging and murdering a white woman, were hanged by a mob at Elkhart, Tex. Mrs. Lucille Ysenlt Dudley, who made an unsuccessful attempt to kill the dynamiter O'Donovan Rossa, was acquitted by a New York jury on the ground of insanity. Andred. Dumont (colored), at one time Naval Officer at New Orleans, suicided because of domestic troubles.

JULY.

Tramps stole the clothing of an unknown man who was bathing in the Missouri River at Omaha; he remained in the water all day, and when he came out at nightfall he was found to be insane, and died a few hours later. William Matthews eloped with the wife of James Secrist, of Comanche County, Texas, and when he afterward called upon Mr. Secrist for the lady's personal effects that gentleman shot him dead. Joseph Taylor was hanged at Philadelphia for the murder of a penitentiary keeper; Taylor began his criminal career at the age of 15 years by stabbing a companion, and during the ten years preceding his death had stabbed or shot forty-five persons. Thomas K. Brantly, of Bainbridge, Ga., arrested for brutally ill-treating his wife, was taken from jail by his neighbors and hanged to a tree. In Anderson County, Kentucky, three brothers named Hawkins were shot by Horace Mullins, whom they had called to account for alleged slander of their sister; two of the brothers were killed; one was badly hurt; Mullins escaped unhurt. Valentine Wagner was the first criminal hanged under the new law in Ohio, by which executions are to take place in the penitentiary before sunrise, in presence of but few witnesses; Wagner killed his brother-in-law two years previously.

AUGUST.

A triple execution occurred at Fayetteville, N. C., two white and one colored man being hanged. Maxwell, the alleged murderer of C. Arthur Preller, whose body was found in a trunk at a St. Louis hotel in April last, arrived at San Francisco from New Zealand in the custody of officers. Pedro Prestan, the leader of the revolutionists of Panama, who several months before fired and destroyed the city of Aspinwall, having been duly tried and convicted, was hanged Aug. 28. Al Lockie, who murdered eight persons and then attempted to commit suicide, was taken from jail at Blanco, Tex., and hanged by a mob; Lockie made a confession, saying that he would have killed more people had his ammunition not given out.

SEPTEMBER.

Chinese miners who had been imported by the Union Pacific Railway Company were driven from the pits at Rock Springs, Wyoming, by a force of armed white men, the Chinese fleeing to the hills for safety; fifteen of the fugitives were shot dead by the mob, and many wounded; thirty-four bodies were recovered, besides many more buried in the debris of burned houses. A mob visited the Pike County Jail at Murfreesboro, Ark., and made an attempt to shoot the two Polk boys, confined for murder, but not being able to get within range hauled a load of wood to the jail, piled it around the iron cell, saturated the wood with coal oil, and roasted both prisoners alive, nothing standing but the brick walls; the Polks murdered a peddler in 1881, and had several trials. Near Gainsville, Texas, detectives surprised and killed the two Lee brothers, who were regarded as the most daring roadmen that had ever infested Indian Territory, and for whose capture, dead or alive, a reward of $7,000 had been offered; perhaps no band of outlaws in the United States ever did such bloody work in so brief a period as the Lee gang; within two years from May 1, 1885, forty-two human lives were taken by this bloody band of cattle and horse thieves. Nicholas Snowden, colored, confined in jail at Ellicott City, Md., on a charge of assaulting a child, was taken out and hanged by men of his own race. A remarkable tragedy occurred at Hilltown, Pa.; Mrs. Thomas V. Thompson, indignant because her husband would not accede to her request to turn his aged parents into the street, murdered him and subsequently killed herself. It was estimated that over twenty-four thousand Christians were murdered in the outbreaks near Amam. Four negroes, one of them a woman, who were accused of several murders, were taken from jail and hanged by a mob in Chatham County, North Carolina.

OCTOBER.

After murdering his mistress, a retired British artillery man living at Tangier, Morocco, ran amuck in the streets, stabbing many persons, two of them fatally; he was finally captured and lodged in jail. During the execution of John W. Coffee, a double murderer, at Crawfordsville, Ind., the rope broke twice, but on the third endeavor the victim was "worked off" satisfactorily. Frederick Grenier was hanged at Columbus, O., for the murder of his sweetheart; he stepped on the scaffold with a smile; arrayed as if attending an evening party, and smoking a cigar. At Indianapolis the brother of a white girl, who had been criminally assaulted by a negro, shot the assailant in the court room. A mob at Murfreesboro, Ark., set fire to the wooden jail in which one Churchill, a murderer, was confined; he appeared at a grated window, and piteously begged the mob to shoot him, but the flames soon reduced the victim and the building to ashes. Near Starrucca, Pa., John Howell, a farmer, shot his four children, varying in age from three to eleven years, and then killed himself. A man named Brandi, at Waco, Neb., becoming irritated by a lad of 13, flung him into a thrashing machine, where his head was instantly torn from his body. George Miller was the first murderer legally hanged in Dakota; he was suspended at Grand Forks, and life was not pronounced extinct until after the expiration of 22½ minutes; he had killed the wife and son of Rev. C. H. Snell, on a farm near Inkster. Ferdinand Ward, the financial shark of the late firm of Grant & Ward, was convicted of larceny and sentenced to ten years in the State prison at hard labor.

NOVEMBER.

A colored lad at Bluffton, Ga., was tried by a lynch court for stealing a pair of boots; having been convicted he was given one hundred lashes, his step-father swing ng the whip. Cyrus W. Yandes, of St. Paul, Minn., committed suicide partly because he dreaded the responsibility of settling up an estate giving him half a million. A party of four girls and two boys went into the woods of Webster County, Kentucky, to gather nuts; they were assaulted by tramps; who nearly killed the lads and bore the young ladies to a thicket and murdered them all; citizens who turned out in search identified and killed two of the tramps. At Paducah, Clay County, Texas, a lad of thirteen years, named Valentine Sanford, killed his mother with a rifle; he confessed having intended to murder his father, sell the plantations and organize a band of stage robbers. In the Criminal Court at London a verdict of criminal assault upon Eliza Armstrong was rendered against Thomas Stead, editor of the Pall Mall Gazette, and he was sentenced to three months' imprisonment. In the Criminal Court at Ottawa, Ontario, a gang of five ruffians were sentenced to imprisonment for life for a brutal assault on Miss Trimm, a lady of good family, who was promenading with her lover when seized by the villains. Fred Townsend, aged 13, killed Willie McCallister, aged 5, at Troy, N. Y., by burying him up to the neck in a bank of soft white clay, where the child lingered twenty hours before death relieved him. Three Italians were hanged at Chicago for the murder of a fellow-countryman; the victim was getting a free shave at the room of one of the culprits, and while his face was covered with lather a rope was passed over his head; the guilty trio pulled the cord, while an accessory guarded the door; $130 was the incentive. Eight of the Indians who were concerned in Riel's Canadian rebellion were hanged at Battleford, Northwest Territory. The hangman at Norwich, England, severed the head from the body of Robert Goodale as though it had been done with a razor; many spectators sickened at the sight; the drop was six feet, and the weight used was fifteen stone.

DECEMBER.

William Stevens, of Detroit, confessed the murder of his affianced, Bertha Duckwitz, saying that he drew a razor across her throat only in a playful spirit. Joseph G. Rhodes, a noted Democratic politician of Boston, killed himself because of disappointment in regard to a deputy revenue collectorship. The College of the Propaganda at Rome announced that up to November 1, in Cochin China, 24,001 Christians were massacred, 10 convents destroyed, and 225 churches burned. Sam Wilson, a negro, murdered Celia Perryman and her two children at Laurel, Miss., and attempted to burn the bodies by firing the dwelling; he was speedily captured and lynched. A family named Knoch at Detroit, consisting of husband, wife, and two children, murdered and cremated.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

THE man who receives the most letters a day in Washington is not the President nor any member of his Cabinet, but a pension attorney, whose daily mail frequently numbers 500 letters.

THE physicians of Sanford, Fla., have signed an agreement not to visit any patients who will not pay their bills on the first of each month. Those failing will not be attended until the former bill is settled.

VANDERBILT probably had in mind the scriptural idea that who provideth not for his own hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel. The man who leaves each of his children not less than $10,000,000 may be regarded as a kind if not indulgent father.

SENATOR EDMUNDS keeps four horses in his stable. He lives quietly but expensively. When he first entered the chamber it is said he was worth less than $50,000, but his wealth now is placed at $500,000. He has a fashion of leaving his seat in the Senate and going over to argue a case before the Supreme Court that pays him very well.

JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY, the Hoosier poet, is a man of 37 years, of slight build, not tall, with long, thin hands, a pale complexion, large and brilliant gray eyes, a prominent nose, thin lips and blonde hair. He is a fluent and interesting talker, and like queer people; was taught sign painting as a trade, but didn't encourage his parents by special proficiency therein.

CITIES sometimes possess as much individuality as men. In Boston they ask "How much does he know?" In Philadelphia, "Who are his family?" In Baltimore, "Can he get away with oysters and terrapin?" In Charlestown, "Where did he come from?" In Mobile, "Does he eat gumbo?" In New Orleans, "How much cotton is he worth?" And in New York, "What is his bank account?"

THE business of painting the huge signs upon fences and barns which assault the eye in all parts of the country is in the hands of a few contractors in in New York and Chicago. One firm in New York spends from $10,000 to $20,000 a year in this way, paying from 1½ to 2 cents a square foot for the work. The bigger the sign the better. Many can be found reaching three hundred feet in length, and the biggest of all (at Newark, Ohio) is more than eight hundred feet long and contains only one word.

ABOUT this time of year readers of daily newspapers may without fear of disappointment, scan the ir sheets over their breakfast sausage or bacon in search of appetizing bits of family history like this. "They ate raw pork and died." The same form of obituary, varying only with the names of the deceased, will appear with unusual regularity, until the populace becomes convinced that the flesh of the hog is a more toothsome as well as safer article of diet when well cooked.

TO THE day of Commodore Vanderbilt's death his word was law to William H. An illustation of this is furnished by a little scene on a European tour that the two made in 1853. They were on board the steam yacht Northern Star on their way to St. Petersburg. Witham, who was an habitual smoker, was puffing his favorite cigar. "Bill," said the Commodore, "I wish you'd give up that smoking habit of yours. I'll give you $10,000 if you will." "You needn't pay me anything," was the son's answer, as he flung the cigar overboard. "Your wish is sufficient." He never smoked afterward.

THE Louisville Courier-Journal tells the following incident of the late Mr. Hendricks' boyhood: "A boy, the son of a poor widow, attended the seminary. One cold November morning the boy came to the school barefoot, as he had no shoes. During the forenoon there was a heavy snow storm. At noon the barefoot boy went to the front-door when school was dismissed, but turned back to re-enter the schoolroom as he could not go out into such a storm in his naked feet. Young Hendricks knew all about his poverty, and, following him into the school-room, insisted on taking off his shoes and lending them to the poor boy to wear home. 'You can send them back by sister Nannie, whom I will get to go home with you. The boy accepted the proffered kindness, and Hendricks sat in the school-room in his stocking-feet till his sister returned with his shoes."

WILLIAM J. SMYTHE, an old attache of the New York Herald, died recently. A few years ago, when Bennett contemplated starting a newspaper in London which should smash the British "Thunderer," he telegraphed Smythe to meet him in London at the Langham. Smythe started at once, but failed to find his employer there. After waiting a month he wrote to Bennett, who was roving around the Continent, asking him for orders and mildly suggesting at the close of the letter that staying at the Langham was expensive business. Bennett telegraphed back from Dresden: "Who in hell is paying for this? Wait." And Smythe waited. Bennett gave up his plan and Smythe returned to America.

A RECENT traveler in Spain tells how the children in Grenada played at bull fighting. One boy, holding a pair of wooden horns on his head, represented the bull. Other boys, mounted on each other's backs, were picadors, while others again, with their jackets in their hands were supposed to be matadors and chulos. The bull would stamp his feet and roar, then make a rush at one of the chulos, whose jacket was thrown up by the wooden horns, but whose body was never touched. Then the bull would charge one of the picadors, whereupon the boy playing horse would throw himself to the ground and allow himself to be properly gored.

A WASHINGTON letter tells this story of Hannibal Hamlin: "Some legislation was being considered in the halls of Congress in regard to one of the railroads. The bill came up in the Senate, and it needed but a vote or two to pass it. At this moment a brother Senator came to Hamlin's desk and said: 'Senator Hamlin, if this bill passes the Blank Blank railroad's bonds will be worth a hundred cents on the dollar. I can take you or let you send to a place where you can get any amount of these bonds at this moment for six cents on the dollar. What say you to the chance?' 'I say —— your chance and —— your bonds, sir,' was Hamlin's emphatic reply, and with that he turned his back square upon his brother Senator, and the story is that he never treated him decently afterward."

A NASHVILLE newspaper the other day published a statement which illustrates how the race problem at the South is working out its own solution. The grand jury impaneled at the recent term of the Criminal Court included one negro, and after their own work was completed, the white members of the body concluded to "make a public expression of their appreciation and admiration of the course pursued by this colored gentleman during the session." They accordingly asked a publication of the fact that this was the first instance in which most of them had ever been associated with a negro in a responsible position, and that the relation was thus inevitably strained, but that his firmness, justice and conscientiousness "eradicated every prejudice," while, to clap the climax, "his demeanor in every social aspect was everything that the most exacting Southern gentleman could require."

NEW YORK Mail: Recently Mrs. Wilbur F. Storey, widow of the deceased Chicago editor, was in the city. She is very stylish, and presents a fine appearance. She was attired in deep mourning, and wore magnificent diamonds in her ears and on her fingers, and a cinster of gems of matchless brilliancy on her corsage. These gems were hemmed around by crape, but they sparkled all the same like the star Sirius when it greets the Pleiades in the early evening. Mrs. Storey related the trouble that had come to her since her husband's death: "Many people that once were professed friends, in the great legal combat that is now going on to probate Mr. Storey's will arrayed themselves against me. Of course, I am aware of the influences that were brought to bear upon them by those who do not wish the will probated. One of the so-called friends was in the habit of dining at my home. President Cleveland appointed him Minister to Belgium, and for that I owe thanks. Mr. Storey left two wills. Both are valid and made when he was in sound mind. It is only a question of a short time when I shall come into possession of the Times newspaper. I think that I will sell it, because I do not care to have such a great responsibility on my hands. I am not a journalist."

DISASTERS OF THE YEAR.

JANUARY.

Stock by the thousands reported dying of hunger in the ranges of Montana. Shocks of earthquake in Spain created intense panic, a number of towns and villages were completely destroyed, and the surviving inhabitants deserted them. Losses from fires in the United States and Canada during 1884 were placed at $112,000,000—over $15,000,000 in excess of the annual average for nine years; loss during December, 1884, $11,000,000. The bodies of fourteen men were found along a railroad grade between Valentine and Gordon City, Neb., who perished in a blizzard. Many lives, with a number of vessels, were lost in a great storm which swept the British coast. A cyclone whose roar could be heard for miles swept through Georgia and Alabama, carrying away buildings and fences. Twenty-eight men buried alive by an explosion of fire-damp in the great coal mine at Lievin au Pas de Calais, France; all killed. Burning of the infirmary for male patients of the lunatic asylum at Kankakee, Ill.; seventeen of the incurable inmates cremated. Twenty-eight lives lost by the sinking of the British packet Admiral Moorsom, which collided with the ship Santa Anna near Holyhead, Wales. Enormous snowslide in the Alpine foothills of Switzerland and Piedmont, crushing two villages, with a loss of over forty lives and the injury of nearly one hundred persons. The Bay State Sugar Refinery burned at Boston; loss, $1,000,000. Burning of the steamer St. John—a very large and fine vessel—at her pier in New York; she originally cost $500,000. An avalanche at Melvulles, in the French Alps, crushes a church and buries a congregation in the snow; twenty workmen in a marble quarry near by also buried. Some deaths, much suffering and many wrecks reported among the fishing fleets on the Newfoundland coast, caused by a cold gale. Loss of the American schooner Arcana in the Bay of Fundy, with Capt. Holmes and eight men. Forty passengers killed by the wreck of a train at a bridge near Sydney, N. S. W. Total loss by fire in the United States and Canada during January, $8,500,000—more than $1,000,000 above average January loss in nine years.

FEBRUARY.

Fire at Marquette, Mich., destroyed $250,000 worth of property. Loss of over $1,000,000 incurred by the burning of a marble building in Barclay street, New York. The village of Battle Lake, Minn., almost swept out of existence by a conflagration. Fire in Gold and Spruce sts., New York, destroyed property valued at $250,000. Steel works at Nashua, N. H., suffered a loss of $100,000 by the burning of plate and bar mills. By a collision of freight trains on a bridge at New Brunswick, N. J., an oil tank exploded, and the burning fluid spread to two manufactories, several dwellings, and a stable full of horses; four persons perished in the flames, and the money loss reached $1,000,000. Powder works near Canton, China, exploded, killing 250 employes. By the fall of a scaffold on the Susquehanna bridge at Havre-de-Grace, five workmen fell through the ice into the river, fifty feet below, and two drowned. Thirteen miners killed by a colliery explosion at New Glasgow, N. S. Twenty-eight insane inmates of the county almshouse in West Philadelphia cremated in the destruction of that institution. The town of Alta, Utah, swept by a heavy avalanche of snow, and three-fourths of the buildings destroyed; eighteen lives lost. Seventeen lives (nine of them civilians) lost and much damage done at Gibraltar, Spain, by the explosion of a powder magazine. Pottsville, Pa., had a $800,000 conflagration. The entire business portion of Phœnix, Arizona, was reduced to ashes; loss $700,000. Several manufactories at Lynn, Mass., were swept away, causing a loss of $100,000. Explosion of gas in a Wilkesbarre mine caused death of twelve men and serious burning of ten others. Of the Canadian voyagers who took Gen. Wolseley's boat up the Nile ten were drowned, two died from fever, and two were killed on the railway in Egypt. Fire destroyed the Grand's Block, Chicago, 23, which were three banks, a loss of $700,000 being incurred; four large business structures corner of State and Chestnut streets, Philadelphia—loss $250,000; dos. H. Brower's grocery loss at Fort Worth, Texas—loss $200,000; the Le Roy Pin Company at Troy, N. Y., loss $90,000. Five persons lost their lives in a collision on the Virginia Midland Railroad at Four Mile, Va.; the contents of the express safe, $250,000, were destroyed, also more valuable mail matter than was ever before known; the fire was so intense as to melt the gold and silver in transit. Fire destroyed the Mer in Safe Company's factory at New York, valued at $250,000. John A. Bing's residence in Philadelphia took fire before the occupants had risen from their couches, and cost of the family of eight persons but three escaped alive. Ten business buildings at New Britain, Conn., valued with contents at $200,000, were burned; one man lost his life. Citizens and live stock were reported starving in McDowell County, W. Va., a region 100 miles from any railroad, on account of failure of crops last summer. An Illinois Central train consumed 168 hours in making the trip from Bloomington to Kankakee—86 miles—owing to the snow blockade. The steamer Allegheny, from Cardiff for Ceylon, was lost with her crew of thirty persons. Flames swept away the National Theater at Washington; loss $200,000. During February the fire loss reached $10,000,000. A terrific hurricane on the east coast of Madagascar sank an American bark and two French steamers; seventeen persons perished.

MARCH.

Fire-damp in the Usworth Colliery, at Usworth, England, caused an explosion and the loss of forty-eight lives. From a coal mine in Austrian Silesia in which an explosion occurred, 124 corpses were taken. Of 220 miners employed in a colliery at Camphausen, Rhenish Prussia, all were either crushed to death or asphyxiated by an explosion of fire-damp except thirty. The Langham Hotel at Chicago was destroyed by fire, causing the loss of five lives. Twelve miners lost their lives by a terrific explosion in a coal mine at McAllister, Indian Territory.

APRIL.

While workmen were bracing up the yielding foundations of eight five-story tenements in New York City the entire structure fell, burying about fifty workmen in the ruins; the contractor fled to escape lynching. Tramps who had been driven away from Senator Stanford's Vina (Cal.) ranch returned and fired his stables, 111 horses and mules being burned to death. A volcanic eruption causing the death of 100 persons occurred on the Island of Java. Vicksburg, Miss., was visited by a destructive fire which caused the loss of forty lives; thirty-two of the victims were buried one day; the telegraph gave only the briefest mention of the disaster. An avalanche in Iceland swept fifteen dwellings, with their inhabitants, into the sea, and twenty-four persons drowned. Aggregate losses by fire in the United States and Canada in April, $7,750,000; for the first four months of 1885, $35,250,000—at the rate of over $105,000,000 for the year.

MAY.

A Portsmouth (Pa.) dispatch dated the 1st inst. announced: "The plague here is increasing in horror daily; fourteen funerals yesterday; 1,700 persons now under medical treatment, and physicians exhausted with their labors." An attempt to raise a five-story factory in Brooklyn, N. Y., resulted in the collapse of the building; hundreds of men, women, and girls were employed therein, some thirty of whom lost their lives; pecuniary damage, $300,000. Five children of Henry Dewiston, a farmer near Owatonna, Minn., were burned to death. A terrific snowstorm prevailed throughout Austria and Hungary on the 17th and 18th of May; many persons were frozen to death and crops generally were destroyed. Eight women and girls employed in a Cincinnati printing-house, during a fire, leaped from the fifth-story windows, and all were killed; nine corpses were found on the upper floor; escape by stairways was cut off, and telegraph wires prevented the plying of ladders by the firemen. During a dense fog, the steamship City of Rome crushed into the French bark George Johns, off Newfoundland, twenty-two of the bark's crew perishing. A rain-storm deluged the valley of the Brazos River, Texas, resulting in immense damage; at Waco 11½ inches of water fell in five hours; the losses exceeded $20,000,000. Losses by fire in the United States and Canada in May, $8,750,000.

JUNE.

The Vale of Cashmere, in India, was visited by a disastrous earthquake, Serinagur, one of the capitals, being nearly destroyed, and the soldiers' barracks razed to the ground; 51 soldiers were killed and over 100 wounded; the Mohammedan mosque at Supur, 24 miles north of Serinagur, was demolished and 400 persons killed. A village of 400 houses in Northern Hungary was destroyed by an incendiary fire, rendering 1,000 persons destitute; the enraged populace discovered the culprit and roasted him to death over a bonfire. An explosion in the Philadelphia Colliery, near Durham, England, caused the death of 22 men and boys. The French war-ship Renard, with a crew of 127, foundered in the Red Sea. Nearly 200 lives were lost by the bursting of a waterspout in the mountains near the dividing line between the Mexican States of Guanajuato and Jalisco. By the fall of a crowded stairway in the Court House in Thiers, France, 25 persons were killed and 163 injured. Twenty lives were lost and over 50 persons were severely injured by a destructive storm which visited the western and northern portions of Iowa; the loss to property was $700,000. As a result of the earthquakes in Cashmere, India, 3,081 persons lost their lives, 70,000 houses were laid in ruins, and 73,000 animals perished. In a single day 238 deaths from cholera were reported in Spain, with 491 new cases. A terrible explosion occurred at the Pendlebury colliery, near Manchester, England, and of the 349 miners employed therein 160 perished. Cholera reports from Spain for one day show 316 deaths and 719 new cases. The fire losses in this country during the first six months of 1885 amounted to $53,750,000.

JULY.

Floods in China caused great loss of life and enormous destruction of property. Toyama, Japan, was visited by a conflagration which destroyed 5,917 houses. Stoughton, Wis., suffered a loss of $650,000 by fire; about one-third of the tobacco crop of the State was consumed. The steam-yacht Minnie Cook was capsized on Lake Minnetonka during a storm, and ten persons, including ex-Mayor Rand, of Minneapolis, his wife and two sons, were drowned. Fire at Washington, D. C., destroyed the presses and composing and editorial rooms of the Post, National Republican, Critic, and Sunday Gazette; loss $150,000. A lifeboat which started from Yarmouth, England, to the relief of a brig in distress sank before reaching its destination, and eight of its crew were drowned. Thirteen persons were killed and 22 injured by lightning during a storm at Torre Cajetani, Italy. Total losses by fire in this country during the month of July estimated at $9,000,000.

AUGUST.

Half a mile along the water-front of Toronto, occupied by boat houses, lumber yards, elevators, etc., was destroyed by fire; scores of vessels were burned; the loss of property was placed at $1,000,000. A great earthquake in the region of Tashkend, in Asiatic Turkey, swallowed up portions of villages and cities, killing many people. A great flood devastated the province of Canton, China, causing the death of 10,000 people and the destruction of many villages. An explosion of gas at the Morgan-gap (Pa.) coal mines caused the death of twenty men and boys. The little town of Norwood, St. Lawrence County, N. Y., was visited by a terrific storm of only three minutes' duration; but during that time eight persons were killed and the place almost wiped out of existence. The American barks Napoleon and Gazelle were lost in the ice in the Northern Pacific, and twenty-two persons perished. The British ship Buddingtonshire was wrecked in the Pacific Ocean, in the vacinity of San Francisco; eighteen of the crew perished. The German corvette Augusta and a crew of 238 officers and sailors were lost in a cyclone in the Red Sea. The Scotch steam-dredge Beaufort, with a crew of twelve persons, was lost in a hurricane off the Bermudas; officers and men are said to have been drunk. A steamer carrying pilgrims was wrecked in the Gulf of Aden; 400 lives lost. A month of cholera cost Spain greater loss in money and life than a war of a year's duration calling all her able-bodied men into the field; over 70,000 people died in August. Charleston, S. C., was visited by a cyclone, which unroofed one-fourth of the buildings in the city and destroyed a vast amount of property, the aggregate loss being estimated at $1,000,000; great havic was also caused along the entire South Atlantic coast. Three pilot boats sailing from Beaufort, S. C., were wrecked in a hurricane, fourteen lives being lost. The losses by fire in the United States and Canada during August reached $35,500,000, the average for the month named for ten years being $7,000,000; for eight months of 1885 the fire waste footed up $85,500,000.

SEPTEMBER.

Shipyards at Barrow-in-Furness, England, burned, causing a loss of $1,000,000, and depriving two thousand men of employment. Near Copenhagen the British steamer Auckland came in collision with the German gunboat Blitz and was sent to the bottom, only two of the Auckland's crew of seventeen being rescued. In a collision between the steamers Brenda and Dolphin, off the southeast coast of England, seventeen of the crew and passengers of the latter were lost. Prairie fires destroyed over a million dollars' worth of crops and other property in Dakota; a solid stretch of over 100 miles along the line of the Northern Pacific was burned. People to the number of 30,000 assembled in front of Mme. Christine Nilsson's hotel at Stockholm, Sweden, to hear her sing from the balcony, and in the crush that ensued seventeen persons perished; twenty-nine others were seriously injured. Disastrous floods, covering an area of 3,550 square miles, occurred in the presidency of Bengal, British India, causing immense damage to property and loss of life; 400 persons were drowned. A great fire visited Iquique, Peru, destroying over $2,000,000 worth of property. The fire losses for September in the United States and Canada were computed at $6,525,000—$3,700,000 less than during the corresponding month of 1884.

OCTOBER.

A railway accident in Greece caused the death or injury of between forty and sixty persons. London had a $15,000,000 conflagration; a block of thirteen eight-story business buildings was consumed in Aldersgate. Floods in the valleys of Switzerland destroyed a large amount of property, and caused the loss of a number of lives. Cholera in Tonquin carried off 3,000 Frenchmen in nine months. Deaths in Montreal for five days, from small-pox, numbered 1,370; on one street in Ste. Cunegonde there was a case to every house. At Perigeux, France, the Chanceladc quarries fell in, destroying a village, and killing many people. During a storm on the Labrador coast, 70 vessels were wrecked and 301 lives lost; 2,000 shipwrecked persons on the shore were rendered destitute. A rainstorm of eighteen hours' duration caused floods in the Shenandoah Valley, Va., more water falling than in the two previous years. The losses by fire during October, in the United States and Canada, reached $5,750,000—about $2,250,000 less than the average for October in the past ten years. The U. S. Consul at Palermo reported 2,000 deaths in that city from cholera up to October 12, and stated that over 50,000 persons fled from the epidemic.

NOVEMBER.

A cyclone at Dangerfield, Tex., killed a colored family of six persons. Nearly a score of persons were killed and forty or fifty seriously injured near Selma, Ala., by a destructive cyclone. The iron steamer Algomia, belonging to the Canadian Pacific Road, struck a reef off Fort Arthur, Lake Superior, in a dense fog, and went down; 15 of the passengers were lost, and 14 of the crew saved. Flames in Galveston, Texas, destroyed 400 houses, mostly residences, the losses being $2,500,000. A cyclone in the Philippine Islands destroyed 8,000 buildings and killed many people. A cyclone in the Oressa, Moorshedabad and Hindoo districts of India desolated vast extents of country, submerged 150 villages, and destroyed 5,000 lives. A remarkable tidal wave along the Atlantic coast on the 24th caused great damage on the New England seaboard as well as in New York harbor and on the New Jersey coast; a submarine earthquake was believed to have caused the sudden rise. The loss by fire in the United States and Canada during November was placed at $7,500,000, and for the eleven months, to Dec. 1, the loss footed up $85,000,000.

DECEMBER.

Fire consumed the Barnum Wire Works at Detroit, valued at $277,000, and employing 240 men. An earthquake ravaged four populous towns of Algeria, killing 32 persons, among them several Europeans. Through the failure of a gripman a cable train on the East River Bridge, at New York, two cars slipped back down the curve at the Brooklyn end, crashing into another train; five persons received serious injuries; the bridge officials report that the cable road has carried 38,500,000 passengers without losing a life; Brooklyn people to the number of 16,000 an hour are transported to New York during the morning hours on week days. The Pennsylvania Company paid $20,398 to William Fitz Shannon, one of its former engineers, who was crippled for life in a collision caused by a trainsitis, another's blunder. Two men engaged in the construction of the new Croton aqueduct, at Merritt's Corners, N. Y., were killed, making thirty-eight who have lost their lives in connection with this work. Near Athuma, Georgia, a collision occurred between trains of the Georgia Pacific and East Tennessee Roads, on a high trestle; twelve persons were killed and fifty others received fatal injuries. Flames originating on the dock at Jacksonville, Fla., destroyed a number of business houses, valued at $450,000. A cyclone at Aspinwall sunk fifteen vessels, with their crews. Thirty Hungarians were drowned in a mine at Nanticoke, Pa., by a rise in the Susquehanna River. A dynamite explosion in a Siberian mine caused the loss of from 400 to 1,000 lives.

—Ex-Governor and Senator Alexander Ramsey, of Minnesota, member of the Utah Commission under the Edmunds act, intends to settle down to the practice of law in Detroit when his term on the commission expires.

—Wm. Laraway, a pioneer of Kent County, died at Grand Rapids. He was one of the first settlers in the county, and was held in high esteem. Some years ago he suffered a stroke of paralysis, from which he gradually failed.

—A newspaper in Michigan is called the Smiths. Every article in it relates to a member of the Smith family, and it is simply appalling to think of the number of "corrections" that will daily be demanded of its unfortunate editor.—Exchange.

—Thomas Mayett, of Blackmar, aged nearly 93 years, died Christmas Day. He was born in Buckinghamshire, England, and came to Michigan in 1834. He had lived in Jackson County for forty-nine years. He leaves one son and three daughters.

—John Fiske, one of the oldest pioneers in Kent County, died at Grand Rapids, aged 82 years. He built the old hotel at Reed's Lake thirty years ago, and was many years its proprietor. He was buried by the "Old Residents' Association," of which he was an honored member.

—The eyes of the scientific world still rest on the Hudson cow whose stomach was cut open to give her owner a chance to recover two bushels of oats stored therein. The cow still liveth, is getting well, and promises to become quite as healthy as any of her kin.—Free Press.

—The death of Mrs. A. Palmer, the wife of a prominent merchant in Three Rivers, is attributed to sewage poison, which had contaminated the reservoir of a driven well nearly thirty feet in depth. Mr. Palmer and his eldest son have been very low from the same cause, but are now thought to be convalescing.

—A curious case of blood-poisoning was developed in the case of Ransom Corey, who died at Quincy a few days since. He was shot in the arm in the war of the rebellion, and it healed and did not trouble him till about a week before his death, when it became troublesome and resulted in blood-poisoning, causing his death.

—Cards are out for the wedding of Miss Edith Foster, daughter of the ex-Minister to Spain, to the Rev. Mr. Dallas, of Detroit, on the 13th of January. The ceremony will be performed at the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, Washington, by Rev. Dr. William Alvin Bartlett.

—Whatever explanation may be offered for the numerous and the singular crimes in Michigan, most of them pointing to family jealousies and quarrels, it is certain that nothing is so much needed at this time as the apprehension, conviction and punishment of a few of the men who have committed to those manifold horrors.—Chicago Herald.

—Dr. Henry B. Baker, of Lansing, read a paper before the American Health Association at Washington on "The Relation of Rainfall and Water Supply to Cholera." He showed that cholera always increased during the dry season, and decreased after abundant rain. The Association discussed fully the question of "Hog Cholera," together with the subject of inoculation by Pasteur's method.

—The wife of Col. O'Donnell, the new member from the Third Michigan District, will prove a pleasant acquisition to Washington society, being graceful in manner, of bright wit, and charming in appearance. The Colonel himself was almost as peculiar as Gov. Knott's aide, with the rank of Mister. He was a private in the army. His title as Colonel was obtained from being on the Governor's staff.—Washington Capital.

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

The editor of the Boyne Statesman should read the JOURNAL of Dec. 24th again, and see if an opinion is expressed in regard to the trial of Barry, or whether a simple statement of certain portions of the evidence is made. The JOURNAL did not have a complete abstract, but it did have enough to show the nature of the case. The facts in favor of the prosecution were given at the time of the murder, and after the sentence was pronounced we gave enough of certain portions of the evidence to show the nature of the defense. The JOURNAL has not receded from its demand for the full punishment of this crime. Instead of showing a change of heart, the article in question is a simple statement of the facts justifying the very light sentence. The statement of facts given to most of the state press would warrant a life sentence, and the question most likely to arrise in the minds of people outside would be, "what kind of a jury and judge have they up there, to punish a murderer with only three years in the house of correction?"

The Proposed Destruction of the Greenbacks.

The scheme to authorize the secretary of the treasury to destroy the legal tender notes as fast as they find their way into the national treasury, is not likely to succeed at the present session of congress. This scheme is but another manifestation of the bondholders' determination to make money scarcer and correspondingly dearer in this country. Demonetize silver and burn the greenbacks and what a harvest the usurers and the rich creditor classes would reap! And yet this is precisely what some really honest people want the government to do.

The plea of those who advocate the the destruction of the legal tender notes, is that they are as much a part of the national debt as the bonds, and that when the government receives one in the course of business the promise of redemption has been fulfilled and the note should be destroyed. This plea is urged in utter disregard of the fact that greenbacks are an absolutely indispensable part of the circulating medium of the country; that they are used by the people in the transaction of ordinary business more than any other form of currency with the exception of national bank notes; and that their destruction would cause such a contraction and disturbance in our monetary system as to practically paralyze trade and industry, and work general ruin. The effect would not be worse if the government were to set about destroying one-half of the entire movable property of the country, including horses, ships, railroads, and all other appliances for carrying on commerce. We unhesitatingly affirm that even such an act of wholesale destruction would not cause anywhere near the prolonged universal distress that would follow the calling in and retirement of the $346,000,000 of legal tender notes. It is not possible that such a monstrous scheme of despoilation will find any favor with the representatives of the people at Washington.

If the eastern money kings are so anxious to have the debt reduced, we would suggest that they urge upon Secretary Manning the propriety of obeying the law and calling in bonds that are already past due and redeeming them with the millions of money in the treasury piled up there for that very purpose. It will strike the ordinarily prudent business man that the wisest policy to pursue under the circumstances is to redeem the interest bearing indebtedness before retiring the legal tender notes which cost the people nothing but the slight expense of engraving and printing them. A democratic administration with half an eye to the interests of the people ought to see that any other policy will meet with only universal condemnation and the most stubborn resistance on the part of the taxpayers and producers of the country.—Lansing Journal.

Notes and News.

Speaking of the death of vice-President Hendricks, the New York Sun paints the following vivid pen picture of the candidates of 1876: Note the contrast, for it is part of history, and its lesson is impressive. Of the two men elected president and vice-president in 1876 one still lives, conspicuously honored and warmly beloved, the first citizen of the land, after having twice refused a nomination that meant the sure righting in a measure, the wrongs which the democracy suffered in his person nine years ago. The other dies in the office from which he was shut out by the conspirators of the fraud. Honored and sincerely mourned by the nation, he is carried to-day to his last resting place. Of the two men who profited chiefly by the monstrous iniquity, one is already forgotten—who knows where Wheeler is, or whether he lives or sleeps in oblivion? The other crawls out of obscurity to touch the hem of Hendrick's shroud, happy thus to attract for an hour even the attention of universal contempt.

On the seventy-fifth birthday the late Robert Toombs, of Georgia, told a World correspondent that he never made the declaration about calling the roll of his slaves at the foot of Bunker Hill Monument so often attributed to him. Mr. Toombs, during his life, made several attempts to silence this bit of political thunder, but he never was able to make himself heard. That alleged assertion has passed into history along with Justice Taney's alleged remark about the negro having no rights that a white man was bound to respect. The Judge spent a great part of his life trying to correct that falsehood, but he never made the slightest impression on it. It is just as vigorous today, as it was the day it started on its journey through the centuries.—World.

Six things are requisite to create a happy home. Integrity must be the architect and tidiness the upholsterer. It must be warmed by affection, lighted up with cheerfulness, and industry must be the ventilator, renewing the atmosphere and bringing in fresh salubrity day by day, while over all, as a protecting canopy and glory, nothing will suffice except the blessing of God.

Among well-bred people a mutual deference is affected; contempt of others disguised; authority concealed; attention given to each in his turn, and an easy stream of conversation maintained, without vehemence, without interruption, without eagerness for victory and without any airs of superiority.

Power naturally seeks to strengthen and perpetuate itself, and the great danger to our institutions is not from frequent official changes, but from the usurpations and encroachments of authority endeavoring to render its leases and privileges lifelong or hereditary.—Andrew Jackson.

While the breezy republican politicians of South Dakota are trying to force their thin territory into the sisterhood of states it should not be forgotten that Texas could be chopped up into four excellent democratic states.—World.

There are some people who never succeed, from being too indolent to attempt anything; and others who regularly fail, because the instant they find success in their power, they grow indifferent and give over the attempt.

In a free country every voter should be a politician, every man should have an intelligent comprehension of and take a deep interest in all public questions.—Andrew Jackson.

People should regard office as an opportunity of usefulness, not a livelihood, and should be prepared to resign it when occasion requires.—Andrew Jackson.

No party can carry out any distinctive policy that employs its opponents as agents.—Andrew Jackson.

"Elia" and Charles Lamb.

A unique genius, that of Charles Lamb. Just like nothing that ever appeared before them, or has since appeared, are the quaint and delightful "Essays of Elia," a new edition of which has recently been issued by Alden, "The Literary Revolution" publisher of New York. Turn to any of your cyclopedias and they will tell you that Charles Lamb was one of the most charming essayists that the English language has ever known, and also that his "Essays of Elia" are the choicest of his works. They are not merely the first work of their class, but, like "Pilgrim's Progress" and "Robinson Crusoe," they constitute a class by themselves. The volume is certainly one of the most delightful of the books described in Mr. Alden's 148-page illustrated catalogue, which he offers to send for 4 cents, or the 16-page catalogue which is sent free. Address, John B. Alden, Publisher, New York City. G. W. Crouter, agent in this city.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the condition of a certain mortgage, made by Mary Blackbird to John A. Bacot, dated October 3d, A. D. 1884, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, on the 3d day of October, A. D. 1881, in liber 8 of mortgages, on page 522, which said mortgage was on the 22d day of December, 1884, assigned by said John A. Bacot to Frederick W. Mayne, said assignment being on record in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 10 of mortgages on page 610, and on the 14th day of December 1885, was assigned by said Frederick W. Mayne to Hugh Miller, said assignment being recorded in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 13 of mortgages, on page 146, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of One hundred and ninety six and 15-100 dollars, as principal and interest, and no suit or proceedings at law having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof. Now, therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and the statute in such case made and provided, notice is hereby given that on Saturday, the 13th day of March, A. D. 1886, at one o'clock in the afternoon, I shall sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the town hall in the village of East Jordan, (that being the place where the Circuit Court for Charlevoix County, is holden,) the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with ten per cent interest, and all legal costs, together with an attorney's fee of fifteen dollars, covenanted for therein, the premises being described in said mortgage as all that parcel of land, situate in the township of Hayes, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, and known and described as follows: The south west quarter (¼) of the south west quarter (¼) of section thirty-six (36) township thirty four (34) north of range seven (7) west, containing forty acres according to the United States survey.

Dated Charlevoix, Mich., Dec. 15, 1885.

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage, made and dated the tenth day of September, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four, executed by Heming Frizzell to the Pine Lake Iron Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, and doing business in the county of Charlevoix, in the State of Michigan, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of the said County of Charlevoix, in Liber 17 of mortgages at page 11, on the 18th day of April, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-five, at one o'clock in the afternoon, and the same is now owned by the said Pine Lake Iron Company. And whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of Fifty-Five Dollars and Twenty-two cents, principal and interest, which sum is a part of the purchase price of the premises herein described, and a further sum of fifteen dollars provided by law as an attorney's fee in the foreclosure of said mortgage, which is the whole amount claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage, and no suit or proceedings at law or in chancery having been instituted to recover the debt now remaining secured by the said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in the said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises herein described at public auction to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in the township of South Arm, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, which is the place of holding the circuit court for said county, on Friday, the 2d day of April next, at twelve o'clock meridian, which premises are described in the said mortgage as follows, to wit: Lots twenty (20) and twenty-one (21) in block number twelve (12) in the Pine Lake Iron Co.'s plat of Ironton, town of Eveline, county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan.

Local Notes and News.

CLEMENT J. STRANG, EDITOR.

Round Lake was frozen over Wednesday morning.

Born—On Thursday last, to Mr. and Mrs. Clif. Papineau, a boy.

A. R. Upright has built a large wind-mill to supply his house and barn with water.

Regardless of the disagreable weather the reading room had ten patrons the first afternoon.

Pine Lake Iron Co. are cutting wood for their furnace at the rate of 300 cords and over daily.

Will Horton and Elmer Mayne returned home from the south on Tuesday. Horton has been sick.

Miss Kate Smith, of Petoskey, spent New Year with her brother, Fred. A. Smith, in Charlevoix.

The late snow storm has made quite a hole in our wood pile. Please take notice, and come and see us.

M. E. Sunday school is fully reorganized and equipped for the new year. Come in and join the work.

Oliver Cooper, formerly in the grocery business with his brother, is now behind the counter at Fox & Miller's.

John Nicholls and wife, and Misses Celia Nicholls and Minnie Lewis, returned home from the west last Saturday.

Rev. J. J. Kanagy has gone to Ohio to see a sick brother-in-law. He does not expect to return for several months.

Married—On Thursday last by the Rev. C. F. Van Auken. Mr. Edgar Geboo and Miss Annie Smith, both of Charlevoix.

Fred See has returned from Acme with his family, bag and baggage, with the conclusion that Charlevoix is a good enough place to live in.

Preaching at the M. E. church on next Sunday morning and evening. Young people's meeting at 6 o'clock. Preaching on next Monday evening, by Rev. J. H. McCartney.

The warm weather of last week was disastrous to the plans of those who had laid in large stocks of fresh pork for the winter trade. One of our dealers had to pack an unusual large stock, so that it would not spoil on his hands.

Without wishing to detract from Al Washburn's excellent reputation as a decorator, we are requested to correct our statement made last week, and say that Fred Cochran and George Wilson did the work of putting up the mottoes in the M. E. church.

The late snow has given the wood business a boom. Where the roads are sheltered by woods the sleighing is fair, and the bare spots can mostly be avoided by drawing to one side. The sound of the woodman's axe and the crash of the falling trees is heard "the livelong day."

A few more pictures are needed for the library and reading room. Any person having chromos or other pictures which they can spare for a time will have the gratitude of all, for the loan of the same to hang upon these walls. No harm can come to them, and they will be a delight to many.

Died—On Jan. 1st, 1886, aged 21 years, 5 months and 23 days, Mrs. Elizabeth Moore, from near Charlevoix. Her illness was of short duration, but her last days were days of great anxiety and suffering. The burial services were conducted by Rev. J. J. Kanagy on Sunday last; but the disease being diptheria, the sermon was posponed, and will be preached in the Congregational church on Sunday, the 10th, at 10:30 a. m., by the Rev. C. F. Van Auken.

The work of Mr. Potter, the evangelist, was marked with more apparent results in Ironton than in Charlevoix. Not only did he have crowded houses of attentive listeners, but many promising in conversions were made among both young and old. Since his departure religious interest has not been allowed to decline; but with the young people's meeting and regular prayer meeting, it can be said, "The Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved."

It is unfortunate that Rev. J. D. Potter was obliged to leave his work here while in the midst of its best results. Yet the work accomplished cannot be lost. The ministers and christian people are putting forth unusual effort during this week of prayer to impress upon the minds of men the fact that christianity does not build a wall around a man to imprison him, nor shut out the sunshine of life, but encircles him with the arms of an almighty and loving Father to protect him from the dangers of life.

New Year was observed in a very quiet manner in Charlevoix this year. There were but four open houses (same as reported last week), and but four or five parties of callers. The ladies furnished some excellent dinners, and the temptation to eat to excess was very great, especially to those who had fasted during the usual hour for dinner. For want of snow to make good sleighing, the streets were unusually quiet all day. One party of callers attracted considerable attention by using John Nicholls' dump-cart, drawn by a pair of frisky steers. Other parties took a hack or went on foot, as suited their convenience.

Free Reading Rooms.

The public library and reading rooms were opened for the first time on Monday afternoon. We are delighted with its prospect of usefulness. It is in one of the finest buildings in town,—the town hall,—is centrally located, beautifully surrounded, and easy of access, being on the ground floor. It is well lighted by the numerous large windows by day, and plenty of hanging lamps in the evening, and kept comfortably warm and carefully ventilated. Miss Effie Berdan is employed as librarian and stands ready to wait on all who may come,—and we may add, probably prefers to wait on people than have them take books from the shelves and put them back in the wrong places, as she endeavors to be systematic and tasteful in their arrangement on the shelves. The library is open Tuesdays and Fridays from 9 a. m. until 6 p. m. The reading room is open the same hours of every day, and Sundays from 12 until 6. Finally it is an institution for all, and open to all free of charge. In fact it belongs to all, being supported by the town. Let every person, young and old, feel that he or she is a member of the firm, and come around regularly to claim dividends.

The Orphan Boy Lost.

The schooner Orphan Boy, owned at St. Ignace has been lost since about the 4th of Dec. The tug, Saugatuck, returned on the 22d from a thorough but unsuccessful search of the lakes for her. The tug Owen is continuing the search from Death's Door to Manistique. The general belief is that she has gone down.

LATER.

Since the above was put in type, word has been received by Superintendant Robbins of the life saving service, from the Grand Point Au Sable station, to the effect that a large amount of wreckage has been coming ashore there for the last two weeks, among which is a yawl bearing the name "Orphan Boy." It is thought this settles the fact that the schooner went down in the terrible storm of Dec. 6th with all on board.

Marion.

John Ward is confined to the house, and a portion of the time to his bed, with poor health.

The road between Wakefield's and Reed's, is being covered with snow to make sleighing for drawing logs and wood.

Logs are moving into the Pine Lake Lumber Co.'s yard, near Stover's, at a rapid rate.

A Correction.

The types made "Alpha" say "enemies" instead of "armies," as was intended, in the first line of the last paragraph of the article headed "The Religion of Jesus Christ," in the JOURNAL of Dec. 31st.

☞"Do you want an eastern paper? The New York Weekly World is one of the best democratic newspapers in the United States. Furnished with the JOURNAL for only $2.00 per year.

Miscellaneous.

Kalamazoo has a Young Woman's Christian Association.

The numerous fires in various portions of the state have made Traverse City cautious. Six new fire alarm boxes have been put into operation.

A Christmas tree in Cheboygan was made unusually brilliant by the accidental contact of one of its tapers with its combustible decorations. Some excitement but no serious damage

Cheboygan has determined to have a new pest house. The numerous cases of diptheria and occasional cases of whooping cough, and smallpox have made the supervisors cautions if not fearful.

The Michigan State Grange recently in session at Battle Creek appointed a committee to confer with a similar committee of the Knights of Labor, to arrange for better co-operation of the two societies whose aims and objects are identical.

Mr. Phy Bailey, of Elk Rapids, was arraigned and fined $20 and costs amounting to $46.85, for assault and battery, the result of a quarrel with Mr. Noble, of the same place, about some evergreens for Christmas decorations. The case will go to the circuit court.

Detroit opened the new year with a $1,500,000 fire. The fire caught in D. M. Ferry & Co's mammoth seed store, which was entirely consumed, together with several adjacent buildings, including White's theatre, the most popular in the city. The scene when the fire was at its height was described as terribly magnificent. It was thought at one time that several blocks were doomed, in spite of the gallant efforts of the firemen, one of whom perished at his post. The insurance companies paid promptly, and the work of rebuilding is already begun. The buildings to be erected will be more magnificent than those which were destroyed.

The Library Magazine.

Alden's Library Magazine is quite the peer of the great $4 monthlies, in the amount and high quality of the literature which it presents, though its cost is only the nominal sum of $1.50 a year. Among the contents in the current number are articles by such noted authors as Canon Farrar, Max Muller, the Bishop of Carlisle, Cardinal Newman, Philip Schaff, and others. The magazine should have a circulation of a hundred thousand. You can get a specimen from the publisher, John B. Alden, New York, for the price of 15 cents. G. W. Crouter, agent in this city.

A Late Trip Down.

MACKINAC CITY, Jan. 2.—The propeller, Saginaw Valley, bound down, arrived here at 6 p. m. and will clear in the morning, to be laid up for the season. The wind is southwest and brisk and it is raining.

EATING AND STARVING

It is all the same, for you are sure to suffer from piles. No worse torture can be conceived of. Blind or itching piles are unequaled for annoyance, but by a few applications of PARMELEE'S PILE SUPOSITORIES they entirely dissappear. The knife is often resorted to by physicians for the removal of protruding piles, but such barbarity is not a necessity for PARMELEE'S SUPOSITORIES used according to directions, quickly reduce, replace, and drive them away. Warranted to cure. Price 50 cents per box.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

WHY WASTE TIME AND MONEY

On that which does no good. Your children have worms and are cross, always hungry, sleepless, puny and weak from the presense of worms in the stomach which prevents the food being taken up to nourish the body. PARMELEE'S SANTONINE WORM CANDIES will dissolve and remove the worms and then all will be well. You cannot do better by your children than to attend to their health. Price 25 cents per box.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

THE THROAT

Is often diseased on account of catarrh, producing dryness and a constant desire to cough. That tickling sensation and the hoarseness that is so common to public singers and speakers especially, is relieved at once by HAMILTONS COUGH TORCHES which are prepared from the most approved formula. Do not wait till acute bronchitis or even consumption takes firm hold of you. Price only 25c por box.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

☞Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease and tone up the system you will find Parmelee's Condition Powders unexcelled. Full pounds 35 cts. Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton. 92-143

Wild Cherry and Tar.

Every body knows the virtues of Wild Cherry and Tar as a relief and cure for any affections of the Throat and Lungs, combined with these two ingredients are a few simple healing remedies in the composition of Dr. Bosanko's Cough and Lung Syrup making it just the article you should always have in the house, for Coughs, Colds, Croup, and Bronchitis. Price 50 cents and $1.00. Samples free. Sold by G. W. Crouter, 3

A YEAR'S HISTORY.

A Chronology of the Important Events, Political and Otherwise, of 1885.

The Calendar Year One of Comparative Peace Throughout the Circuit of the Globe.

The year 1885 has added few political events of a startling nature to the annals of the world's history. It has been a year of peace, though there have been constant rumors of wars in Europe—wars which, had they broken out, would evidently have assumed gigantic proportions and resulted in vast destruction of life and property. This very fact has no doubt caused the crowned heads of the old world to pursue a cautious policy and hesitate long before letting slip the dogs of war. The only serious disturbance of the peace of the world is on the extreme eastern confines of Europe, and that promises to be settled without involving any of the great powers in a conflict of arms. France and China have been fighting each other at long range, inflicting very slight damage. England had a brush with Burmah, which was "short, sharp, and decisive," the Burmese King throwing up the sponge and ingloriously surrendering to the red coats without firing a gun. Canada's war with the half-breeds and Indians in the Northwest, and the change of administration at Washington by the retiring of a Republican and the inauguration of a Democratic President, constitute the chief events near home. Below will be found the record:

JANUARY.

The Slattery family formed a syndicate at Shenandoah, Pa., to prosecute claims for property worth $500,000,000 in England, Scotland, and India. St. Louis, Mo., was reported swarming with beggars; 20,000 people out of employment. Twenty-three of the younger priests and students of the Moscow Theological Seminary were flogged by the Archbishop of the diocese for exhibiting symptoms of rebellion. Gov. Cleveland sent his resignation to the New York Assembly on the 6th, being succeeded by Lieut. Gov. Hill. Immense coal deposits, said to be the richest in the world, discovered in the vicinity of Pekin, China. Gen. Grant, in a letter to Cyrus W. Field, declined to accept the money raised to extricate him from his financial embarrassment. President-elect Cleveland was notified by nearly 100 parents that as many babies were named after him, and he sent a photograph to each one. Discovery of an emerald weighing over a pound at Boyaca, Colombia. Failure of the banking house of John J. Cisco's Sons, New York; liabilities, $2,500,000. Funeral of Hon. Schuyler Colfax, at South Bend, Ind. The mercury at Mount Washington, N. H., sank to 50 degrees below zero on Jan. 22, and a hurricane for half a day was at the rate of 100 miles an hour. A detachment of British troops, 1,500 strong, fought the hosts of El Mehdi at the Wells of Abu Klea, in the deserts of the Soudan, and after a fierce battle the rebels were driven from the field with heavy loss. London startled by three explosions of dynamite in the Parliament House and at the Tower; the lobby of the British House of Commons blown to pieces, and the Speaker's chair destroyed; senator Bayard introduced a resolution in the United States Senate expressing the indignation and sorrow of this country at the event. The Liberty Bell taken from Independence Hall, Philadelphia, under escort of a policeman, and started for the New Orleans Exposition. Texas stockmen estimate their loss on account of the cold weather will exceed $1,000,000. Russia and Germany conclude a treaty providing for extradition of assassins or abdicators of royal personages, and persons guilty of illegal manufacture of explosives. Continued excitement in London over the dynamite explosions; numerous arrests made; vigilance committees proposed, and a system of espionage over persons of Irish extraction suggested. The Liberty Bell accorded a hearty reception at New Orleans, minutes being fired and shipping decorated; at Beauvoir, Miss., Jefferson Davis met the train bearing the famous relic, and made a short speech to those in attendance. Solomon Batt and Elias Grossfeldt, educated Hebrews, renounce Judaism, and unite with the M. E. Church at Cincinnati. Ex-Gov. Moses, of South Carolina, released from prison at Detroit, and rearrested on the charge of swindling Col. T. W. Higginson and other Bostonians. Amount of gold obtained from United States mines in 1884 ascertained to have been $31,000,000. Kansas and Missouri Legislatures adopt resolutions petitioning Congress to open Oklahoma to settlement. News received of a hard-fought battle between Gen. Stewart's command and the Arab rebels, in which five of El Mehdi's emirs were killed; Stewart was badly wounded and disabled for the remainder of the campaign. Mrs. Thankful Tanner, of Cleveland, brings suit against Mrs. James A. Garfield for $25,000 for injuries sustained by being run over by the latter's carriage. Thadgeus Louis Pomatowski, a grandson of King Stanislaus of Poland, found working as a cattle tender near Baltimore. The Minnesota Senate passes a bill making it a felony to attempt to increase or diminish the market price of cereals. After a deadlock lasting twenty-two days, the lower house of the Illinois Legislature organized by the election of Elijah M. Haines as Speaker. A party of Oklahoma boomers numbering 150 persons dispersed by United States troops; four of the leaders bound over in $1,000 each; they threaten to make another raid on the coveted territory March 4.

FEBRUARY.

Mrs. Laura De F. Gordon, of California, admitted to the bar of the United States Supreme Court at Washington—the second woman accorded that privilege. O'Donovan Rossa shot in New York by an English woman calling herself Yseult Dudley; great rejoicing in England over the news. Queen Victoria offered to contribute from her private purse to any reward the Government decided to offer for arrest of persons guilty of dynamite outrages. During a severe windstorm the Colorado Central train from Denver to Georgetown was blown from the track; eighteen passengers more or less injured. Intense excitement in England caused by receipt of dispatches from General Wolseley announcing the capture of Khartoum by El Mehdi. The Union Pacific Road reports the gross earnings for 1884 at $25,731,000. Reported dissensions in the Mormon Church, causing its gradual disintegration—the young Mormons trying to break away from ecclesiastical rule. Authentic reports were received in London that at the time of the fall of Khartoum the city was in the verge of a famine, and on entering the enemy massacred about 15,000 people; General Gordon was among the latter, and his head was cut off and carried in triumph to the Mehdi, who received it with eager satisfaction. Michael Davitt compelled to leave a hotel at Rome because English guests refused to sit at table with him. Ex-Congressman D. J. Morrell, President Cambria Iron Company at Johnstown, Pa., sent to a lunatic asylum. The Texas House passed a bill forbidding the carrying of deadly weapons. The labor crisis in France causes the unemployed men in Paris and 1,000 more at the provinces. National Independent Association, organized in London, one of its objects being an alliance between England and the United States. The worst blizzard known in many years prevailed on the railroads throughout the region between the Northwest and the Missouri. The charge of high treason made to only two out of a number indicted, G. Cunningham and Harry Benton, charged dynamiters, in the Old Street Police Court, London. Both indicted for treason received the thanks of Gen. Cockburn and the indiscriminate slaughter of the two combatants ended Christmas at Khartoum. The Archbishop of Sydney refused to recognize Michael Kitt, who desired to present an address justifying the action of the Irish Nationalists. OCTOBER.

The Earl of Shaftesbury, noted as a devoted religionist and reformer, passed away on the 18th, aged 84; his long record as a philanthropist earned for him the name of "The Good Earl." Other notable deaths during October were: Fred Hassaurek, of Cincinnati, well known as a German-American writer, editor, and speaker. Ex-Gov. Talbot, of Massachusetts, at Lowell, aged 77. His eminence Cardinal John McCloskey, at his residence in New York, aged 75. Mr. H. W. Shaw (Josh Billings) of apoplexy at Monterey, Cal. Baron Sarathmore, prominent in English diplomatic and military circles, and a leading figure in the suppression of the Sepoy rebellion in India. Hon. Hugh Henry Rose, Field-Marshal of the British army, and at one time commander-in-chief in India. Capt. Alexander Hailey, the only colored man who ever commanded an ocean trade vessel, at Baltimore, aged 86. Chas. Leland, well-known hotel-keeper, in New York City. Caspar Butz, German poet, writer and politician, at Des Moines, aged 59. At Pittsburgh Hon. Malcolm Hay, ex-First Assistant Postmaster General. Rev. Dr. James Fraser, Bishop of Manchester, Eng., of the Established Church of England. Mrs. Mary Anne Booth, mother of Edwin, J. Wilkes, and Junius B. Booth, at New York, aged 84. Dr. James R. HEEL AND TOE.

Nature and Characteristics of Good Walking

In view of the uncertainty that pervades the minds of athletes on this coast as to what is and what is not a square walk, it might perhaps be well to give a short account of the history, nature, and distinguishing characteristics of heel-and-toe walking. In England, some years ago, Mr. Perkins walked the fastest mile ever recorded in the remarkable time of six minutes and twenty-three seconds. His gait was what is popularly known as heel-and-toe walking. In the early history of walking in this country, Mr. Stern made a mile on a New York track in seven minutes, at that time considered very fast. His style was not heel and toe, and formed quite a contrast to that of Mr. Mullen, who afterward, in a mile competition, open to all comers, walked Mr. Stern off his feet, and on the last lap spurted him out of sight. The square planting of Mr. Mullen's legs and heels was remarked and appreciated, and thereafter heel-and-toe walking became the standard gait of New York athletic clubs. Rules were made regulating the walking gait, and flat-footed shuffling was relegated to the shades of the past.

In 1876, in this country, Mr. Armstrong walked a seven-mile race in very fast time, and thereafter won the amateur championship of the United States, and held it some years, although pressed by Mr. Holske. No better examples of the two styles of heel-and-toe walking can be found than those of Mr. Armstrong and Mr. Holske. Mr. Armstrong employed the gait of Mr. Perkins, a high knee action with a strong swing of the hips and a mechanical, enormous stride. Mr. Holske's stride was more natural, with very little action of the knee and a quicker movement of hip and leg. Both walked heel and toe—that is, the action of the knee straightened the leg just before the heel touched the ground, throwing the toe up and necessarily lengthened the stride. The advantages of this gait are evident, and if it should be asked why it is accepted as standard and others rejected, it may be answered that the straightened limb is without a question the position of beauty, strength and skill, whereas the bent knee is the sign of weakness and the refuge of hitchers and skippers, mongrel-gaited pedestrians and all such.

In a race, if the pace be two stiff or the man tired, he naturally comes down to a flat-footed gait. The ballet dancer uses the stiffened knee and pointed toe, and the principle of the heel-and-toe walking is exactly the same. The actor and orator use the extended, full sweep of the arm: the engle and the king vulture maintain the power of their graceful flight by the wide extended pinion. The athlete lifts his 100-pound bell to the extremity of his reach, and if he did not his performance could hardly be called a feat of strength. By instantaneous photographs we find that the foreleg of the racing trotter at full speed is straightened just before the hoof touches the ground. In fact, if a man is cut out to be a walker, he takes to this straightened-knee, heel-and-toe gait naturally.—San Francisco Examiner.

Peculiarities of Yosemite Rock.

A correspondent in the Overland writes: Already I observe two very distinct kinds of structure in the granite of this region, which, singly or combined, determine all the forms about this wonderful valley. These two kinds of structure are the concentric structure, on an almost inconceivably grand scale, and a rude columnar structure, or perpendicular cleavage, also on a grand scale. The disintegration and exfoliation of the granite masses of the concentric structure give rise to the bald, rounded domes; the structure itself is well seen in Sentinel Dome, and especially in the royal arches. The columnar structure, by designation, gives rise to Washington Column, and the sharp peaks, like Sentinel Rock and Cathedral Spires. Both these structures exist in the same granite, though the one or the other may predominate. In all the rocks about Yosemite there is a tendency to cleave perpendicularly. In addition to this, in many there is also a tendency to cleave in concentric layers, giving rise to dome-like forms. Both are well seen combined in the grand mass of Half Dome. The perpendicular face wall of this dome is the result of the perpendicular cleavage. Whatever may be our theory of the formation of Yosemite chasm and the perpendicularity of its cliffs, we must not leave out of view this tendency to perpendicular cleavage. I observe, too, that the granite here is very coarse-grained, and disintegrates into dust with great rapidity.

She Could Cure It.

"You do not look well," said a Chicago lady to a Boston girl who was paying her a friendly visit; "you are pale and seem in low spirits."

"I am not feeling as cheerful as I could wish," replied the young lady; "although, believing with the immortal Milton that 'the mind is its own place and can make a sheol of heaven or a heaven of sheol, I have made every mental effort to fancy myself happy and contented. These efforts—and it is with no little chagrin that I admit the fact—have entirely failed, owing, doubtless, to my never before having been so far away from the parental roof. In short, dear friend, I am afflicted with nostalgia."

"Good gracious!" exclaimed the kind-hearted hostess, "why didn't you tell me so before! Nostalgia! I can cure it right off. I've got half a dozen cures for catarrh in the house."—Boston Courier.

How to Tell a Hog's Age.

In a hog case being tried before Judge Adams at Springfield one of the witnesses caused the whole house to roar with laughter. Some of the witnesses swore that the hog was of one color and age, and some another. One witness said he was slate-colored and 2 years old. The prosecuting attorney asked:

"How old did you say the hog was?"

"Two years," said the witness.

"How can you tell a hog's age?"

"By looking at him."

"I don't see how you can tell a hog's age by looking at him," said the lawyer.

"Well, by his size," remarked the witness.

"Can you tell a hog's age?" asked the lawyer.

"Well, I reckon I orter know how to tell one's age, when I have been raised up with hogs all my life."

When the witness said that, the judge, jury, and lawyers roared so that it was thought some of the shingles on the house were loosened.—Guyton (Ga.) Chronicle.

The National Complaint.

Dyspepsia is the national complaint. Almost every other man or woman you meet has it, and the result is that the number of pseudo-remedies for it is as numerous as Pharaoh's host. They are for the most part worthless. There is, however, a searching eradicant of this distressing and obdurate malady, one whose genuine merits long since raised it to a foremost place among the staple medicines of America. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters extirpates dyspepsia with greater certainty and promptitude than any known remedy, and is a most genial invigorant, appetizer and aid to secretion. These are not empty assertions, as thousands of our countrymen and women who have experienced its effects are aware, but are backed up by irrefragable proofs repeatedly laid before the public. The Bitters also promote a regular habit of body and give a healthful stimulus to the urinary organs.

The Wrong Kind of Emotion.

"My dear young man, I wish to tell you that I consider you a man, sir. A man, sir; I would feel proud to take you by the hand, sir. When I see a man moved to tears by a drama, sir, I always wish to make his acquaintance. Very affecting scene, that. D—my eyes, I was crying too," said a breezy old gentleman to a young man, as he saw tears in the latter's eyes when the curtain went down on the last act.

"Much obliged for your kind opinion, but I'm sorry to say that for once it is misplaced," replied the young gentleman.

"But I really saw tears in your eyes and visible marks of emotion betrayed by your face."

"Well, you see, it's this way. I'm the author of that drama, and when I saw how the managers had butchered it it made me hopping mad. I always cry when I'm mad. Good-evening, sir."—Brooklyn Times.

A Suspicious Mamma.

"That look doth pain me, dearest. Our parting is but for one brief day."

"Yes, my heart would fain be content; but—"

"What then, fair one?"

"I fear me mother's wrath.

"The cause, angel of me existence? My life is at your call!"

"Your paper collar's busted, and mamma is so suspicious!"

The Great German Physician.

The remarkable phase in the practice of Dr. Peter W. Schmidt (frequently called Dr. Peter), is, he never asked one to describe their disease but tells each one their trouble without asking a question. His success is phenomenal. His practice enormous. He is sought after by hundreds wherever he goes, because he cures when every other physician and remedy have failed. He has allowed his great medicines, Golden Seal Bitters and Lung Food for Consumption, to be offered to the suffering, and we assert without fear of successful contradiction that there is no disease they will not cure. Thousands of bottles have been sold. Thousands of broken-down and discouraged invalids saved. Send to Golden Seal Bitters Company, Holland City, Mich., for Facts for the Million! Free.

Of Interest to Farmers.

There is not a mechanical trade in America but is represented by a journal in its class. What trade is there that is of more importance, that requires more genius, and more careful attention to detail, than farming? The worker in iron, if he wishes to prosper, knows that he must choose the representative journal of his trade, study the market reports of iron, and otherwise keep himself thoroughly posted. He relies implicitly upon the statements contained in his favorite champion of the industry, and is enabled to buy and sell with a firm knowledge, which surprises his negligent competitors. By careful perusal of the well-timed editorial comments, and the closely gleaned notes of interest to the trade, he gathers ideas which are to him invaluable. The farming community of the West are beginning to comprehend the fact that there are for them newspapers which give such clear-cut and well-defined ideas on the science of farming, that their trade, the king of industries, takes its place at the head of the long list as the art universal. One of the most prominent of this class of publications is THE WESTERN RURAL AND AMERICAN STOCKMAN, of Chicago.

How proper it is that agriculture should be represented by such a worthy champion of its interests. THE RURAL AND STOCKMAN has long been recognized as one of the best journals of its kind in the world, the editor and publisher having been for years a successful farmer. There is no question, however scientific, relating to farming, but is answered in its columns in a free and comprehensive manner. Farmers will recognize that there is but one way to sustain a journal of this class, and that is to join hands in its support.

Temperance Column.

Conducted by a Committee of the W. C. T. U.

Drinking Women.

The following is in keeping with the remarks of Rev. J. D. Potter in his Sunday evening discourse on the prodigal son. Let us rejoice that if we have not all the conveniences of a great city, we escape some of its evils:

An editorial appeared in a morning paper in Chicago recently, in which the writer expressed himself greatly shocked upon going into a restaurant with his young daughter to obtain a lunch, at seeing two young ladies at a table directly in front of him drinking ale. He also noticed, during the time that he was in the restaurant, several other young ladies came in, and, in most instances, the first thing ordered was a bottle of beer.

What the editor saw that day in that restaurant, may be seen any and all days in hundreds of restaurants in Chicago. There are more than six times as many drinking women in Chicago as there are members of the W. C. T. U. in the city. They are not confined to any one class, although it is a sad truth that they are found largely among the working women, shop girls, and clerks in business houses.

Beer is their standard beverage, and we believe the custom of beer drinking, from its half way recognized respectability, is responsible to a greater degree for the increase of dram drinking among women than any other cause.

But beer is by no means the exclusive beverage of the women. Those who can afford it indulge in the stronger and more costly drinks. Nor is drinking confined to restaurants. A writer in the New York Journal has this to say of "Bar rooms for women" in New York:

"But let me tell you a curious fact, of which you are probably not aware. I could name a dozen or so thoroughly respectable dress makers establishments in New York where the whole of the business is not dress making. Some of the profits of these places come from the sale of beverages. The love of conviviality is not confined to men alone. Men have their saloons where they can go every time they feel inclined to do so. But a lady who wants a glass of champagne or a brandy julep, what is she to do? She can not take it in her own house because the servants would talk, or the children being around would see the bad example, and no lady can, of course, go to any bar room or restaurant to drink. Her refuge then is in the convenient dress-maker's.

"The bills sent in by the modiste, therefore, as you may readily see, are not as exorbitant as they seem. The husband exclaims at the outrageous charges of $400 for a dress that he can see nothing extraordinary about. But the wife knows, though she can not admit it, that $200 on that bill represents champagne and so on. The drinks are occasionally given gratis, but you may be sure that they appear in some form in the bill.

"A lawyer who has had several cases which he has compromised very cleverly for one of these big dress-makers was asked about this, and he said: 'Of course you won't quote me, but there is a great deal of truth in what you say. I know that my client, in detailing her business, had told me that she could not get on at all if she did not satisfy the demands of her customers in this way. They would leave her and go to the dry goods houses, where they would have to pay less for their work. These feminine bar rooms have become a necessity of the dress-making trade.'"

Now, we are not charging any class of people engaged in business in Chicago of "moonshining," but we are assured by a lady friend, who has been connected with business houses in Chicago for ten years, who never indulges in drink herself and who is to-day at the head of a department in one of the finest retail houses in that city, that if a lady wants her champagne, beer, brandy, or any other beverage in Chicago, there is many a business house where she knows how to get it, and they are not all dress-making establishments either.

It is a sad truth that drinking among women is increasing much more rapidly than among men, and it opens up a field for investigation and temperance work fully as important as any now occupied. Who will organize it and develop it into a system that shall make it effective?

AT HOME AND ABROAD;

At church and theatre, in the counting house and work room, in fact everywhere is heard that hacking cough which soon developes into congestion or inflamation of the lungs, bronchitis, pneumonia, and consumption. Be wise in time. Immediate relief and cure can be cheaply obtained. HAMILTON'S COUGH BALSAM will surely give relief from these throat and lung troubles that often terminate in death. Instant relief in croup, and a subdurer of whooping cough. Your consumptive friend will be greatly benefited. Price 25 and 50 cents.

TOBACCO.

Systematic Experiments Needed To Test Different Localities for Tobacco-Growing.

Tobacco was almost the first crop that engaged the attention of the early settlers of this country. It probably exerted more influence on the settlement of the country than any other vegetable production. The colonists in Virginia and Maryland relied on it chiefly for support. For nearly a century it generally took the place of money. In some cases taxes were paid in tobacco. Ministers received their salaries in tobacco, and in Virginia brides were bought for a given number of pounds of tobacco. The colonists of Jamestown gave so much attention to raising tobacco that they neglected the culture of food crops, and were at time in danger of starvation. The rulers of the colony found it necessary to compel the settlers to plant a certain amount of land each year to food crops in order to prevent distress among the people. The early prosperity of Virginia was largely due to the production of tobacco, a large proportion of which was sent to Europe. The first settlers of Maryland became rich by raising tobacco. In early days tobacco was by far the most profitable crop in Kentucky and Tennessee, as it could be transported down the Mississippi and its tributaries to New Orleans to much better advantage than grain. The first settlers of Illinois and Missouri found tobacco to be the best market crop, and it exerted a powerful influence on the settlement of those states.

The cultivation of tobacco in the northern states is of somewhat recent origin. For more than a century it was raised to a limited extent for home consumption in Pennsylvania and New York, but it did not take its place among the crops raised for market till the period of the late civil war. Some experiments made in the valley of the Connecticut river were very successful. A leaf was produced which was very desirable for cigar-wrappers. It is somewhat deficient in fine flavor, but it is large, strong, thin, and free from blemishes. For the purpose for which it is generally used it is superior to the tobacco produced in any other part of the world. The culture of tobacco was undertaken in Michigan and Wisconsin almost as soon as these states were settled, and has continued till the present time. In several counties in Wisconsin it has during the past few years become a leading crop for the market. In many places it has taken the place of hops, that were till lately extensively cultivated. The seasons are so short that it is necessary to cut and house the plants before they have obtained their full growth, in order to escape injury from the frost. Still the crop is a profitable one, as is shown by the prosperity of the farmers engaged in raising it. A ride through the tobacco-raising districts of Wisconsin will convince anyone that the farmers are accumulating wealth.

Although tobacco is of tropical or sub-tropical origin, experiments have demonstrated that it can be produced in every state and territory in the country. Perhaps it can not be profitably produced in all of them, but this fact has never been determined. No plant is as greatly influenced by peculiarities of soil and climate as tobacco. Meteorological observations and soil analyses have accomplished very little toward determining whether a good quality of tobacco can be produced in a given locality. Experiments are necessary to decide this matter. That there are many places in the country capable of producing as fine tobacco as any ever raised in Connecticut or North Carolina is very likely. Considering how important a factor tobacco is in the accumulation of the wealth of the nation it seems somewhat remarkable that no systematic attempt has ever been made to ascertain where it can be produced at a profit. The department of agriculture has expended enormous sums in attempts to introduce the culture of the tea plant and in trying to build up a sugar industry in the northern states, but it has done very little toward increasing the production of tobacco or in ascertaining where the plant will succeed. Very few of the state agricultural societies or boards have done anything toward encouraging the production of the crop which is a vast source of wealth to the country.

The adaptability of the soil and climate of any locality to the production of tobacco of good quality has generally been determined by accident. Some new settler coming from a part of the country where tobacco is a leading crop, brought a little seed with him and planted it in a garden bed. He raised a few plants which he cured in a shed and found the quality to be good. The next year he planted more and demonstrated that it would succeed as a field crop. Having succeeded in finding a market for it, he engaged quite extensively in its cultivation. His neigubors then followed his example and in a few years tobacco became a leading product, in the neighborhood. In the course of time its culture extended into all the adjacent sections of country having a similar soil and climate. It is likely that the Indians showed greater enterprise in introducing tobacco into new localities than the whites have. Had the national department of agriculture shown as much interest in tobacco culture as it has in the raising of tea and sorghum the value of every county in the country for the production of this crop would have been determined years ago. But tobacco has never been a pet crop with any of our commissioners of agriculture.

It is not likely that tobacco will ever prove to be a very suitable crop for the large unprotected prairies. The tobacco plant may make a very rank growth on black prairie soil, but the quality of the leaf will not be likely to be good. It may be used for making plug tobacco, but it will not be fit for cigars. The high winds that sweep across the large prairies are almost certain to injure the leaves of tobacco so that they will be unfit for cigar-wrappers. Observation shows that a broken, partially-wooded country, where there is protection from winds, is the most suitable for tobacco-raising. Cheap lumber, suitable for the erection of drying barns, is essential to the success of the tobacco industry, as is a supply of timber for making poles to hang the plants on. Tobacco-raising requires no expensive machines or implements. A common plow, hand-hoe, and a large cutting knife are all the tools necessary for raising and harvesting the crop. In many respects it is a good crop for farmers of small means to raise. Most of the work of raising and harvesting the crop is light. The operation of priming, topping, worming, suckering, and stripping can be performed by persons too young or too old to do most kinds of field work.

Beer and the British Laborer.

In the county of Herts I stopped to talk with a farmer who was cutting down his tall, handsome hay rick and loading the hay for the London market. He was a lively, progressive sort of a man, who had been an emigrant to Australia, and, after a long residence there, had again returned to the home farm in England, and like many others who had lived years away from England, he had returned with many broad ideas in his mind. Speaking with him of the bad beer-drinking habits of the English laborers, he said the great trouble was they would not use the beer in moderation. A moderate use of beer he thought might be beneficial to them. I asked him to tell me what his idea of moderation in this regard was. He replied that in haying time, which in old as in New England is a period when the farm-hand is expected to work unusually hard, a laboring man ought to be able to get along on a gallon of beer a day. If the men would put up with about that quantity beer would not hurt them.

These very astonishing "temperance" views I afterward heard advanced by other quite intelligent English farmers. In giving the statement of the vast number of arrests for drunkenness that are annually made in England, an American ought to remember that laws are probably more strictly enforced in England than in any other country on the face of the earth. I found that many English laborers seemed to live almost entirely on beer. A very little bread and a large amount of beer seemed to make up their daily sustenance. I remember seeing an English laborer, who had himself abandoned its use, holding up before me a very small loaf of bread—a loaf about the size of a coffee-cup—and exclaiming: "See this; one of our hard workers will make a day's food of this, if you will give him beer enough to go with it." I used frequently to see these beer-drinkers sitting in the taprooms at all times of the day, but they were most in the habit of swarming into these places at night. It is often the custom for a little clique of British workmen to sit down around the plain pine table in the beer-house and begin the evening by ordering a quart pewter pot of beer between them. They pass this around from month to mouth with a "drink, mate," chatting the while. When the mug is exhausted it is, "Here, missus, another pot of beer;" and so they keep it up until the evening is over. The quantity of beer an English workingman will get away with is certainly astonishing. A Redfordshire man told me of a neighbor of his who was what they there termed a "bread-and-cheese carpenter," or a "follow-the-field carpenter," that is, a carpenter who has no regular job of his own, but who did odd jobs at his trade out of doors; who made a regular practice of drinking ten quarts of beer a day. He would do this year in and year out and keep steadily at his work.—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

Shying Horses Are Near-Sighted.

"Why it is that shying in horses should be set down to an ugly disposition I don't know," said a prominent veterinary surgeon yesterday. "It must be because horsemen don't know what else to lay it to. The fact is that it seldom is met with unless the horse is near-sighted. I have tested scores of shying horses for near-sightedness, and in nearly all cases found what I expected. And now when I am asked to give points on buying horses I give this as one of the requisites. Never buy a horse which is near-sighted. There are, however, two exceptions to this rule. If the horse is to have a mate, then it doesn't make any difference about the sight. One horse can go blind if the other is clear sighted. If the horse is to be used for riding to saddle be careful that he is not near-sighted, for he will throw you sooner or later.

"The reason why a near-sighted horse shies is very simple," the surgeon continued. "Of all animals the horse is the most gentle, and even timid. He sees a strange object, and his susceptible mind magnifies it into a monster that is going to destroy him. A piece of white paper at the roadside in the night is a ghost, and an old wagon in the ditch is a dragon. Every horseman knows that if you drive the animal close to the dreadful object the horse cools down at once. It is supposed that it is because the horse makes a closer acquaintance with the object. That is true, but not in the sense in which it is generally understood. The animal has not been able to see it from a distance. He is near-sighted."—New York Sun.

Wear and Tear of Gold.

The annual loss of gold, by attrition, shipwreck, fires, etc., is very small, not quite two tons, or £820,090. According to Sevons, gold coin loses 2 per cent in 100 years—that is £147,000 per annum on the actual amount £736,000,000. The loss by shipwreck can not possibly be higher than one-sixth of the ratio of loss in sea-borne merchandise—say £2 for every £1,000 shipped, and as the quantity of sea-borne gold in 1871-80 averaged £50,400,000 per annum, the loss by shipwreck would be £101,000. If we allow £32,000 for loss by fires, we make up a total wear and tear of £280,000, or two tons, the existing stock being a trifle under 11,000 tons. McCulloch used to reckon for jewelers, loss, wear and tear, etc., about ¼ per cent, which would be nearly £4,000,000 a year of our present stock.

The "consumption" by jewelry is probably even more now, but this nowise affects the question of a possible gold famine, since the jewelers' consumption goes to swell the uncoined reserve. It would appear that eighty years ago the uncoined reserve was better understood than to-day, for I find in the Edinburg Review of 1803 the following passage: "The precious metals have a two-fold use—for manufacturers and coin. If there is a deficiency of coin the plate will be melted and coined. If there is a superabundance of coin it will be melted and manufactured."—Contemporary Review.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. That none of us captured a beau.

For the men found it cool in the city,
And the brokers were blue, it was thought
So we lost every chance (what a pity!),
And no dashing fellow was caught.

So Maud and Madola and Lillie,
Viola, Narcissa, and I,
Were left in the shade (am I silly?)
To wait till next year—and to sigh.

For nothing is done in the winter
In town, with gay talk and fine clothes;
No beau says, "My dear Araminta,"
And none is betrayed to propose.

And when you walk out by the water,
And moonlight falls soft on the shore,
The primmest mamma's plainest daughter
Some masculine heart will adore.

I hope if we go there next season,
We girls, by half-dozens and twelves,
Will not again need, in all reason,
To just simply waltz with ourselves.

Of girls who were blushing and twenty,
With some who were near twenty-five,
There always were more than a plenty,
And yet not a man would arrive.

How wearily all the long summer
We wandered by sea-shore and tide,
And found no available comer—
A bridegroom, perhaps, with his bride!

We would stroll to the depot and steamer
To see what was rarer than pearls,
Each one a deliberate schemer,
And lo, a new bevy of girls!

The coats and the hats were all wanting,
No garment bifurcate was seen,
And some gray-headed old maids were taunting
Us or it (I thought it was seen).

Another such year would be awful,
For what are fine feathers and clothes,
If fate is to make it unlawful
For girls to be furnished with beaux?

The summer has vanished and faded;
The forests are withered and sere;
No lover our hearts has invaded—
'Tis horrid to wait a whole year!

THE BENEVOLENT MILLIONAIRE.

A Visit to the Baroness Burdett-Coutts —Her Home, Her Pets and Her Manners.

To Americans the Baroness Burdett-Coutts has always been a person of singular interest. Her wealth, her generous benefactions and romantic nature all appeal to us, for our sensibilities are doubtless keener and finer than those of the English. At one of the very last receptions of the season, sitting somewhat apart in a fashionable drawing room, I saw a slight stir, and then everybody arose to their feet. There was not that quiet and obsequiousness in the attitude which are shown to royalty, but a voluntary and almost affectionate respect. The hostess advanced with smiling face, and said: "How good of you, Baroness," and the hum of conversation was resumed again. Songs were sung by a great singer, and recitations delivered by a well-known comic actor, and the most interested and amused face—the most enjoying face in all the assembly—was that of the Baroness Burdett-Coutts.

When the people thinned out a little and I had an opportunity of talking with her, she stormed my heart. She has a very small, sweet face, deep blue eyes, soft, dark brown hair, without a grey thread in it, and her complexion, free from all artificialities, is perfectly fresh and healthy. Her manner is very quiet, simple and unassuming, and she is an excellent and sympathetic listener. We made famous headway together, and she said she would be happy to receive us on Saturday at her place near London, Holly Lodge.

It is a lovely drive to the lodge, past some of the model dwellings and through green lanes. We were met by a footman and asked if we had an appointment with "my lady." We said no, but gave our cards, and a short walk on inlaid marble brought us to a long room covered with matting and draped in red and white bunting. The large French windows, close together, opened to the ground, and wicker-work chairs, tables and settees of every conceivable shape and design furnished the room. At the back was a line of cases filled with geological specimens, all labeled and numbered in the neatest manner. This room opened into a small, light, well-filled conservatory, and this again communicated with the drawing-room. Such a pretty, quaint, restful, old-fashioned room it was. A carpet with a white ground, strewn with roses, covered the floor; the furniture was encased in bright, fresh, flowered chintz. Several uncovered chairs, in dainty embroidery, bore on their faces loving gifts to the owner. A large photograph of a beautiful and distinguished lady in a gilt frame hung close to the door, and on the white margin, in a careful, pretty hand, was written: "Miss Coutts, from her friend Sophia" (Queen of the Netherlands). The grand piano in the center was covered by an immense and very ugly piece of fancy work. The facings of cloth used in the soldiers' uniforms were shaped in small diamonds and sewn together; red, black, blue, yellow, lilac, green, all toppled against each other in the most inartistic manner. This, too, was doubtless a gift from grateful hands to the ever open-hearted owner. Large looking-glasses and many pictures covered the light walls, and tables laden with priceless bric-a-brac stood here and there about the room. On one was a beautiful specimen of Belluk china, a rose-tinted shell resting on the graceful necks of three swans.

We had waited fifteen minutes, when the Baroness appeared. She had been some distance in the garden, and had walked hurriedly; so her cheeks were flushed with exercise and her eyes were bright with health. She seemed unaffectedly glad to see us, and after a few moments' conversation, said she must show us a little more of her house. The billiard-room was large and delightfully arranged. The wall pictures were especially interesting to a lover of animals. All the Baroness' pets, done by famous artists, adorn the walls. Cows, birds, cockatoos, dogs, donkeys and sheep live amicably together. Upon the mantel-piece is a singular-looking black dog with an almost white head. "Yes," the Baroness said, "he was very strange in appearance, and very accomplished. My sister bought him from some German players. One of his tricks was taking a red-hot coal in his mouth, and his teeth were quite worn down." He had a heroic face, a square jaw and intense eyes that spoke of past suffering. It is pleasant to think of his last days, prosperous and happy, with nothing harder to do than to carry a lady's dainty beaded bag in his poor scarred mouth.

"Ben," a small fox terrier that had not left the Baroness' side, listened jealously to the conversation, for he sneaked away, and presently triumphantly returned, carrying a round white stone in his mouth. The Baroness says her friends frequently send their pets to her when ill or troublesome, for she is as kind to animals as to humanity.

In the second drawing-room there are some wonderful pale aquamarine windows, with graceful etchings on them of draped and rounded female figures; the hangings are all of the same pale tint, and the whole room is a suggestion of the earliest and tenderest Spring days. Out of this room is a fernery, and then into the garden, where we had tea in beautiful old-fashioned flowered china. There was a great political discussion going on, in which the Baroness was animated and interested; like every true woman, she looks at her husband's opponent from a purely personal view. Mr. Burdett Coutts was away laying a corner stone or opening a railway. She speaks of him with a sureness that indicates the complete congeniality between them. Indeed, she is a woman whose age no man or woman would stop to consider. Intelligent and conversant with a great variety of subjects, she has gotten the best that life affords, for she has been always busy and kind and useful. Her intensely-occupied mind has taken no notice of time, so time has passed her lightly by, going on to tease those women who watch with heart-breaking anxiety for crows' feet.

Her garden she loves. The flower beds are more unstudied than ours—roses, pinks, geraniums, lilies, larkspurs, all jostle each other.—From the New York Sun.

A sad accident at Lisdoonvarna, County Clare, is reported. It appears two sisters, named Anne and Mary Connell, were gathering seaweed. To reach some which was near the water one of the young women lowered the other down the face of a cliff by means of a rope tied around her body. At length the strain of the weight became too much for the strength of the girl above and she was dragged over. Both girls were killed. Their dead bodies were found locked in each other's arms.

GREAT GUNS.

Ordnance at the London International Exhibition of Inventions.

The department of military ordnance forms one of the most important, if not the most interesting, features of this exposition.

It may seem deplorable to the noncombatant, says a London correspondent of a German paper, that the inventive genius of the last twenty-five years has applied itself so extensively and successfully to the improvement of engines of destruction, and it also may furnish a singular comment upon the English claim of leading the world in peaceful pursuits that she has given to the enemies of peaceful industries so marked a prominence in this exhibition. This is probably largely due to the late Russo-Afghan difficulties, the object, doubtless, being to astonish the foreigner, as well as gratify the pride of the native.

Just back of the main entrance, and next to the hall decorated with twenty-four frescoes representing the historical development of industry, and where such a surprise would be least expected, the ponderous form of a breech-loading steel cannon meets the eye of the visitor.

The muzzle is over 7 inches in diameter, and its projectiles weigh 250 pounds apiece. The velocity of the projectile at the muzzle is nearly 2,000 feet per second, and at a distance of 3,000 feet has still a velocity of 1,600 feet. According to the report of the special catalogue of the English war department, this rifled piece of ordnance will pierce a steel plate 15 inches in thickness at the muzzle and one 10 inches at a distance of 3,000 feet. From this exhibition and report, doubts are expressed in military circles on the continent as to whether the manufacture of English ordnance is quite up to the times. Of course this suspicion is scouted at by the English, who point with pride to the above-described piece, weighing about ten tons, and declare it is but a baby compared with the monsters that are manufactured at the Armstrong ordnance works; that two of these enormous cannons, constructed for the new English man-of-war Benbow, are each ten times the weight of this, with over a three-foot bore, throwing a projectile of 2,000 pounds, and capable of piercing a steel plate more than 2½ feet thick at a distance of 3,000 feet.

A large number of guns of smaller caliber, with all their equipments, are also here on exhibition. But specimens of the most modern inventions of repeating artillery—regular shooting engines—attracted the greatest interest.

The French "mitrailleuse," made famous during the Franco German war, seems to have been but the embryo of the automatic gun now on exhibition.

The Gatling gun, an American invention, is also here. It is constructed of ten rifled barrels, revolving upon an axle. The cartridges are placed in a reservoir above the barrels and fall into place at the revolution of a crank. This engine of destruction is capable of firing from 800 to 1,000 shots per minute.

Another gun of similar construction is the invention of Mr. Hitchcock, an American, also. Some of the Gardner and Nordenfelt guns are to be seen. But Maxim, another American, is the inventor of the newest and most perfect of this variety of artillery. The firing rapidity of all these guns is indeed astounding. With one of the ten-barrel Nordenfelt, 100 consecutive salvos of 10 shots each, or 1,000 shots in all, were fired in 90 seconds. All of this class of guns, with the exception of the Maxim, are constructed with two or more parallel barrels, and require for their manipulation the services of several men. The loading, firing, and withdrawing of the hulls is accomplished, of course, through the turning of a crank, or as with the Nordenfelt through the movement of a lever. But the Maxim guns have the advantage over all the others, in that they are entirely automatic. Maxim makes use of the power developed by the recoil and of the pressure of the escaping gases to force out the hull as well as to load and fire. It requires but once the services of a gunner, the operation of loading and firing progressing unaided at the rate of six hundred shots per minute until the supply of ammunition is exhausted.

The cartridges are simply placed in a light bag which hangs under the gun and is automatically raised to the required height, the cartridges falling into the reservoir and from there into the barrel. There is the further advantage in this gun that the two gunners required with the other pieces are constantly exposed to the fire of the enemy, while the Maxim only needs attention when the gun requires a fresh bag of ammunition.

These guns are principally used upon men-of-war as a means of defense against torpedo boats, and, with the exception of the Maxim pattern, which is entirely new, are already in use not only in the English fleet, but also in the French, Russian, and Italian navies.

The Japanese Government intends to send specimens of a new steel gun recently turned out at the Osaka arsenal to England and Germany for experiments.

Concise Record of the Week.

FORTY-NINTH CONGRESS.

CONGRESS reassembled after the holiday adjournment, on Tuesday, Jan. 5, and at once opened business in a lively fashion. Numerous bills were introduced in both houses. In the Senate the credentials of John W. Daniel, of Virginia, were presented. A bill was passed to legalize the Ninth Territorial Assembly of Wyoming. Bills were introduced to substitute silver dollars for gold coin and currency in reserve funds of the Treasury; to increase pensions for total helplessness; to facilitate promotions in the army; to adjust accounts of laborers under the eight-hour law, to provide for the erection of monuments in Washington to Abraham Lincoln and U. S. Grant, at a cost of $1,000,000 each; to establish a national university in the District of Columbia by a grant of $5,000,000, bearing 5 per cent interest; to provide for the allotment of lands to Indians in severalty. A resolution was adopted accepting from the State of Ohio a marble statue of ex-President Garfield. Mr. Hoar introduced a resolution requesting the President to take measures including cases of embezzlement in extradition treaties. Mr. Wilson, of Iowa, called up the resolution heretofore offered by him calling on the Secretary of the Interior for a copy of each report made by the Government Directors of the Union Pacific Railroad from the first appointment of such directors to the present time. In support of his resolution Mr. Wilson reviewed at considerable length the action of the Government Directors, of whom he had himself been one, with a view to showing that, had the Government paid attention to the information conveyed and the recommendations made by the directors, the relations of the Government to the roads would to-day be better. The bills introduced in the House of Representatives numbered 700. The more notable were: To remove restrictions on the coinage of the standard silver dollar; to abolish internal revenue taxation; to appropriate $200,000 for a monument to General Grant in New York; to prevent the adulteration of food and drugs; to provide for the construction of the Delaware and Maryland ship canal; to reform the civil service; to repeal the duty on sugar; to prevent fraudulent entries on the public domain; to repeal the tobacco tax; to create an interstate commerce commission; to tax the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine; to give honorably discharged soldiers and sailors preference in public appointments; to authorize the President to call out two volunteer regiments of cavalry in New Mexico and Arizona for the suppression of Indian hostilities, and to deprive polygamists of the right of suffrage.——The President sent the following nominations to the Senate: John J. Higgins, to be Collector of Customs in the District of Natchez, Miss.; James Curran, of Maryland, to be Supervising Inspector of Steam Vessels in the Third District; Wiley J. Tinn, to be Surveyor of Customs for San Francisco; William H. McArgle, of Mississippi, to be Consul of the United States at San Juan del Norte; Willis H. Patch, of Maine, to be Consul of the United States at St. Stephen, New Brunswick; H. M. Jewett, of Massachusetts, to be Consul at Sivas; Orlando V. Powers, of Michigan, to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of Utah.

EASTERN.

Boston's yearly record shows a decided improvement in business, while $8,000,000 worth of building was done.

It is proposed to introduce in St. Louis Pasteur's method of treating hydrophobia. The Hydrophobic Institute in New York is ready for patients.

Three woolen dwellings erected in Boston in the early part of the eighteenth century, from whose windows a party of British officers witnessed the battle of Bunker Hill, are being demolished to give place to gas-works.

William H. McNeil, President of the Lancaster National Bank, at Clifton, Mass., disappeared last week, and he has since been shown to be a defaulter for $100,000 or more. He was also one of the receivers of a savings bank, which had $60,000 on hand. He is known to have invested large amounts in cattle companies, and is believed to have speculated recklessly.

The County Penitentiary at Albany, N. Y., is a plague-stricken spot. Its 1,000 inmates are exposed to a deadly form of typhus fever. A great many deaths have occurred. The epidemic is said to have all the characteristics of the "black plague" which decimated London years ago.

Frederick Fishel, cashier and confidential bookkeeper of August, Bernheim & Bauer, New York clothing manufacturers, has been arrested charged with having robbed his employers by means of forged checks of upwards of $75,000.

The hat works of R. L. Dunlap & Co., in Brooklyn, N. Y., were destroyed by fire, entailing a loss of $250,000.

The North Chicago Rolling Mill Company has purchased 1,000 acres of land in the Connellsville, Pa., coal region. The company will erect 700 ovens and make their own coal in the future.

The resumption of work in the iron colliries at Pittsburgh brings out the statement that the strikers lost nearly two million dollars in wages, and the operators have suffered to a large amount by the prolonged suspension.

Heavy rains in the lumber districts of Pennsylvania have caused losses estimated at $3,000,000.

Joshua B. Lippincott, head of the book-publishing house of the J. B. Lippincott Company, and founder of Lippincott's Magazine, died at Philadelphia. His demise was not wholly unexpected, as he had been sick for some time from heart disease.

Alexander Gilchrist, a blind and decrepit inmate of a poor-house in Pennsylvania, has received a pension and back pay amounting to $12,151.

Work has been resumed in Cunningham & Co.'s green-glass bottle factory at Pittsburgh, after a shut-down of seven months, the men returning to work at the old rate of wages.

Philip Levyn, wholesale tobacconist at Buffalo, N. Y., failed for $40,000.

WESTERN.

An alleged infernal machine turned up the other morning at the general offices of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company in Chicago, and the theory is advanced of a plot to blow up the costly structure in which the corporation does business.

"The Silver King," one of the most intensely interesting of modern dramas, forms the attraction at McVicker's Theater, Chicago, this week. F. C. Bangs, an actor of excellent parts, enacts the title role, and is supported by a strong company.

The recent murder of the Knoch family in a Detroit suburb has been followed by the murder of the aged mother of the head of the murdered family. Gustav and Herman Knoch, sons of the last victim, have been arrested on suspicion of having committed the awful crime.

St. Louis has a hair-dresser who has applied for a patent on an invention by which passengers and freight may be received and discharged from railway trains in full motion.

A Chinese laundryman in St. Louis named Jue Jun was received into the Pilgrim Congregational Church. Five of his countrymen witnessed the ceremony.

Maxwell, the alleged murderer of Preller, in St. Louis, is next month to be placed on trial, when witnesses are expected from the four quarters of the earth. A woman has been summoned from Hong Kong.

The people of Oregon and the contiguous territory have already commenced to protest against the reductions in the mail service proposed by Postmaster General Vilas.

Two masked lads robbed a house in the outskirts of Cincinnati, after choking an old lady to a condition bordering on insensibility.

Mrs. Marie Licht, 67 years of age, died in Milwaukee from hydrophobia.

The curious fact is stated that on New Year's Day, at Prairieville, Michigan, a farmer named Pennel plowed twelve acres of land, finding frost at only one spot in the field.

The Grand Jury at San Francisco found an indictment for felony against George W. Tyler, the leading counsel for Sarah Althea Hill, who claimed to be the wife of ex-Senator Sharon.

Marcus M. Towle, of Hammond, Ind., claims that the bridge of the Louisville and New Albany Road swings upon his land. The other morning he ran a tug and a scow into the draw and stopped a mail train. He gathered a party of several hundred men to force a settlement, and threatened to use hot water on any one daring to interfere.—The railway officials caused Towle to be taken to Indianapolis by a deputy federal marshal, and the penitentiary now stares the rioter in the face.

It was determined at Detroit that Mrs. Knoch had died from pneumonia, and that the fracture on her skull was made by the County Physician in removing the top of the skull to examine the brain. Her two sons, who had been arrested for her murder, were released.

Hans Peterson, 60 years of age, who lived near Greenville, Mich., shot and killed his wife, and then sent a bullet through his own heart.

Albert Grant (colored) has begun proceedings at Massillon, Ohio, under the civil rights law, against a colored barber named John Fields, who refused to cut Grant's hair.

The total earnings of the Northern Pacific Railway for the year 1885 were nearly $11,500,000. This is a decrease of about $1,200,000 as compared with 1884.

SOUTHERN.

Mexico.

Louisiana's sugar crop is larger by 15 per cent than the average of previous years.

Baltimore received and shipped a decreased quantity of wheat last year, but there was an increase in the amount of corn handled.

William M. Price, who was charged with the authorship of the Morey letter, was admitted to the bar in Maryland, it having been conclusively shown that he was innocent of the charge.

R. T. Cooney, of the man-of-war Manhattan, lying off City Point, Va., gave away his watch and diamond ring and then committed suicide by opening an artery in his wrist.

The saloon-keepers of Chattanooga, Tenn., smarting under the rigid enforcement of the Sunday law, have taken out warrants for nearly one hundred street-car officials, liverymen, and newspaper publishers.

A panther which for six weeks had alarmed the citizens of Clayton, Ga., attacked and overcame George Greenleaf, who was walking up a hill with his wife. The latter cut the beast's throat.

WASHINGTON.

Washington telegram: "Western Senators are receiving letters in great number urging them to oppose the confirmation of Land Commissioner Sparks because of his recent rulings. Mr. Sparks was confirmed by the Senate as Commissioner of the General Land Office on the 25th of last March."

During the last month nearly $20,000,000 in gold was received by the Treasury at Washington from San Francisco.

President Cleveland, at his New Year reception, was assisted by his sister and the wives of Secretaries Bayard, Manning, and Whitney, and of Postmaster General Vilas. Secretary Lamar is on a holiday visit to the South. Three nieces of Samuel J. Tilden stood beside Mrs. Manning. Miss Cleveland was robed in crimson velvet. Mrs. Logan failed to accompany the Senator. The diplomatic corps outdid itself in colors and decorations. Over six thousand persons shook hands with the President.

A member of the Chilian Legation has got mixed up in Washington by indulging in an old-fashioned drunk. After receiving a sound thrashing from a plain republican citizen he was with difficulty bundled off to his quarters.

The total amount of the national debt Jan. 1 was $1,858,413,715. The debt, less cash in the Treasury, was $1,45 ,544,766, there being $49,536,951 on hand, as shown by the Treasurer's general account. The debt decreased $3,489,910 during December. The following is a recapitulation of the monthly statement:

The Secretary of State has just received and sent to Mr. Ericsson, the distinguished inventor, the grand cross of the Order of Naval Merit recently conferred on that gentleman by the late King of Spain.

POLITICAL.

The Civil-Service Commission, embarrassed by applicants for place, has decided to permit no request for examination to remain on its books longer than six months.

An interesting fight is promised in the United States Senate over the confirmation of Judge Powers, of Utah.

Sub-Treasurer Acton, of New York, refused to turn over his office to Treasurer of the United States Jordan when requested, acting on the advice of eminent counsel. Treasurer Jordan relieved Mr. Acton's bondsmen by breaking the seals and commencing business operations.

The Democrats of the Ohio Senate made John O'Neill President pro tem. The Republicans organized the House by electing John C. Entrekin Speaker.

J. W. Husted was chosen Speaker of the Assembly of the New York Legislature.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Several earthquake shocks have been felt recently in Valparaiso, Serena, Arica, and Tacna, South America.

Bishop Fabre, of Montreal, Canada, has issued a circular denouncing tobogganing as a sinful sport.

William Dale, instructor in a gymnasium at Binghamton, N. Y., swung seven-pound Indian clubs for four hours and fifty minutes. In a bicycle contest at Minneapolis, Woodside made 266 miles in twenty-six hours.

Fire losses in the United States and Canada during the month of December, 1885, reached $40,200,000, and for the past year the losses have aggregated $94,200,000—$15,000,000 less than in 1884.

Dr. Robert Ramsay, one of the most prominent Masons in America, died of heart disease in a hospital at Toronto, in his 45th year. His fame as a Masonic writer was world-wide. The Prince of Wales made him Knight Commander of the Temple.

FOREIGN.

Princess Colonna, of Paris, nee Eva Mackay, gave birth to a son last week. A magnificent outfit for the infant has been received from San Francisco. The christening dress is entirely composed of antique point d'Alencon.

Hydrophobia is raging to such an extent in France that the police have been ordered to shoot all stray dogs. The four children from Newark, N. J., who have been under Pasteur's treatment for the disease, sailed for New York apparently cured.

M. de Freycinet has concluded to form a new French Cabinet.

A gentleman who is connected with a London news agency which supplies the American press with much English news wrote a letter to Mr. Gladstone inviting him to visit America. Mr. Gladstone replied as follows:

HAWARDEN, Jan. 4.

DEAR SIR: I do not regard such an invitation as you transmitted to me on the 2d of October as one the President requiring my best consideration for a choice that reflection might open to me some way of compliance. I am sorry, however, to report that I have not been able to arrive at this result. My physical strength is not such as would permit me to undertake a voyage to America, and the imperative demands of my time and thought in connection with the present state of political affairs allow no intermission of attention. The invitation itself, however, constitutes a new tie of feeling with America. I shall ever remember it with thankful acknowledgment, while the knowledge that so many friendly eyes are watching the course of events in this country with reference to Ireland will be a new incentive to the performance of a patriotic and philanthropic duty. I remain, dear sir, your faithful servant, W. E. GLADSTONE.

He may possibly be induced to visit the United States in the autumn, after the conclusion of the coming session of Parliament.

LATER NEWS IETMS.

Cholera caused the death of eight hundred hogs in Wabash County, Ind.

Thomas Green, of Palmyra, Wis., after fasting twenty days, has again resumed regular meals.

Judgments were taken in the United States Circuit Court at St. Paul against Dwight M. Sabin, Senator from Minnesota, for an aggregate sum of $85,000.

The law of Ohio regarding miscegenation was enforced last week at Toledo, where a colored preacher was sent to jail for ten days for marrying a white woman to a negro.

Eastern capitalists are said to have perfected a plan for erecting a number of elevators along the various railways in North Dakota, in which each farmer will be assigned a separate bin, and can always have control of his own grain.

Several brokers in Montreal have been swindled by purchasing land script granted to volunteers who served in the campaign against Riel. One soldier transferred his claim to nine different persons and received payment in full.

The new steamer City of Nassau, worth $5,000, which sailed from Philadelphia for Jacksonville, Fla., Dec. 24, has not been heard from, and it is believed that she foundered. The officers and crew, nineteen men were from Philadelphia.

The suspended banking firm of Charles H. Sweat & Co., of Boston, having paid up claims for $7,500,000, has notified its creditors to call in two weeks for interest due.

The hardware store of Thomas Birney & Co., at Pittsburgh, has been closed by the Sheriff, who holds executions for nearly $100,000. The firm made a specialty of supplying roller-skates to rinks.

It is understood that Secretary Whitney is satisfied with the seaworthiness of the Dolphin, as shown in her recent trial trip, and will formally accept the vessel as soon as certain preliminaries can be arranged. It is not thought necessary to have another sea trial.

The gross earnings of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad for December showed a decrease of $135,000 as compared with the corresponding month of 1884.

England was visited by a severe snowstorm which seriously interfered with railway traffic and telegraph service.

Washington telegram: "An office seeker who had been here for many weeks returned home not long since without presenting his case to the President. He had a very novel reason for this strange procedure. He had a very valuable ring, so he said, which he intended to wear when he called on the President. Soon after his arrival he lost the ring, and feeling that his case would be hopeless unless the President saw the ring on his finger he gave up in despair and left for home."

Mr. HOAR introduced in the Senate, on the 6th inst., a bill for longer sessions of Congress, making proceedings commence alternately in October and November. The silver question was resumed in the Senate on discussion of the Beck resolution. Mr. Groome intended the present was no compulsory coinage would bring the country to a silver standard. Mr. McPherson declared it was in the opinion of the best authorities in the world a point had been reached beyond which it would be dangerous to go, and predicted ruinous payments by Jay Cooke that the bonds would be paid in gold. The Chair laid before the Senate a letter from the Postmaster General, complying with the call of a recent Senate resolution in respect to the appointment of Postmasters in Maine, alleged to have been procured through the influence of S. S. Brown, Chairman of the Democratic committee of that State. Mr. Hale, of Maine, said the Postmaster General had turned these matters of appointment over to his assistant, who referred them to Mr. Brown, but the Postmaster General had not made a complete answer to the resolution of the Senate. In reply Senators Voorhees and West defended the civil-service policy of President Cleveland. Bills were introduced by the House Committee on Appropriations for the coinage of the silver dollar, to limit it, and suspending for one year national banks to keep a larger reserve of sedemption; to repeal the tax on bank circulation; to direct the calling in of $50,000,000 of the 4 per cent. bonds, payment to be made in coin or silver and notes.——The President sent the following nominations to the Senate: James Shields of Montana, to be Collector of Internal Revenue for the District of Montana. Postmasters—Thomas Ryan, at Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.; Charles Holliday, at St. Louis, Mich.; J. C. Morgan, at Kearney, Neb.

THE RED MEN.

Conclusions of Mr. Holman's Special Committee to Investigate Indian Affairs.

Washington special.

Special attention having been drawn to the Indian problem by the treatment of the subject in Secretary Lamar's annual report, it has become a topic of frequent conversation among national legislators, and indications are that Congress will adopt new and earnest measures for settlement of the question. Mr. Holman, of Indiana, will soon submit to Congress a report of the observations of the commission of which he is Chairman, and he says that he will recommend that the reservation system be abandoned, with a few exceptions where it is impracticable now, and that a commission be appointed by the President to apportion the lands in severalty among the members of tribes that are sufficiently advanced in civilization to justify the belief that the plan would be successful.

Senator Van Wyck has taken hold of the question as he finds it in the Indian Territory, and proposes that the National Government shall assume direct authority, thereby organizing the Territory with a full corps of civil officers, but he does not propose to interfere with the tribal courts and local Indian authorities.

Mr. Townshend, of Illinois, has also made a move in the same direction, but would accomplish the object by different means. He says he regards the Indian problem as one of the most important questions pressing for intelligent Congressional action. All the previous plans adopted by the Government have failed to produce the desired results, but it has been demonstrated that if proper methods are adopted the Indians can be civilized and made self-supporting. He says if they are taught how to labor and the value of property they will not desire to go on the war-path, and may in time become useful members in society. The first step should be to make them citizens. There are many million acres of land set apart to the Indians for which they can never have use. The proper course to pursue, he says, is to break up their tribal relation, put them under the protection of the law, and make them amenable to its penalties, allot to each of them a sufficient quantity of land to enable them by industrious habits to maintain themselves as individual members of society, and dispose of the remainder of the land to actual settlers, and appropriate the proceeds of the sales for their education and support.

Mr. Townshend's plan is essentially different from that of Senator Van Wyck. His bill to organize the Territory of Oklahoma provides for the consolidation of the Indian Territory under a territorial government, the establishing of a court, and the allotment of lands in severalty among the Indians. It authorizes the appointment of a Governor and Secretary by the President, the Governor to be ex-officio Superintendent of Indian Affairs in the Territory. A Legislature, to consist of a Senate of eleven members and a House of Representatives of twenty-nine members, is to be chosen at the first election to be held in the Territory by all male persons over 21 years of age, lawfully domiciled in the Territory. At subsequent elections the right of suffrage is vested in all such male persons who have resided in the territory for six months. A court is established, to be presided over by one judge. An attorney and marshal are authorized to be appointed by the President. The jurisdiction, criminal and civil, will be of a character similar to that of the Western District of Arkansas. All are competent as jurors who are bona fide male residents of the Territory and over 21 years of age, and who understand the English language well enough to comprehend the proceedings. All laws of the United States applicable and not in conflict with Indian treaties are to be in force in the Territory. A delegate to Congress is authorized as in other Territories. It also provides that patents shall issue to all tribes on any reservation of the United States for all lands which have been set apart to them respectively, to be held in trust for them by the United States for the period of twenty-five years. But the President is authorized at any time before the end of that period to allot such lands in severalty to the Indians located on the respective reservations in the following quantities: To each head of a family, 160 acres; to each single person over 18 years of age, 80 acres; to each orphan child under 18 years of age, 80 acres; to each other person under 18 years of age, 40 acres. When the lands are mainly useful for grazing purposes double the quantities named are to be given to each. It provides that patents shall issue to each allottee for the lands allotted to him, but the title is to be held in trust by the United States for the period of twenty-five years thereafter, when it shall become absolute in fee simple. All conveyances of lands allotted in severalty, made before the end of the period of twenty-five years, are to be void. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to purchase from the Indian tribes all the lands not allotted to them in severalty, subject, however, to the ratification of Congress. The purchase money for the same is to be held in trust by the United States for the period of twenty-five years, and interest at the rate of 5 per cent. is to be paid in the meantime for the education and self-support of the Indians.

LIVELY HAND-SHAKING.

President Cleveland Disposes of Four Hundred Callers in Exactly Sixteen Minutes.

Washington dispatch.

Four hundred and forty-eight persons waited patiently in the east room of the White House to-day to pay their respects to the President. The crowd was almost twice as large as at any preceding reception of this kind. The President appeared just before three o'clock and entered upon his task with such expedition that the entire room was cleared in sixteen minutes. Several persons tried to engage the President's attention with private matters, but they were told to call again to-morrow. One individual shook hands in an agitated manner with one of the ushers, and passed the President without noticing him. He was reminded of his mistake by the laughter of the crowd, and endeavored to return and shake the President's hand, but was borne away by the rapidly moving line of people behind him.

SENATOR BECK ON SILVER.

He Opens Fire on the Gold Bugs—Hot Review of the Bondholders' Policy.

A Conspiracy Alleged to Compel Government to Pay Them Gold—Strong Plea for Bimetallism.

The Entire Subject Discussed in All Its Bearings Both Upon This Country and Europe.

From the Congressional Record.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the following resolution submitted by Mr. Beck:

WHEREAS, The laws of the United States require that all duties on imported goods shall be paid in coin; and

WHEREAS, It is provided by Sec. 3694 of the Revised Statutes that "the coin paid for duties on imported goods shall be set apart as a special fund, and shall be applied as follows: First, to the payment, in coin, of the interest on the bonds and notes of the United States; second," to the purchase or payment of 1 per cent. of the entire debt of the United States, to be made within each fiscal year, which is to be set apart as a sinking fund, and the interest on which shall in like manner be applied to the purchase or payment of the public debt, as the Secretary of the Treasury shall, from time to time, direct; third, the residue to be paid into the Treasury"; Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to inquire whether the laws above stated now are or have heretofore been obeyed; and if they have not, to report by bill, or otherwise, such measures as will secure their enforcement.

Mr. Beck—Mr. President, no man will deny that the laws passed by Congress are as imperative on the highest executive official as on the humblest citizen, whether they approve them or not. I venture to assert that no man will contend that the laws recited in the preamble to the foregoing resolution either are now or have for many years past been obeyed. All sorts of excuses may be and have been offered for their violation, still the fact remains that the laws of the land have been disregarded by our executive officers, and the legislative power has been subordinated to the will of men whose duty it is to submit to them and to execute them as they exist. They have no right to decide whether a law is good or bad, politic or impolitic; so long as it is law they must be compelled to render implicit obedience to it. They have officially informed Congress for years past that they neither require coin to be paid for duties on imported goods nor do they set apart the coin or its equivalent so received as a special fund to pay the interest on our public debt or to procure bonds for the sinking fund. On the contrary, they admit that as the existing laws do not coincide with their views of what is politic they disregard them. I deny their right to do so, because I believe many of the evils the country is now afflicted with grow out of the disregard of the plainest provisions of law by our Treasury officials. I have no faith in the remedies which are now and have for years past been proposed for the evils they allege to exist. That the country is not as prosperous as it ought to be I admit, but I insist that the remedy is not to be found in striking down our silver coinage or the currency based upon it, but rather in requiring our public creditors to take it as the law and the contracts they required us to make demand.

EQUALITY OF GOLD AND SILVER COIN.

I believe that it can be demonstrated that gold and silver coin, and the paper representatives of both, stand on an absolute equality before the law, and that three-fourths of our present troubles grow out of the refusal of our officials to pay the money received at our custom-houses to our public creditors in the manner and for the purposes prescribed by the laws of the United States. Therefore, I have recited these laws, which are plain and simple, in the preamble; and in the resolution have asked the Committee on Finance to tell the Senate whether they have been executed or not; and if not, to report measures which will secure their enforcement. I admit that even when that is done other combinations must be broken up before we can become a prosperous commercial people; but as all measures for tariff and tax reform must be originated at the other end of the Capitol, I am content to await the action taken there, being confident that the Executive is in full sympathy with all proper efforts in that regard.

There can be no dispute as to the fact that there must be something wrong in the management of public affairs when the ports of great nations like Germany, France, Austria, and other countries are arbitrarily closed against our cattle, hogs, and other food products, without, as the President tells us in his message, "present prospect of reasonable change." It is not a healthy condition of things when wheat, hogs, and other farm products, debarred from foreign markets in retaliation because of our protective tariff, sell at home for prices which will barely pay the cost of production. As to them, certainly protection does not protect. The great American agricultural industries, which give employment to more than half of the workers for wages, whose welfare is held up (properly so) as the highest aim of legislation, and whose products constitute at least eighty per cent. of our exports, receive no real consideration here and are not even ranked among the industries of the country over which Congress is asked or expected to throw its protecting arm.

These great interests are the unorganized, unequipped, and, therefore, neglected militia, whose strength can not be brought to bear with half the efficiency of a single regiment of thoroughly armed veterans fighting for special interest. This is illustrated here and now by the zeal everywhere displayed by the combinations of bankers and bondholders and their able and well-paid press to maintain their bonds at a premium of 24 per cent., or rather to increase that premium to 30 or 40 per cent., at the expense of the already impoverished masses of taxpayers. It seems as though it was thought to be the duty of Congress to see to it that the rich should be made richer by making the poor poorer. Why should we be in hot haste to strike down our silver currency for fear of a fall in our outstanding bonds below 24 per cent premium? Have the representatives of the people any interest in maintaining, far less in increasing, the premium on bonds bearing 4 per cent. interest beyond 24 per cent. when we must soon become the purchasers of them at any premium, or else contract our currency at ruinous rates by locking up in the Treasury all our surplus revenue, as reduction of taxation seems to be impossible, by the passage of laws which will still further depreciate the prices of farm products, now so low that producers cannot raise them and pay wages to their laborers on which they can live?

When fat hogs sell at 3½ cents a pound, and other things in proportion—when all the world is combined to exclude our agricultural products from their markets in retaliation against our protective system, which prohibits our farmers from buying what they must have with the proceeds of what they must sell, unless they pay 46 per cent. on the average more than they are offered them for, in order to enrich a few organized combinations of manufacturers, who seek no markets abroad and refuse to sell their products in competition with so-called pauper with whom the farmer must compete, our condition is not satisfactory.

THE CRUSADE AGAINST SILVER.

But I agree that the Senate cannot inaugurate measures to relieve the country from oppressions of that character; therefore I propose to seek relief in the treatment of our circulation, not by destroying it, but by extending its usefulness. The present crusade against silver is only another evidence of the audacity of the organization of wealth; they have always secured all they demanded, however unjust their demands; they have succeeded in alarming the President and the Secretary of the Treasury as they have done several preceding administrations; they threaten to use the power which our laws give them over our currency, of withdrawing from circulation among the people, and, if needful, from the country, the gold they control, and thus demonetize, even if ruin follows, the business of the people. Every concession increases their audacity and adds to their power. A stand must be made somewhere by the representatives of the taxpayers or an absolute surrender of all the monetary interests of the country into their hands must follow. A mere reference to the past legislation of Congress on this subject proves what I say. When it was first asserted, in 1868, by the bondholders, as the time approached when the United States could lawfully pay off the 5-20 6 per cent. bonds, and when the outstanding principal of the public debt exceeded $2,600,000,000, that the honor of the country demanded that the principal as well as the interest on the bonds should be paid in gold or silver coin, a cry of indignation was raised all over the land against such a demand by all honest, disinterested men.

They were told, and told truthfully, that all the bonds they held had been purchased with legal-tender notes at par; that for each $100 in greenbacks they paid to the Government they had received a bond for $100, bearing 6 per cent. interest, payable in gold or silver coin; that the greenback when they exchanged it for the bond, was only worth 50 cents on the dollar in coin, and that it was an outrage in the face of the contract they had made, with the privileges given to many of them in addition as national bankers to have currency issued for them to loan out on the security of their bonds equal to 90 per cent. of the bonds deposited, to demand that the principal of their bonds should be paid in coin. They knew—everybody knew—that the claim was false. The legal-tender notes have and continue to have an indorsement on their back that "This note shall be receivable at its face value for all debts, public and private, except interest on the public debt and customs dues," so that there could be neither doubt nor dispute either as to the law or the fact. Nobody denounced the impudent demand of the bondholders more emphatically than the present presiding officer of the Senate (Mr. Sherman).

It seems to me that any set of men who would deny the fact that the legal-tender note, indorsed as it was and is, which had purchased the bonds at its face value, should be received again by the bondholder in payment of the principal of the obligation he held, would not hesitate to deny the truth of the attraction of gravitation.

PAYMENT OF BONDS IN COIN.

Yet these men not only denied it, but in 1869 procured the passage of an act of Congress, against the vote and protest (I am happy to say) of every Democrat in both houses, declaring that the principal of the bonds should be paid in coin—in gold and silver coin, as both are named. Legal-tenders were only worth 50 cents on the dollar in coin when the bonds were bought; they were worth from 66 to 70 cents when this act was passed. The act was simply legalized robbery. The bondholders and their attorneys in and out of Congress knew it, and knew that no court would sustain such a law. The indorsement could neither be erased nor sworn off the back of the legal-tender note, and nobody could plead ignorance either of the law or of the fact that it was to be received at par in payment of the principal of all our bonds.

Therefore they caused the act of July 14, 1870, to be passed, extending the time of payment, reducing the interest, and exempting the new bonds in express terms from all taxation, State, Federal, or municipal; and to prevent all mistake or misapprehension as to the character, quality, and weight of the money in which payment of the new bonds should be made, they caused to be printed on each bond as part of its obligation "that it shall be paid in coin of the standard value prescribed by law on the 14th of July, 1870." The present gold and silver coin are both of the standard value prescribed by the law of July 14, 1870, and were then as now both full legal-tenders for all our obligations. All the bonds that mature in 1892 and 1907, amounting to about $1,000,000,000, stand to-day unchanged, and payable as required by the act of 1870. The remnant of those payable now have been changed, the interest has been lowered, and the time extended, but the same provisions govern them and the same conditions are written on us as part of the contract by all of them.

In the face of these facts it is simply absurd for anybody to assert that they are payable in gold alone, or that the taxpayers of the country are under any obligation, express or implied, either to demonetize or stop the coinage of the silver dollar, which is of the standard value required by the act of July 14, 1870, or to increase its weight thirty, forty, or any other numbers of grains, because in 1873, when we have ignominiously surrendered the carrying trade of this country and the world, with her 200,000 serfs in India and elsewhere, and Germany, after extorting $1,000,000,000 of gold from France, have combined in the interest of their moneychangers to demonetize silver or put up the market price of gold 24 per cent.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL UNIT OF VALUE.

If the gold mines of California and Australia have ceased to produce abundantly and the Comstock lode and the Leadville mines had not produced silver, so that the ratio of the two metals as bullion in London had been reversed, the argument could be made quite as plausible that the silver dollar was the constitutional unit of value in 1870 which the bondholders have a right to demand. There is not an outstanding obligation of the United States, nor of any State, municipality, corporation, or individual which cannot be legally and honorably discharged by the payment of the present standard silver dollar. What right has Congress to deprive the debtor of that right by adding more silver to the coin than he agreed to pay, or by stopping its coinage so that he cannot obtain it? It is as palpable a violation of a contract to increase the obligation of the debtor as it is to impair or reduce the standard value of the coin which the creditor stipulated in his contract should be paid to him. When Congress has once coined money and regulated the value thereof, and contracts are based upon it, the right to pay according to its terms cannot rightfully or justly be taken from the people, and Senators and Representatives who deprive them of that right will have unpleasant explanations to make to the men whose burdens are increased by their vote. It is simply an attempt to repeal the legislation of 1869, and the same pretenses are made now that were made then. An honest dollar for the laboring man was then, as now, held up as the patriotic object of those who repudiated the greenback and higher wages is chimed to be the prime object of all the patriotic combinations of monopolists and manchine-owners, who tax us all 46 per cent. under the present protective tariff and yet hire the cheapest pauper labor they can import. It is the wolf guarding the lamb, the spider the fly, and the hawk the sparrow.

I propose to test this question in the light of the facts furnished us by our Treasury officials. We are, of course, as good judges of the value of the facts they furnish and as competent to draw correct conclusions from them as they are. The last report from the Treasury Bureau of Statistics, relative to our foreign commerce for the fiscal year 1885, proves that there is no such condition either in our trade or exports of metal, whether of coin or bullion, as to render it necessary to strike down our silver coinage. It shows (page 1) that our total exports for 1885 were $726,682,916, and for 1884, $721,961,852, while our total imports for 1885 were $577,527,329, and for 1884, $667,657,630.

It will thus be seen that while the value of our exports in 1885 exceeded those of 1884, our imports were more than $10,014,000 less. The same report shows that for 1885 our exports of gold were $8,477,892, and for 1884 $41,081,357, or over $32,000,000 less for the fiscal year than for the year before. Our exports of silver for 1885 were $33,750,533, and for 1884 $26,051,426, or nearly $8,000,000 more last year than the year before, while our imports of gold last year exceeded those of the year before nearly $4,000,000. These facts falsify the clamor that gold is fleeing from our country, and proves that all the pretended evils of a single depreciated silver standard are myths.

Nor is it true that our silver coin has depreciated since July, 1870, when tested by any other standard than the market value of bullion in London.

The report above referred to (pages 5 and 6) gives the New York or export prices in currency of the commodities which constituted over 80 per cent. of our exports, nearly all agricultural products, in 1870 and 1885, from which it will be seen that the silver dollar, which it has become fashionable to malign and denounce in aristocratic circles, will now purchase from 25 to 30 per cent. more of all that the toiling millions of this country labor to produce, and of all that men need money to obtain, than it would in July, 1870. To avoid all dispute as to these facts I quote the language of the report, as follows:

The following table shows the annual average export price in currency of the articles of domestic product named and for the years indicated:

	Year ending June 30,
Articles.	1870.	1885.
Indian corn, per bushel	$0.92.5	$0.54.9
Wheat, per bushel	1.28.9	86.2
Wheat flour, per barrel	6.11.2	4.83.7
Cotton, per pound	23.5	10.6
Leather, per pound	28.5	19.8
Mineral oils, refined, per gallon	30.5	08.7
Bacon, hams, per pound	15.7	09.7
Lard, per pound	16.6	07.9
Pork, salted, per pound	13.3	06.3
Beef, salted, per pound	07.2	07.5
Butter, per pound	29.3	16.8
Cheese, per pound	15.5	09.3
Eggs, per dozen	39.3	21.5
Starch, per pound	08.2	04.0
Sugar, refined, per pound	12.6	06.4
Tobacco, leaf, per pound	11.3	09.9

In the face of these official facts and figures as to our trade, and exports and imports of gold and silver, and the comparative purchasing power of the silver dollar now and in 1870, I repeat: Why should it be stricken down, or its purchasing power further increased 20 per cent., by adding 40, 50, or any other number of grains, to its weight? In other words, why should every producer and debtor have to give 20 per cent. more of the products of his labor to obtain either a new silver dollar or gold coin with which to pay his debts than he does now, when he is already paying his obligations according to the terms of a contract in a coin which will procure for its owner much more of all he needs than it would in 1870? It is only another phase of the constant struggle of the rich to grind the face of the poor, and of the favored few to enrich themselves by class legislation.

GOLD AT A PREMIUM.

While no one can deny that every obligation of the United States and every contract within our borders can be discharged honorably with the present silver dollar, we are told that our foreign obligations and relations are such that gold will be at a premium very soon, and we will be on a basis of degraded silver at once if we do not increase the weight or stop the coinage of silver; that all Europe is horrified at our stupidity or dishonesty, or both. Even England, whose gold is said to be used so freely to buy Senators and Representatives to vote for revenue tariffs against protection to monopolies called American industry, is held up now by the gold monometallists as an example worthy of all imitation; her financial policy is lauded as the perfection of human wisdom. Fortunately the official reports overthrow all the reckless assertions of the gold worshipers. The Register of the Treasury (see report for this year, page 4) shows that out of $1,071,460,252 registered bonds of the United States outstanding only $11,927,900, or a little over one-tenth of 1 per cent., is held abroad, and of those which can be paid before 1892 foreigners hold only $44,150, which is less than the interest on the money now lying idle in the Treasury for one day at 3 per cent. per annum.

These facts, coupled with the fact that our exports of goods exceeded our imports $130,000,000 this year, and our imports of goods exceeded our gold exports $18,216,804, an amount greatly exceeding all our bonds held abroad, settle the question. The falsity of the clamor about foreign complications or gold premiums is made too apparent for any sensible man to be deceived by it.

The press is filled with articles day by day which seek to make people believe that all other nations have ceased to coin silver, and that we alone are stubbornly persisting in forcing it upon this country after it has been abandoned everywhere else.

I propose to disapprove these allegations by officially stated facts. The Director of the Mint in his last report shows (pages 131, 132) that for the year 1881 the world's production of gold was $95,232,569; of silver, $115,117,878; and that $93,459,240 of gold was coined, while the coinage of silver last year amounted to $80,030,443, of which the United States coined $23,231,756 of gold and $28,534,856 of silver. Other nations, therefore, coined in 1881 $81,504,577 of silver, showing that we are far from being alone in the coinage of that metal. England coined $3,201,821 of silver last year and $6,201,517 the year before, to add to her stock, which has been accumulating for generations; while she has coined silver for India in the last three years to the value of $68,241,000.

FOREIGN SILVER COIN.

The workers for wages in England to-day get their pay in silver coin, and the question is never mooted by them as to the comparative bullion value of the silver and gold coin of that country. Even Germany, notwithstanding she pretended to have demonetized silver twelve years ago, coined in 1882 $6,407,157 of it to add to her vast stock on hand; her laborers are paid in it now. No complaint is made anywhere, here or in Europe, about silver coin, except by the holders of our bonds, who seek to increase largely the purchasing power of gold, or, which is the same thing, reduce the value of all our property from 25 to 50 per cent. below its present value when tested by the single standard of gold, which they claim shall be paid by us to them, and to them alone. They do not seek to establish the single gold standard, they say; they are bimetallists. They agree that silver is a legal-tender for all debts and obligations of the Government, except those held by them. It is good enough to pay the laborer, the soldier, the sailor—in short, all who work for the United States—but they insist that it is dishonest in us to pay it to them, although their bonds and obligations all show on their face that it is a legal-tender in payment of them all so long as it is coined of the standard value fixed by law July 14, 1870, as it is now and always has been.

Our dollar is more valuable than that coined in most of the other leading nations. France included, theirs bearing the relation of 15½ to 1 with gold, while ours is 16 to 1. I need not repeat in detail what the official reports show in regard to the gold, silver, and paper currency of the several countries. It is sufficient to prove by them that while the difference in the market value of gold and silver in London operates to degrade their silver coin more than it does ours, France and other countries maintain their silver and paper in all transactions, public and private, at par with gold under far greater difficulties than we have to contend with, no matter from what standpoint the comparison is made.

DUTY OF THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

No Secretary of the Treasury can mistake his duty under the law; no public creditor can complain when the interest on his bond is paid in the coin which is set apart as a special fund, first for the payment of the interest due to him. Yet millions, hundreds of millions, have been paid for duties on imported goods since 1878 in silver coin and silver certificates, which is only a convenient form of handling silver, as the coin they represent is ours when the certificates are paid to us; yet not one dollar, so far as I am advised, has ever been paid in silver as interest on the public debt or in the purchase of a single bond for the sinking fund, though it has been recognized as a coin which constituted the special fund created by law by its acceptance in payment of duties on imported goods. The public creditors have unjustly demanded gold—or the interest on their bonds without any semblance of right, and every Secretary of the Treasury has disregarded the law and acceded to their demands. Our officials have thus aided and abetted the organization of the most powerful body of capitalists in the United States against silver coinage—men who control the currency of the country, and hold the obligations of all its business concerns; men who can inflate or contract the circulating medium on which all our commercial transactions depend; men who hold $637,742,850 of bonds of the United States maturing in 1907, on which they now demand a premium of 24 per cent., and seek, by striking down silver, still further to increase their profits.

They hold also $55,000,001 of our bonds payable in 1892, which they seek to enhance the value of even beyond the 12 per cent. premium they now command. These men control boards of trade, chambers of commerce, and the best talent of the press; they can crush all who are bold if they dare to dissent from or object to the demands they make; the reports of their conventions and speeches are laid before us with a parade and semblance of authority equal to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury or the message of the President.

I shall not be surprised if they dominate this Congress, but it will be after I have entered my protest against it and have given to the country my reasons for so protesting.

If the managers of the finances of France had treated her silver coinage as our officials have ours, she would have been prostrated financially, at the feet of England and Germany long ago.

Why have the holders of the dishonored trade-dollar been importuning Congress for years to give them in exchange for it a standard dollar containing 412½ grains, while it contains 420? Simply because one is a legal tender and will pay the debts of its owner, and the other will not. Yet tested by the bullion value the trade-dollar is worth the most. When our Treasury officials yielded to the clamor of the bondholders and violated the law by admitting their right to refuse silver received at the Custom House in payment of the interest or principal of their bonds, they degraded our standard silver dollar by depriving it of its most important function as a legal tender; and now, having captured the executive branch of the Government, the bondholders and their attorneys are besieging Congress to enforce their demand for gold alone in the settlement of their claims, all law, justice, and equity to the contrary notwithstanding, by striking down the silver of the standard value of July, 1870, which they then demanded and inserted in the face of every bond they hold as one of the coins in which the bonds should be paid. It is hard to do justice to their audacity in temperate language; I hardly think I am equal to the task and will not attempt it. I can, however, get the facts before the people.

The last report of the Treasurer, page 35, shows that the receipts at the New York Custom-House for the fiscal year 1885 were paid as follows:

United States legal-tender notes	$36,161,000,	or 28.9 per cent.
United States gold coin	1,514,000,	or 1.2 per cent.
United States gold certificates	42,779,000,	or 34.1 per cent.
United States silver certificates	44,660,000,	or 35.6 per cent.
United States silver coin	158,000,	or .01 per cent.
Total	$125,302,000,	or 100 per cent.

It is fair to assume that the payments at the other custom-houses were made in substantially the same character of money. It will be observed that more of the customs dues were paid in silver and silver certificates than were paid in gold and gold certificates; all of it is by law a special fund which cannot legally be paid or covered into the Treasury till the interest on the public debt is paid out of it and the bonds for the sinking fund are purchased or redeemed.

SILVER HELD IN THE TREASURY.

These, together, required about $108,000,000, yet not a dollar of silver has been so applied; it is paid into the Treasury and held there, and a clamor is raised that it cannot be again got into circulation. If the law was obeyed and the bondholders required to take the same proportion of silver dollars that the Government receives through its custom-houses, the bondholders would have no difficulty in getting them all into circulation; and when it is made their interest to maintain and support the silver they own we would hear no more about its being dishonest money. The Secretary says (page 14 of his report) that the balance in the Treasury has been increased from the 4th of March, 1885, to the 1st of November, 1885, $58,053,702.27, yet there has been no reduction of the interest-bearing debt (and that is the only debt that is a burden on taxpayers) since November, 1881, certainly not since March, 1885. The monthly reports show $191,000,000 of 3 per cent. bonds then outstanding and precisely the same amount in November.

How is the surplus silver coin to get out of the Treasury if the Secretary refuses to pay it out for interest and refuses to call in the bonds which are now payable?

There is no more effectual or pernicious method of contracting the currency than by collecting by taxation a large sum in excess of the needs of an economically administered Government and locking it up in the Treasury. Every dollar needlessly taken from the taxpayer wrongfully deprives him of that much capital which he needs and labored to obtain, and when it is locked up the circulating medium which all the people want is wrongfully withheld from them. The thief who steals and squanders an unneeded surplus locked up in the Treasury vaults would inflict less injury on the country and its business if the money he stole was put in circulation than a Secretary who holds and hides in vaults currency which the people want, and refuses to use it to pay the debts, especially interest-bearing debts, which the men who own this money owe. It is easy to raise a clamor about a surplus, but it will be more difficult to explain to the people why such vast amounts of money they have been so heavily taxed to furnish is lying idle in the overloaded Treasury vaults and they deprived of its use, while interest is running against them in bonds that cannot be and ought to be paid. The idle money, when paid out for interest on bonds, would at once be released and restored to circulation.

Speaking of circulation, we are constantly told that there is now a great abundance of it outstanding; indeed, we are officially advised that the legal-tender notes and the silver certificates should all be withdrawn—I presume, because of the superabundance of currency. Let us look for a few minutes at the effect of these recommendations, if carried out, and see how far these certificates are now used as currency.

It was the avowed purpose of the advocates of both gold and silver certificates, and I was one of them, to furnish a safe, convenient paper currency; every dollar of it could be used just as the coin paid for it could be, and which would be secured by the deposit of an equal amount of coin in the Treasury. No better security could be asked or given. It was not thought desirable to have the coin of either metal exposed to the risk of loss or reduction of value by the abrasion which necessarily accompanies its active use. The transportation of both was known to be dangerous and expensive; all the expense and risk, as well as the deterioration of the coin, were avoided by the use of the paper substitute, while the United States was sure to be amply compensated for all the expenses incurred for vaults, custodians, and everything else.

WORN-OUT PAPER MONEY.

We—I mean by we all the people—received a coin dollar for every paper dollar issued. We only pay out the coin on the paper brought back to our agents. All of it that is lost or destroyed by fire, flood, or the thousand accidents that all transitory things are subject to is our gain. We had experience in operations of that sort and knew that they were profitable. Forty-two millions of dollars of fractional currency was issued. We afterward called it in for cancellation, and we now know that $15,000,000, or one-third of it, has been lost or destroyed. We made $15,000,000 out of that issue, as we received a full consideration for the whole amount issued. We only redeem such national bank notes as are returned, and the amount now known to be lost is so great that the Comptroller is devising all sorts of ingenious plans in his report to get it away from us for the benefit of the banks. None of them lost any of it. The people who borrowed it or worked for it, after the banks got value received for it, were the sufferers; yet the Comptroller wants it all for the banks. I expect they will get it. They have as much right to it as to have their interest and principal paid in gold alone, or to have our silver stricken down. I have no idea that $300,000,000 of the $346,000,000 of greenbacks charged in the report as outstanding could be returned if they were called in to-day. All lost is clear profit to the Government. It is a sufficient answer to all the clamor about expenses and vaults that the coin is preserved from loss and from abrasion, and that our gain from the loss of the outstanding paper, if it is kept in denominations in which it will circulate, as it ought to be, will amply compensate the United States for all expense of its safe-keeping.

The object we all had in view by keeping in actual use paper substitutes for gold coin to the extent of the coin deposited has been grossly perverted. The coin is locked up and four-fifths of the certificates issued are of such high denominations that they are of no sort of use as currency.

The Treasurer's report, page 23, shows that on the 30th of June, 1885, the outstanding gold certificates amounted to $137,760,830, of which all but $34,360,000 were in denominations of $500 and upward, more than $55,000,000 of them being for $10,000 each. It is obvious that the people get no benefit in the form of currency when bills or certificates exceed $100.

The Director of the Mint, on page 29 of his report, speaking of these paper substitutes, says: "As these certificates represent coin in the Treasury, which coin can only be used in their redemption, they really form a part of the active coin circulation of the country." The Director, perhaps, did not know that $55,000,000 of them were for $10,000 each, as it would be absurd to speak of such notes or certificates as forming part of our active circulation.

The Treasurer's report (page 24) shows that June 30, 1885, silver certificates amounting to $133,901,616 were outstanding, and that $13,658,091 were in $10 and $20 bills, in about equal proportions. None were higher than $1,000; so that the only real currency furnished to the people in the shape of certificates is that based on the deposit of silver coin. Yet the dollars so deposited are held up as useless incumbrances, performing no function of value, and all our officials join in the crusade against them and the certificates that represent them, and urge Congress to withdraw the one and stop the coinage of the other. I do not propose to do either unless better reasons are given why it should be done than any I have yet seen or heard. I would, however, amend the law so that no certificate should be of a higher denomination than $500, and not more than 25 per cent. of the amount outstanding at any time should be of denominations higher than $50. The legal tender notes, too, are ridiculed. It seems as though every form of currency which costs nothing and enriches nobody is condemned.

GOVERNMENT CREDIT.

It is assumed that the Government has no right to use its own credit or to furnish any part of the currency the people need. Legal-tender notes are denounced as a forced loan, as rag-babies, shin-plasters, indeed every opprobrious epithet has been hurled against them by those who insist that they must be vested with the sole right to issue currency to loan at a profit to themselves, and to dictate through their organization how much or how little it is necessary to allow them to keep in circulation. But the people and their representatives have so far sustained the greenbacks, and while they have always been repudiated to the extent that they could not be legally paid at the custom-houses for duties on imports, and that is the law now, over $47,000,000 of them was received for duties last year in New York alone by executive orders, in plain violation of law. The majority of the Senate refused last year to make them receivable for duties, and yet we permit $47,000,000 of them to be so received. I have a bill now before the Finance Committee making it legal to receive them for customs dues, as I believe they ought to be; yet I insist that no executive officer ought to be allowed to do anything in violation of law, or to be placed in a position in which he feels authorized or compelled to disregard it.

Congress, by the act of May 31, 1878 (see Statutes at Large, vol. 20, page 87), made an effort to retain what was then left of the legal-tender notes and to preserve them in such shape that they would be currency in the hands of the people. We provided, in substance, that whenever legal-tender notes are received at the Treasury from any source they shall not be retired, but shall be reissued and paid out again and kept in circulation, and that new notes of the same denomination of those returned, because too much mutilated for use, shall be issued in their stead. It is obvious that Congress did not intend to allow any increase of the denomination of the legal-tender notes above what existed when the act was passed; yet the table on page 20 of the Treasurer's report shows that bills of the denomination of $500 have increased in the last year nearly $10,000,000, while those of smaller denominations have been proportionally decreased.

There can be but one purpose in this attack all along the line on everything except gold and national bank notes, and that is to transfer to the holders of our bonds absolute power over the currency, which means over the business of the country.

NOT WARRING ON BANKS AND BONDS.

I desire to state with great distinctness that I am not making war on bondholders or national banks or bankers. I voted to renew their charters, to repeal all taxes on their capital and deposits, and will cheerfully vote for any and all measures necessary to add to their usefulness, either by increasing their circulation to par with the bonds deposited or, if it can be done with justice to their corporators in business, reduce or repeal the tax on circulation. But I would require them to take the same coins, both gold and silver, that all other creditors of the Government receive. I shall always oppose the grant by recognition of any superior rights or privileges in them or in the obligations they hold over those of other citizens. I would divorce them from politics and deprive them of power to control or influence legislation by contracting or expanding or by threatening to interfere with our currency, as was done when they obtained President Hayes' veto on a memorable occasion. I would require them to obey the law and receive the coin which we take at the custom-house and set apart as a special fund for their security and payment. When we say by law, as we have done, "that no national banking association shall be a member of any clearing-house in which such (silver) certificates shall not be receivable in the settlement of clearing-house balances," I would forfeit the charter of any bank that dared to disobey the law, as I would the man and imprison any officer of any of them who would certify checks when the funds were not actually in the bank at the time.

In short no set of men should be allowed to exercise privileges prohibited by law, nor have rights given them in regard to the character and quality of the coin in which their debts shall be paid which are denied to all other equally meritorious creditors; and no set of men should ever have power to regulate or control, so their private interests may be affected, the currency or the business of the people. If that power is yielded or conceded to them, with legal-tender notes and silver certificates withdrawn and gold paid to them, and to them alone, for their interest and bonds, Congress would be powerless to resist any demands our bondholders and bankers might make. I know their power and appreciate the unfriendliness with which they can have their claims presented. Even the President in his message has been induced to say that up to the present time only about 50,000,000 of the silver dollars we have coined have found their way into circulation. He modified that statement by showing that a large amount of silver certificates was outstanding.

But the press of this country have taken up the first statement, leaving out all the qualifications, and parade it before the country as conclusive evidence that too much silver has already been coined, and that all of it is an encumbrance except about $50,000,000. They utterly ignore the fact, which the official reports show, that at the close of the last fiscal year, June 30, 1885, out of a total coinage of $203,000,000, $140,000,000 in round numbers was in active circulation in the form of silver certificates, in addition to the coin in the hands of the people, of which certificates $11,850,000 was paid to the Government for customs dues during the last fiscal year at the port of New York alone—more than was paid in gold and coin certificates combined. Why is not the coin represented by these certificates as much in active circulation as if it was passed from hand to hand as often as the certificates are? I ask, is it fair to complain of the silver held in the Treasury as being expensive and useless under such circumstances, and yet not utter one word of complaint in regard to over $137,000,000 of gold coin locked up at the same time and in the same way, represented by the same sort of certificates, most of them in a far less useful form? If our officials would unlock the Treasury vaults and pay our interest-bearing debt with the money they are complaining of being overwhelmed with they would be doing their duty more satisfactorily than by the course they are now pursuing.

ADMINISTRATIVE EFFORTS.

The President says:

"A special effort has been made by the Secretary of the Treasury to increase the amount of our silver coin in circulation."

Let him make one more effort and pay out the $60,000,000 or $75,000,000 he received for customs dues, and which he has no use for, in payment of interest and in redemption of the bonds now redeemable, and the ordinary expenses of the Government will keep the vaults reasonably clear of all not represented by certificates or bills, which the people have a right by law to demand on making a deposit of coin. No public creditor other than the bondholder has ever complained when payment is made to him in silver or silver certificates. All other creditors are entitled to the same consideration as the holders of our bonds. We, as a taxpaying people, are not interested in keeping our bonds 24 per cent. above par when we must soon buy them with our surplus revenues.

It must not be forgotten that all the gold coin deposited for silver certificates became at once the property of the United States; it was not held in the Treasury for their redemption. An equal amount of silver coin took its place for that purpose at once. Men who owned gold all over the South and West, in Louisville, Indianapolis, Nashville, and other places, as well as those cities named in the report, sent their coin at their own expense to the Assistant Treasurer in New York in order to have silver certificates delivered to them for use as currency at home. Yet during all this time the bullion value of gold in London was at least 15 per cent. more than silver, and the country was being periodically alarmed and Congress advised by our officials that gold was leaving the country, that silver was a degraded standard of value, and that its coinage must be stopped or its amount increased, or ruin would be precipitated upon us because of its depreciation in the London market.

The facts I have stated overthrow all the speculations of the theorists. Our business men gladly exchanged their gold coin for silver certificates, and did not ask better security for the paper than the silver dollar deposited in the Treasury. So far from hoarding gold because of its greater bullion value in a foreign market, they sent it to a distant depository to get the paper we are advised is dishonest money because it is depreciated fifteen to twenty per cent. below gold in London. I have thus imperfectly outlined the reasons why I can not sustain at this time a policy which seeks to withdraw either our legal-tender notes, the silver certificate, or stop the silver coinage; and I see no propriety in increasing the weight of our silver coin beyond the standard value fixed by law July, 1870, under and by which all our outstanding bonded indebtedness is negotiated. I am convinced that we can no longer look with safety to the national banks to furnish the country with a stable currency.

I insist that every creditor of the Government is by law entitled to be paid in the same coin, and that our Treasury officials should be required to pay silver as well as gold when received for customs dues to our bondholders, as they do to all others who have legal demands upon the Treasury; that done there will be no need, at least for years to come, to strike down silver in any form. The country is now rallying from a long period of depression. All railroad securities recently fell 30 per cent. on the average in eighteen months. Wheat, cotton, cattle, hogs, all farm products, are even now so depressed that they give no profit to the producer, even after he pays the lowest wages for which he can obtain labor in their production. Foreign nations are closing their ports against our leading exports and throwing all obstacles possible in the way of our commerce.

Notes and News.

There is a good deal of chuckling in the ultra republican shops over the vote by which the rules of the house of representatives were amended. It is plainly intimated that the republican vote, by the help of which the amendment was carried, was given in the belief and hope that the democracy under the new rules will be unduly lavish in expenditure. And the inference is frankly drawn that the condemnation which will then be visited upon the democracy will insure to republican benefit. This may be a true statement of the motive which prompted republicans who voted for the amendment of the rules. If so, it is not creditable to them. If the democrats were to become extravagant under the new rules, the people would not be likely to find them any more responsible than the party which boasts of endeavoring to make them extravagant. But it is not at all likely the democracy will tolerate extravagance under the new rules any more than it did under the old. The republican schemers will take nothing by their scheme but the opprobrium which is rightly visited upon trickery and dishonesty.—Free Press.

In conversation with a Herald reporter, President Cleveland said recently: "I believe the most important benefit that I can confer on the country by my presidency is to insist upon the entire independence of the executive and legislative branches of the government and compel the members of the legislative branch to see that they have responsibilities of their own, grave and well defined, which their official oaths bind them to sacredly perform." The correspondent gives as his interpretation of the president's meaning that he will confine himself to making recommendations to congress as required by the constitution and signing or vetoing bills, and that he will require members of congress to confine themselves to the constitutional duties and not allow them to interfere with executive duties by soliciting or suggesting appointments to office; or, in other words to mind their own business.

The third assistant postmaster general has given the following hint which if acted upon would keep thousands of letters out of the dead letter office, and prevent boundless vexation: "Write or print your name and address, and the contents, if a package, upon the upper left hand corner of all mail matter. This will insure its immediate return to you for correction, if improperly addressed or insufficiently paid; and if not called for at its destination it can be returned to you without going to the dead letter office."

The first official act of the president was his signature to the commission of General U. S. Grant as genenal of the retired list of the army. The first law of congress which he was called upon to approve was the bill to pension the widow of General U. S. Grant.

It is said Miss Cleveland is as pronounced in her views on the temperance question as Mrs. Hayes.

There has been a rise in the price of iron of $4 per ton.

Presidential Succession.

The presidential succession bill reduces the importance both of the presidency of the senate pro. tem. and of the speakership of the house. Both are omitted from the line of succession. The secretary of state is made third in succession, coming after the vice president, who is elected by the people. It will no longer be proper to speak of the president of the senate pro. tem., as the vice president. The effect of the bill is to preserve to the people the administration of affairs in the hands of the party which succeeds at the election. The dangers of assassination from party motives and for party purposes are entirely removed. In case of President Cleveland's death or disability, Mr. Bayard will succeed until a new election for the remainder of the term can be held. The republican senate, in conceding to the passage of this bill, has acted in a very worthy spirit, and removed all occasion for uneasiness.

Michigan in the House.

Speaker Carlisle in making up the house committees, selected Mr. Eldridge chairmain of the committee on pensions; Maybury, ways and means, and education; Carleton, rivers and harbors; Winans, agriculture; Cutcheon, military affairs; Burrows, post-offices and post roads; Tarsney, commerce and labor; Fisher, patents; Comstock, war claims and shipbuilding. All the Michigan men have bills for improvements in their special ties.

Samuel Bowles.

From George S. Merriam's "Study in Independent Journalism" in the October Century, we quote the following:

"The faculty in which Mr. Bowles first showed eminence was skill in gathering news. Said Mr. Bryan, who was added to the paper's force in 1852: 'He and I would go into a little restaurant on Sanford street, and one and another would drop in and exchange a few words, and while we were eating our lunch he would pick up half a column of news.' Said a friend in a neighboring town: 'I would meet him on the street, we would chat a few minutes about the events of the day, and next morning I would find in the paper everything I had told him.' In the political conventions which he attended and reported, he was in his native element. He button-holed everybody, and offended nobody; found out the designs of every clique, the doings of every secret caucus, got at the plans of the leaders, the temper of the crowd, sensed the whole situation; and the next morning's Republican gave a better idea of the convention to those who had staid at home than many of its participants had gained. These reporting expeditions were full of education to him. His mode of growth was by absorption. Other people were to him sponges out of which he deftly squeezed whatever knowledge they could yield.

* * * * *

"It was commonly said that to seek redress from the Republican did more harm than good. This trait was partly due to deliberate unwillingness to weaken the paper's authority by admission of error. But it was probably more due to a personal idiosyncrasy. In many ways a most generous man, Mr. Bowles always hated to admit that he had been in the wrong. Sometimes he did it—not often—in private life; but in his paper never, when he could help it. 'We sometimes discussed this,' said Dr. Holland, 'and he once said: "I sympathize with the Boston editor, to whom a man came with the complaint, 'Your paper says that I hanged myself, and I want you to take it back.' 'No,' said the editor, 'we're not in the habit of doing that, but we will say that the rope broke and you escaped!' "'

"But it must be said that this fault lies at the door of a good many papers besides the Republican. It is a characteristic sin of journalism—one of the vices of irresponsible power."

An enterprising creole of New Orleans is said to have had three hundred articles rejected before one was published.

D. 1881, by Eliza Peteqtom, of Charlevoix county, Michigan, of the first part, to William B. Sargent, of Rock Island, Illinois, of the second part, recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for said county of Charlevoix, on the twelfth day of September, A. D. 1881, in liber "4" of Mortgages, on page 336, which mortgage was on the second day of March, A. D 1885, assigned by said William B. Sargent to Margaret K. Blackmer, of Berrien county, Michigan, said assignment being recorded on the fourth day of March, A. D. 1885, in liber "10" of mortgages, in the registry of said county, on page 430; by virtue of which default the power of sale in said mortgage contained has become operative; and whereas, at the date of this notice, there is claimed to be due upon said mortgage for principal and interest the sum of forty-five and 58-100 dollars [$45.58]; and whereas, no suit or proceedings have been instituted at law to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained and of the statutes of the state of Michigan in such cases made and provided, the undersigned will sell at public auction or vendue, to the highest bidder, on Tuesday, the Nineteenth day of January, A. D. 1886, at 12 o'clock noon of that day, at the front door of Loveday's Hall, in the village of East Jordan, in said county of Charlevoix (that being the place for holding the Circuit Court for said county), the premises described in said mortgage, or sufficient thereof to satisfy said indebtedness, interest thereon, and costs, solicitor's or attorney's fee, and expenses of sale; said premises being described in said mortgage as follows; The east half of the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section twenty-five (25), in township thirty-four [34] north of range seven [7] west, containing twenty acres more or less, according to the United States survey thereof, together with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining.

Dated Charlevoix, Mich. October 14th, 1885.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the condition of a certain mortgage, made by Mary Blackbird to John A. Bacot, dated October 3d, A. D. 1884, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, on the 3d day of October, A. D. 1884, in liber 8 of mortgages, on page 522, which said mortgage was on the 22d day of December, 1884, assigned by said John A. Bacot to Frederick W. Mayne, said assignment being on record in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 10 of mortgages on page 610, and on the 14th day of December 1885, was assigned by said Frederick W. Mayne to Hugh Miller, said assignment being recorded in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 13 of mortgages, on page 146, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of one hundred and ninety six and 15-100 dollars, as principal and interest, and no suit or proceedings at law having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof. Now, therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and the statute in such case made and provided, notice is hereby given that on Saturday the 13th day of March, A. D. 1886, at one o'clock in the afternoon, I shall sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the town hall in the village of East Jordan, (that being the place where the Circuit Court for Charlevoix County is holden,) the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with ten per cent interest, and all legal costs, together with an attorney's fee of fifteen dollars, covenanted for therein, the premises being described in said mortgage as all that parcel of land, situate in the township of Hayes, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, and known and described as follows: The south west quarter (¼) of the south west quarter (¼) of section thirty-six (36) township thirty four (34) north of range seven (7) west, containing forty acres according to the United States survey.

Dated Charlevoix, Mich., Dec. 15, 1885.

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage, made and dated the tenth day of September, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four, executed by Henning Frizzell to the Pine Lake Iron Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, and doing business in the County of Charlevoix, in the State of Michigan, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of the said County of Charlevoix, in Liber 11 of mortgages at page 11, on the 18th day of April, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-five, at one o'clock in the afternoon, and the same is now owned by the said Pine Lake Iron Company. And whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of Fifty-Five Dollars and Twenty-two cents, principal and interest, which sum is a part of the purchase price of the premises herein described, and a further sum of fifteen dollars provided by law as an attorney's fee in the foreclosure of said mortgage, which is the whole amount claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage, and no suit or proceedings at law or in chancery having been instituted to recover the debt now remaining secured by the said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in the said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises herein described at public auction to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in the township of South Arm, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, which is the place of holding the circuit court for said county, on Friday, the 2d day of April next, at twelve o'clock meridian, which premises are described in the said mortgage as follows, to wit: Lots twenty (20) and twenty-one (21) in block number twelve (12) in the Pine Lake Iron Co.'s plat of Ironton, town of Eveline, county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan.

Dated December 30th, A. D. 1885.

Last Friday, being the birthday of Miss Gladys Jefferies, in the evening the young people (and some who were older) called upon her in squads of a dozen or more, bringing baskets of good things for the occasion. A card from L. D. Bartholomew states that his party, consisting of his family, E. Carpenter and family, and M. J. Stockman and wife, arrived at New Orleans on Jan. 2d, visited various places of interest on the 3d, the exposition on the 4th, and started for Jacksonville, Fla. on the 5th. They found the weather quite warm, and experienced a severe thunder storm the first night in New Orleans.

Sunday afternoon was cold and stormy yet there were seventeen readers of papers at the public reading room. During the week there were eighty-two patrons. This is an encouraging beginning; yet how many more might avail themselves of the benefits of this institution. Mr. Eaton, observing the need of a clock, has taken his office clock over and hung it up for the benefit of the public. Now, if the good people of the village would look again and if possible find another picture or two which they can hang upon the walls for a time, the equipment will be complete.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat of Jan. 3d, contained the following items of interest concerning our people now on a visit in the south: "Mr. L. D. Bartholomew, of Charlevoix, Mich., is on a visit to the Exposition. Mr. Bartholomew is accompanied by his wife and three children, and is quartered at the European Hotel, 76 St. Charles street. This gentleman is one of Michigan's most prominent merchants, and is a citizen that that progressive state may well be proud of." * * * "Arrivals at European Hotel: L. D. Bartholomew and wife, Miss Blanche Bartholomew, Miss Winnifred Bartholomew, Master Bartholomew, Egbert Carpenter and wife Miss Lillian Carpenter, M. J. Stockman and wife, Charlevoix, Mich."

The Historical Society.

Since the beginning of long evenings the interest in the historical society has increased, although never in its history has there been any very perceptable wane of interest. We are indebted to Al. Washburn for the following program for last Friday evening:

Violin Solo—F. A. Cochran.

Select reading—Mrs. W. A. Brown, "Man was Made to Mourn."

Vocal duet—Al. T. Washburn and Miss Bertha Mills, "Go where the Mists are Sleeping."

Select reading—Miss Alice Cochran, "That Choir."

Intermission.

Vocal duet—Al. Washburn and Miss Aggie Miller, "Oh yah, don't dat vas fine."

Paper—H. Lee Iddings, "Sir Walter Scott."

Vocal duet—Mrs. E. M. Clark and Mrs. A. F. Draper.

Select reading—Dr. J. A. Carlstein, "Peru."

Especial praise was elicited by the paper. Scotland's great novelist and poet holds a place in the minds of the English speaking people that is held by few thoroughbred Englishmen. Those with a metaphysical turn of mind incline to Tennyson; but those who delight in pen pictures of character and natural scenery can find what they delight in, nowhere better than in Scott.

The next meeting is at Mrs. Nelson Ainslie's The paper is upon "Alfred the Great," by Miss Luna Washburn.

"What Tommy Did."

We are in receipt of a little volume from John B. Alden, publisher, New York, entitled "What Tommy Did." Our comment is that it is exceedingly funny. John Habberton, author of "Helen's Babies," says: "'What Tommy Did' would be worthy of the serious consideration of parents if it were possible for anyone to be other than wildly mirthful over the saintlinesses and dreadfulnesses of the the little hero. Tommy is an ideal boy—one of the kind which are by turns unendurable and angelic, which changes parents from young to old, and from old to young again many times a day. We pity parents who fail to read this book; there is no time in the day, nor any day in the week, in which its pages will not dispel care." The Chicago Tribune pronounces it a book that "will delight every boy and girl, and every mother, too, who will find in it a book that can be read over and over again to suit the insatiable appetites of youthful listeners, and yet never sicken the the reader with any weakness or nonsense in its composition."—It has just been published in dainty, delightful shape, fine cloth, richly ornamented binding, by Alden, the "Revolution" publisher, at half its former price, 50 cents. Alden's 148-page illustrated catalogue (price 4 cents—condensed catalogue free), of his immense list of standard books, is a wonder as well as joy to book lovers. John B. Alden, Publisher, New York.

Episcopal Visitation.

On Sunday, January 24th, Bishop Gillespie expects to be in Charlevoix. He wishes to meet all persons interested, and any candidates for baptism or confirmation. Divine service morning and evening. Place announced next week.

Florence, the actor, tells this little story: "I can remember," he said, "years and years ago, going to a dinner down in Fourteenth street, given to Morse, the telegraph inventor. He was an elegant old gentleman, but when he got on his legs to talk he was awful long-winded. I had a friend with me. We listened to Morse's speech, while he predicted great things for electricity. I remember he predicted, too, that some day men would be able to talk over the wires for distances of fifty miles, and that every ship that left harbor for an ocean voyage would be connected with the land by wires. When he got that far my friend said, 'What rot!' and we went out. I have often remembered how foolish his talk sounded to me. Yet it has been all realized, except as regards ships at sea. I believe even that will come about some day."

Mark Pattison, the distinguished Oxford professor and literary man, lately deceased, gave this account of his meeting an American young lady at a foreign table d'hote: "She was only 19, but she knew everything. She told me the exact amount of affection which the Princess C—— has for her future husband, and she gave me a full account of the divorce laws in all the states of America. She appealed to me sometimes; of course I agreed. At last she asked whether I did not think she was the most ignorant girl I ever met! But I took care to say so in such a way that she couldn't mind it."

"The Feeding of Infants" is the title of an article by Dr. J. Lewis Smith in Babyhood for January, in which the writer graphically describes certain evil effects of artificial feeding, and gives important directions for weaning and nursing. Among other articles are: "The Baby's Mother," by Helen P. Grafton; "Our Baby and How we Undid Her" (the first of a humorous series), by Martha O. Inglis; "Cat-Naps and their Causes," "Baby's Curls," etc., etc. [$1.50 a year; 15 cents a number. 18 Spruce Street, New York.]

The famous Victoria Bridge at Montreal is to be supplemented by another bridge crossing the St. Lawrence from Lachine to Caughnawauga, four miles above the city. It will be of iron trusses, the eight spans measuring 3,000 feet, and will cost, with its approaches, a million and a quarter of dollars. The owners are the Canadian Pacific Railway, who expect to have it finished by November of 1886. No such bridge as the Victoria (a tubular one) will ever be built again.

An Eastern paper thinks that if all the wise suggestions made about the public schools are adopted, their course of study, by the year 1900, will be about like this: One hour, sewing; one hour, washing and ironing; one hour, cooking; one hour, table setting and other branches of housekeeping; one hour, music; one hour, dancing; one hour, painting; one hour, modeling and sculpture; one hour, reading; one hour, writing; one hour, arithmetic; one hour, book-keeping; one hour, industrial education; one hour, civil government; one hour each on geography, algebra, trigonometry, Latin, Greek, French, German, botany, astronomy, tariff and free trade, farming and the weather.

Continued experiments are reported as being made by the French Government with new and improved seige guns, one of the most recent among these being of prodigious power—the most effective, probably, of its class yet constructed. It is described as made of steel and nearly thirty feet in length. The tube is strengthened with ten coils of plated wire one millimeter, or 1.69 inch, in diameter. The composition is said to be such that the cannon, after a few discharges, becomes elongated to the degree of three millimeters. The weight of this gun is fifty tons and it projects a shell weighing nearly 300 pounds, capable of penetrating armor plates nearly six inches thick at a range of seven and one-half miles.

John Gyumber, the Hungarian, who established a world-wide reputation several years ago by sleeping continuously for 163 days, has at last found a rival in the person of a woman named Shiffert, residing in Allentown, Pa. For the last eighteen months Miss Shiffert has made it an unvarying practice to go to bed at 9 o'clock in the evening and sleep soundly all night and until 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Although wicked neighbors have attempted to arouse the woman during her period of slumber, their efforts have been useless. The woman is in excellent health and spirits.

IN THE OLD GRANGE GARDEN.

BY C. R. CRESPI.

We were in the old Grange garden
Where fierce dragons stood for warden
'Neath the rose trees red with blooms;
And the golden sunshine brightly
Drifted through the branches lightly,
Making gay the odorous glooms.

On the lawn a sun-dial olden
Caught the slanting sunbeams golden,
Which, with sweet and softening grace,
With warm touches brightly tender,
Threw their strange alchemic splendor
O'er the moss-greened, time-worn face.

You were humming a love-ditty,
And you whispered, "O, the pity
That the roses fade so soon!"
O the glowing summer weather!
O the days when we together
Felt the world and life in tune!

Pushing back the branches trailing
All across the dial, and veiling
Its quaint legend from our sight—
Read you in a voice of scorning,
"If unclouded be love's morning,
Love will die at full of night."

Saying softly, roses casting,
O'er the words "Our love is lasting,
Mocking words you speak, O, Dial,
Know you not, love-born in pleasure,
Never ills its fullest measure,
Until darkness comes, and trial?"

Sweet those days of summer brightness,
When our hearts eclipsed the lightness
Of the summer-hearted birds!
Dear, I often wonder whether
You recall those days together,
With those days, O love, your words!

When the glowing summer glory
Faded from our love's sweet story,
When around us fell the night,
You passed on, dear, careless-hearted.
I?—'tis over! we are parted,
Yet I love in love's despite.

When the future's veil was lifted,
Each had from the other drifted,
Down life's river, far apart;
Yet your face, with sweet persistence,
Shines across the dreary distance,
And lies folded in my heart!

THE RED-HAIRED ENGINEER.

By the Author of "So Blue: The Story of a Girton Girl," Etc., Etc.

CHAPTER I.

"Estelle, are you ready?"

A little shriek of horror is the answer, and in another moment Estelle Verries comes flying down-stairs, boots unbuttoned, neckerchief unfastened, hat and gloves in hand.

"My angelic Mary, if you scold me I shall die! Blame the chair you have put into my room. It is positively too seductive—I could not keep awake in it. Suddenly I hear a great strike of the clock; I jump up and find I have only a little tiny five minutes to dress in! Ah! dear, patient Mary, forgive the foreigner and her abominable ways."

"Never mind about apologizing, child, but button your boots and put your hat on."

"My boots!" Estelle looks down at them in despair, and then dropping on her knees in the hall, tries to do them up with her weak little fingers.

Mary Cotterell pulls her up, orders her peremptorily into a hall-chair, and drawing a button-hook from her own pocket proceeds to do up the high foreign boots.

"There! Now turn slowly round, and let me see that you are all right."

Estelle obeys submissively. "I hadn't time to do my hair again," she explains.

"So I see; but as it is always rough, that makes very little difference. I suppose you must do now. Put on your gloves; and where's your parasol?"

"Up-stairs. I don't want it."

"Yes, you do. I'll get it for you."

Estelle doesn't object at all; but when Mary comes down again she flings both arms around her, and calls her her best-beloved cabbage.

"Tell me, Mary," she asked, as they walked down the garden on their way to Mrs. Charlesworth's tennis party, "will that dreadful red-haired engineer be there—you know; the man who is so stupid and gauche?"

"Sure to be," said Mary dryly. "He's devoted to Eva Charlesworth."

"Poor girl! I pity her," observed Mdlle. Verries, emphatically.

"Oh, you needn't do that; she doesn't care a fig for him. And, besides, the dreadful red-haired engineer, as you politely call Arthur Rivers, is a very good fellow."

"I call him a beast!" said Estelle, with exceeding frankness.

"Now, Estelle," said Mary sharply, "I won't have you pick up bad words from my young brothers, and I won't have you speak rudely of my friends."

"Do you like him?" inquired her companion, stepping forward, so as to get a good look at her face.

"Certainly," replied Mary, not the least disconcerted by the mischievous scrutiny of the dark eyes.

Estelle let go of her arm, and held up both hands in amazement.

"You are funny, you English! You positively like people because they are good!"

"Certainly," replied Mary again.

"But men never are good" answered Estelle, changing her ground.

"Oh, indeed!"

"My mother says so, and she knows."

"Your poor mother was unfortunate in her experience of them; but surely, because one Englishman was a wicked husband to her, she would not condemn all the rest?"

"Oh, that is only part of what she knows," said Estelle, confidently. "She has seen a great deal of life, and she has always taught me never to trust any man at all, however good he may seem."

Mary was silent, not liking to say what she thought of such training.

Estelle's French mother had been forced; when hardly more than a child, into a marriage with a wealthy Englishman, who had treated her with neglect and brutality, and finally deserted her. Released from galling bonds by the intervention of the law, she had immediately quitted his hated country, and retired with little Estelle to a quiet suburb of Paris, where the child was brought up to call herself French, and to hate everything that was English. Yet, when an invitation came from Mrs. Cotterell for Estelle to spend a whole summer with her at Coppenham, the girl's reluctance to go was overriden by her mother, who never forgot that the Cotterells, husband and wife, had been the only people in England whose sympathy she had been able to accept or rely on. So Estelle nerved herself for a visit to her native country, and, once at Coppenham, found to her surprise that she was going to enjoy herself. She found English country life charmingly novel; she particularly liked the admiration accorded to her beauty and vivacity; and she took at once to Mary Cotterell, who had much of her mother's intelligent tact and thoughtfulness.

The two girls had walked on another hundred yards or so without speaking, when Mary was roused from her reflections by feeling her arm suddenly pinched. Looking up, she discovered rapidly approaching them the young man whose "goodness" had been so summarily disposed of by Estelle a few minutes previously.

He certainly was not a beauty.

Slightly above the average height, and disproportionately large, he not only had no good looks to boast of, but carried himself particularly badly, with a kind of undignified shamble, his head forward and his hands forever in his pockets. Estelle managed to convey her opinion of him to Mary by a rapid little grimace and shrug of the shoulders before he came up to them.

"How do you do, Mary? How do you do, Mademoiselle—er—I really forget your name."

He put out his hand in an unthinking way, much to her displeasure. He ought only to have bowed; and how dared he to forget her name! Her reluctant little fingers just touched his.

Rivers saw now, and his lips twitched with amusement.

"Beg your pardon, I'm sure. I'll only bow another time," he said, bluntly. "Hate shaking hands myself; it's a barbarous custom. I suppose you are bound, like me, for Charlesworth's, Mary?"

On her assenting, he turned and walked beside her, without asking whether his company was desired or not.

"If you were polite, Arthur, you would offer to carry my racquet and shoes," observed Mary, laughing. "You can't imagine what a bad opinion Mademoiselle Verries is forming of you."

He took the things from her, rapidly glancing up and down Estelle, who looked bewitchingly pretty under her rose-lined parasol.

"Quite right, too," he returned, with a smile. "You see, Mademoiselle, I've no sisters to lick me into shape."

Estelle was not sufficiently well up in English slang to understand quite what he meant by this; but gathering from the pleasantness of his smile that it could not have been anything rude, she condescended to answer.

"I've no sisters, or brothers, either," she said naively.

"Ah! I thought so."

"Why?"

Rivers had guessed it from her manner, which was very much that of a spoilt only child, but he managed to escape blunderingly from telling her so. By this time they had reached Mrs. Charlesworth's lawn, and with a short, "Oh, can't say; intuition, I suppose," he hastily crossed over to where the fair, slender Eva Charlesworth was standing, racquet in hand, talking to the favorite and scapegrace of the place, Hal Armitage. Neither of these two particularly wanted him, and after a little while Eva gracefully sent him back to Estelle, who did not play tennis, and who had been left stranded on a garden chair, while the rest of the guests were occupied with the game. She felt so neglected and uncomfortable that it was quite a relief when Rivers came and sat down beside her.

"We ought to fraternize," he said, drawing his chair rather forward, so as to get a good view of her face, "since we neither of us play this all-engrossing game. Are you over in England for long?"

Estelle allowed herself to be gradually drawn into conversation, and was getting quite interested in comparing notes with him about the Riviera, when an amused, approving little nod and smile from Mary brought the color to her face. She was a complete child in many respects, and her vexation at finding herself blushing was so great that the tears started to her eyes. Rivers wondered what on earth had happened, but if his manners were abrupt, his good feeling was rarely at fault, and he showed tact now.

"I brought home no end of mementos," he continued quietly, "and among them some flowers from Mentone—roots, I mean—which I planted in the garden here for Miss Charlesworth. Would you like to see them?"

Estelle sprang up, ready to go anywhere rather than continue to sit with her face in full view of all the players. She was sure every one must be looking at her. But in a very few minutes, thanks to Rivers' tactics, she was herself again, and inwardly determined to pay Mary out.

This little episode had cured her of her dislike to the young engineer, and before the evening was over her feelings had undergone a further revulsion. She and Mary were asked, with some of the other guests, to stay to the eight o'clock supper at Mrs. Charlesworth's, and later on there was a general vote for music. Estelle was known to have a beautiful voice, but she was exceedingly nervous, and could not be prevailed upon to sing till Eva suggested that she should be supported by a violin obligato.

"That would give me courage," Estelle admitted, "and I know this song for voice and violin; but who is the virtuoso?"

"Oh, my fiddle and I are at home in this drawing-room," said Rivers, coming up quickly, and drawing out the case from under a low settee.

Estelle regarded him doubtfully, making up her mind that she should stop singing at once if his playing did not please her. She need not have been alarmed. He was a thorough musician, and soon she confessed to herself that she had never been accompanied with such instinctive sympathy. Her mellow voice gathered strength and evenness as she felt she could rely on the response of his violin to its faintest inflections, and at the end of the song their eyes met in a glance of mutual understanding and admiration.

Hal Armitage turned to Eva Charlesworth with a significant chuckle.

"Our good Arthur is smitten," he said—"settled and done for."

Eva followed the direction of his eyes, and appraised Estelle critically.

"I hope it may be so," she answered gently.

CHAPTER II.

For a week or two Estelle went about in a frame of mind which is apt to upset the calmest natures, and which, in a girl of her excitable temperament, took the shape of extreme fitful alternations between turbulent gayety and tearful depression. She would have worked herself into a fever had it not been for the sincere good sense and unobtrusive sympathy of quiet Mary Cotterell, who understood her visitor well.

Then one day she darted into the house, dragged Mary to her room, and there burst out crying and laughing wildly. "I am so happy!—so happy!—oh, Mary, can't you guess?"

"What a child you are, Estelle! Of course I can guess, and I'm as glad as ever I can be, dearie. Tell me all about it."

"I was in the garden, and he came up the path—oh, I can't go on now—I'm just overwhelmed—frantic—my heart's beating all over me!"

"That dreadful red-haired man?" said Mary, mischievously.

"How dare you call him dreadful! Yes, yes, I know that's what I said, but then I began to like him just a tiny little, and then it went on crescendo—crescendo—forte—fortissimo!"

She waved her hands as if conducting an orchestra, and ended on tiptoe, tossing them high above her head.

"So, after all, you have found a man you can trust," said Mary, half-jokingly, and not at all prepared for the sudden cloud that settled on Estelle's face. She did not answer at once, and then her tone had changed.

"Mary, you told me he was devoted to Eva Charlesworth."

"Oh, did I?" said Mary, much embarrassed. "Well, I used to think so, but clearly I was mistaken."

"No, you were not. He told me about it himself. He says a long time ago he asked her to marry him, but she wouldn't. She said she liked somebody else, but he mustn't be angry with her; they must always be friends. So he took it very quietly, and stayed near her till I came, and then he found out he only cared for her like a brother, but for me in quite a different way. He says she is very good, but I hate her. I am frightened of her; she is so pretty and sweet, and I'm such a rough, undignified baby!"

"Do you mean that you are going to begin by being jealous?" asked Mary, quite coldly.

"I have told him he must never let me see him near her!" declared Estelle passionately.

Mary's first impulse was to be indignant, but the memory of Estelle's training came into her mind, and she resolved to be very patient and gentle with her. For the moment she dismissed the subject lightly.

As to Arthur Rivers, he walked away, too full of the happiness Estelle had conferred upon him to think seriously of her confession of a jealous disposition. In the consciousness of his single-hearted devotion to her, he thought it impossible but that she must quickly learn to trust him. There were other considerations that seemed to him of more importance, and especially he had on his mind the difficult letter that must be immediately written to Madame Verries. But gradually he became aware that Estelle's distrust was far deeper seated than he had conceived possible, and it is hard to say which of the two suffered most: Estelle, alternating between jealousy and remorse, or Arthur, under the continual necessity of behaving not only to Eva Charlesworth, but to all women, with unnatural familiarity, and of remonstrating with his angry betrothed. Estelle honestly strove to crush the unworthy feeling down, but their deep roots in her temperament and education put forth fresh shoots as soon as the old ones were killed off. At last a crisis arrived.

Eva Charlesworth had long ago promised to marry Hal Armitage as soon as he should be able to keep a wife, but her parents would allow no open engagement, as Hal was a harum-scarum fellow, with a good distaste for hard work, and correspondingly little prospect of making a sufficient income. The poor girl was beginning to suffer from the effects of long waiting, and to feel, though she never doubted her lover's affection, that he was not doing all he might to forward their marriage, when it was mentioned before her one day that Arthur Rivers had a voice in the appointment of manager for some engineering works in New Zealand. Eva resolved to make an appeal to him on behalf of the man she was ready to follow to the end of the world, and an opportunity presented itself shortly at the Cotterells', where she was spending the evening.

"I want to speak to you in private presently, Arthur," she said in a low voice, almost as soon as they had shaken hands.

Arthur bowed with the stiffness required of him by Estelle, but his words were cordial. "Whenever and wherever you like, Eva."

"In the conservatory, then, while Estelle is singing," she replied, indicating by a nervous little laugh her comprehension of possible difficulties.

Soon Estelle was called to the piano. At the end of her first song she missed Rivers, but it was not till she had finished a second that she discovered that Eva had also absented herself. In a moment her indignant jealousy surged up, and, trembling all over with suppressed fear and anger, she went to the head of the steps which led down into the conservatory. Two figures were standing below her, half hidden by a tall palm.

"You know I will do all I can for you, Eva," said the man.

"I know you have always been better to me than I deserve," said the woman, her voice hardly under control. "You will keep my secret now, Arthur?"

"I will keep your secret and serve you," said Rivers, with just that strong gentleness in his voice which Estelle thought he had no right to use to any one but her. The miserable girl clenched her hands and teeth in the effort to restrain herself, conscious of the untitness of making a scene, but self-control was not to be learnt in a moment, and passion asserted itself.

"Arthur," she said, in a low, choking voice, and stepping down toward him, "you are a traitor—you have deceived me—you——" she could hardly speak, and now she put one hand to her head, while the other extended, forbade his approach. So she stood for a moment, then her figure swayed, she missed her footing, and he only caught the words, "Ah, you have killed me!" before she fell at his feet, sobbing, crying, raving, flinging herself about in violent hysterics, like one possessed.

Eva, shocked beyond measure, called Mary Cotterell to her aid, and, with as little fuss as possible, they got Estelle up-stairs, where she continued all night in a state of half-delirious misery and rage. The only thing she was distinct and persistent about was that she would never see or speak to Arthur again. He left the house in despair, pinning his only hope on Mary, who promised to bring the poor girl to reason. "Leave her to me for a few days," she said, and Rivers obeyed, devoting all his energies to getting Hal Armitage the colonial post desired for him by Eva.

Estelle, sorely ashamed of herself by now, heard the news of his success from Mary, who added an explanation of the part played by Arthur.

"Are you satisfied now?" asked the latter, with the sternness she found more salutary than gentleness.

"Why hasn't Arthur been to see me?" asked Estelle, looking down.

"You went too far this time; you forgot that he has his pride.

Estelle sprang up and dropped on her knees beside Mary's chair. "Let me go to him! Not to his house—I don't mean that, but somewhere where I shall meet him. Oh! my dear Mary, do this one thing more for me, I implore you!"

"I don't think you deserve anything of the sort," said Mary sharply, and nothing like a promise could be extorted from her.

It was, therefore, of course, only a singular coincidence that the following day Arthur should be walking through Coppenham Wood just when Mary and Estelle happened to be nutting there—or, rather, Mary was nutting, while Estelle stood by in her Frenchified dress, and never so much as took off her gloves. It was lucky, too, that just when Arthur came upon them Mary should be high up from the ground in a thick bush, and quite out of sight and hearing behind the leafy screen which compassed her about.

Where were Estelle's low spirits now? She had meant to be very humble and penitent, but it was never any use for her to decide beforehand how she would behave, and now, when she saw the "dreadful red-haired man" approaching her, the pleasure of it was so great that everything else went out of her head. There was a stile between them, and hastily gathering a field daisy, she went and stood her side of it, with a face full of childish gayety.

"He loves me a little, much, more, not at all," she began, rapidly counting out the petals, and glancing mischievously at her lover, "a little, much, most of all!" she ended triumphantly, expecting him to clear the stile in a moment, and punish her with kisses for her bad behavior.

But Arthur did nothing of the kind. There was not a vestige of a smile on his worn face, and he looked at her so gravely that a sudden fear and heart-ache took possession of her.

"Arthur, forgive me," she said timidly, and, taking in both hers the hand he had laid on the stile.

"Am I never to be more than the plaything of your jealous caprice, Estelle?" he asked sadly.

"Ah, you are cruel! You are tormenting me, humbling me!" cried the girl, her cheeks flaming. "You think I have not suffered. Arthur, for pity's sake do not look at me like that!"

What could the man do? Did he not love this wayward child, with all her unjustifiable distrust of himself, better than anything else in the world?

First the position of their hands changed, for he put out his other one, and took both her little ones into his strong grasp. Then his tone softened: "Estelle, Estelle, how long will this phase last?"

"I will never, never doubt you again!" she exclaimed passionately.

"Never till next time," said Rivers, with a just perceptible smile. "How am I ever to feel safe?"

She would have protested, but he silenced her. "Words are useless, my child," he said. "We must begin again from the beginning." And therewith he got over the stile, and proceeded to make love so delightfully, that when Mary descended from her perch and insisted on going home, Estelle thought and called her a "horrid bore."

But Mary was too well content with the completeness of their reconciliation to mind being abused. Nor had she any fear for the ultimate stability of their happiness, knowing that there was in Estelle plenty of good material, and that Arthur not only understood her well now, but would conquer in the end by sheer force of love and patience.

Lincoln's First Dollar.

One evening when a few gentlemen, among whom was Mr. Seward, had met in the executive chamber without official business, and were telling of the past, the President said: "Seward, you never heard, did you, how I earned my first dollar?"

"No," said Seward.

"Well," replied he, "I was about 18 years of age, and belonged, as you know, to what they call down South the scrubs. People who do not own land and slaves are nobody there. But we had succeeded in raising, chiefly by my labor, sufficient product, as I thought, to justify me in taking it down the river to sell. After much persuasion I had got the consent of my mother to go, and constructed a flat-boat large enough to take the few barrels of things we had gathered down to New Orleans. A steamer was going down the river. We have, as you know, no wharves on those Western streams, and the custom was, if passengers were at any of the landings, they were to go out in a boat, the steamer stopping and taking them on board. I was contemplating my new boat, and wondering whether I could make it stronger or improve it in any part, when two men came down to the shore in carriages, with trunks, and, looking at the different boats, singled out mine and asked: 'Who owns this?' I answered modestly: 'I do.' 'Will you,' said one of them, 'take us and our trunks out to the steamer?' 'Certainly,' said I. I was very glad to have the chance of earning something, and supposed that each of them would give me a couple of bits. The trunks were put on my boat, the passengers seated themselves on them, and I sculled them out to the steamer. They got on board, and I lifted the trunks and put them on the deck. The steamer was about to put on steam again when I called out: 'You have forgotten to pay me.' Each of them took from his pocket a silver half-dollar and threw it on the bottom of my boat. I could scarcely believe my eyes as I picked up the money. You may think it was a very little thing, and in these days it seems to me like a trifle, but it was a most important incident in my life. I could scarcely credit that I, the poor boy, had earned a dollar in less than a day, and as by honest work I had earned a dollar the world seemed wider and fairer before me. I was a more hopeful and thoughtful boy from that time."—W. D. Kelley, in New York Star.

The Widow's Wit.

A dashing Washington widow, who had received marked attentions from a very popular and gallant physician, found herself suddenly deserted. Her Esculapius, aged 52, was completely enthralled by a beauty of 18, and on Christmas morning the wedding took place with all due pomp. Wormwood for the widow? She swallowed it bravely, wore an undaunted front, and was among the first to offer hurried congratulations to the happy pair. The conversation turned upon Christmas, and the bride said, laughing gaily: "All my wedding presents were sent just before Christmas, so on Christmas morning I had not a single gift." "Ah! my dear, that is cruel; you had me," said the bridegroom, reproachfully. Before the pretty bride could answer, the widow's eyes grew dangerous, and swinging slowly her large fan, she murmured: "Surely, my dear Mrs. ——, you should be more than satisfied, for you know antiquities are all the rage." In the awful silence following, the widow rose, carefully arranged her draperies, and bowed her adieu in stony serenity. Mr. —— and his bride never returned her call.—Boston Herald.

A SAVAGE IN SOCIETY.

A Practical Illustration of the Civil and the Social Code of Paris.

Where was it that I read the following charming story? In Saintine, I think.

Some sort of a savage—an Indian, perhaps—came to Paris to live permanently. He made a study of our ways and customs.

In a drawing-room he had a discussion, and dealt to his opponent such square logic and common sense as floored him completely. So much was the adevrsary enraged that he slapped the savage's face.

"This is further proof," said the latter, "that you are not right, for you have nothing but brute arguments left to you," and, enchanted by this last victory, he looked around him with an air of triumph. In place of viewing smiles, however, he saw only stupefied faces and scornful eyes. He was astounded himself when a gentleman with a grave air, a face graced with whiskers, and wearing the red ribbon of the Legion of Honor, took him by the arm.

"You are a stranger, are you not?" he asked.

"I am."

"I felt sure you were. You are not familiar with our customs. After the outrage you have received a man of the world would send two friends to 'demand reason' from the assailant."

"What reason can I demand from a man that has none?"

"Reason, such as you think of, has nothing to do with it. To demand reason simply means to propose single combat with the sword or pistol."

"Indeed! How strange. I shall conform with the custom immediately."

A meeting was had, pistols being chosen. The Indian, who was accustomed to hunt the tiger in his native jungle, promptly inserted a bullet between the two eyes of his antagonist, and killed him as dead as Moses.

Shortly afterward he was summoned to answer for it. A gentleman in an official robe of red, wearing the cross of the Legion of Honor, demanded the infliction of severe punishment on the ground that it is time to do away with usages worthy of the barbarous ages.

The poor devil turned his head to see this terrible accuser, and uttered an exclamation of surprise.

"Why," he cried, "you're the very man that told me I must fight or be disgraced!"

"Silence!" exclaimed the President of the court. The prisoner was sentenced to six days' imprisonment and a fine of $40. When all was over he called upon the Advocate General and said:

"What sort of a joker are you? It was you who told me that I must fight!"

The amiable magistrate shook him by the hand smilingly:

"Of course; when I spoke to you in that way it was as a man of the world; in court I spoke as a magistrate. Do you grasp the shading?"

"Faith, I don't."

"Well, you will by and by. You are not quite used to our ways as yet."—London World.

Value of Feathers.

Fowls are reared chiefly for their eggs and flesh. Dr. Georgo, of France, draws attention to the value of their feathers. A full-grown hen will yield from two and a half ounces to four and a half ounces of feathers and down. The feathers serve for bonnet decorations, the ornamentation of military shakos, and for dusters. The average-sized feathers are employed for beds and bolsters; the down for pillows. But the latter classes are not held in as much esteem as the same from geese and ducks. When the feathers are plucked they are placed for a short time in a baker's oven, after the bread has been withdrawn, to kill the insect germs. Four sous is the average price for the feathers of a hen, but if from a white cock the price may rise as high as 3 francs. Pea-hen feathers are not employed in industry. Turkey feathers, if good and white, fetch as much as 12 to 20 francs; they are sold as ostrich feathers, and can be dyed all the colors of the rainbow. The feathers of the male are more esteemed than those of the female bird. In the case of peacocks, the white feathers are most prized. The goose, however, is the bird which yields the most lucrative crop of feathers. Quill-farming having been extinguished, the geese are now plucked three times a year, on the breast and abdomen; their annual value is one franc. In the department of Vienne the goose is skinned before it is sent to market, and the skin, garnished with its down, is sold as swan's skin, or down.

Rather Weak Whisky.

A saloon-keeper in a certain Texas city was noted for keeping a very thin article of whisky. There was good reason to suspect that he watered his whisky. One day there came a fearful overflow. The river rose twenty feet, and kept on rising. The terrified saloon keeper said to one of his customers:

"The water is rising every minute. I'm afraid it will ruin the whisky I've got in the cellar."

"O, that's nothing. A few gallons, more or less is not going to hurt the whisky."

"I know that well enough, but suppose the barrels burst when the cellar is full of water."

"If it comes to that you can run a force-pump down the cellar and tap the cellar. The contents will not be much weaker than the stuff you sell now."

Red Star Cough Cure.
No opiates or poison.

The Parent of Insomnia.

The parent of insomnia or wakefulness is in nine cases out of ten a dyspeptic stomach. Good digestion gives sound sleep, indigestion interferes with it. The brain and stomach sympathize. One of the prominent symptoms of a weak state of the gastric organs is a disturbance of the great nerve entrepot, the brain. Invigorate the stomach, and you restore equilibrium to the great center. A most reliable medicine for the purpose is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which is far preferable to mineral sedatives and powerful narcotics, which, though they may for a time exert a soporific influence upon the brain, soon cease to act, and invariably injure the tone of the stomach. The Bitters, on the contrary, restore activity to the operations of that all important organ, and their beneficent influence is reflected in sound sleep and a tranquil state of the nervous system. A wholesome impetus is likewise given to the action of the liver and bowels by its use.

What Your Name Means.

The only Frank I know is short and stout, and a slow thinker, who begins to dribble out his words before his thought is ready, and then has to make a clumsy pause while the poor slow thing is overtaking him. How different from the bright and winning Frank of fiction.

How many Georges does one know who slay their dragons?

Tom is somewhere near Jack, but less attractive, for these yielding, susceptible sinners are generally very likable.

Andrew is not. He is slow and sure, and quite reliable, so far as his own interests jump with yours. I think I should hate to be married to an Andrew; that is, the typical Andrew.

As to John and James, they are either John and James, or else Jack and Jim, and worlds divide these from each other. James and John are fixed stars—Jim and Jack are planets, if not comets, with the exception that not all the science in the world could with certainty predict their movements.

Then there is Alfred, often a quite unbearable prig, while Fred is the very contrary. Frederick is a very different man from Fred, and it seems as impossible for Harry to grow old as it is for Henry to be very young.

Charlie is surrounded by historic grace, which disappears when we examine into facts, but the name is improved by the cloudy halo that surrounds it. But Charles! Oh, "Charles" is dreadful.—London Truth.

DR. T. M. COAN, writing of cereal foods and milling, remarks that "the virtues of wheat are unlocked first by the miller; second, by the baker. In both processes more improvement has taken place within the last twenty years than during the whole previous history of civilized man." The millstone is being replaced by a Hungarian invention which pulverizes the grain by rollers with less heat of friction.—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

"As the Crow Flies."

This interesting bird, as is well known, always takes the shortest route and "gets there" soonest. In this respect he is worthy of imitation by travelers. For example, a man going to Florida, as many do at this season, would naturally take the Danville Route, because that line not only passes through the most interesting country, but makes the run from Chicago to New Orleans and Jacksonville in forty hours. This unprecedented performance is made possible by the new bridge over the Ohio River, near Evansville, which brings Nashville within sixteen hours of Chicago. Palace Buffet Sleeping Cars run without change to Nashville, and with but one change to New Orleans and Jacksonville, Florida. Send to William Hill, General Passenger Agent, C. & E. I. R. R., Chicago, for an illustrated copy of "Florida—A Story."

The Great German Physician.

The remarkable phase in the practice of Dr. Peter W. Schmidt (frequently called Dr. Peto) is, he never asked one to describe their disease but tells each one their trouble without asking a question. His success is phenomenal. His practice enormous. He is sought after by hundreds wherever he goes, because he cures when every other physician and remedy have failed. He has allowed his great medicines, Golden Seal Bitters and Lung Food for Consumption, to be offered to the suffering, and we assert without fear of successful contradiction that there is no disease they will not cure. Thousands of bottles have been sold. Thousands of broken-down and discouraged invalids saved. Send to Golden Seal Bitters Company, Holland City, Mich., for Facts for the Million!—Free.

Twenty-four Hours to Live.

From John Kuhn, Lafayette, Ind., who announces that he is now in "perfect health," we have the following: "One year ago I was, to all appearance, in the last stages of Consumption. Our best physicians gave my case up. I finally got so low that our doctor said I could only live twenty-four hours. My friends then purchased a bottle of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, which considerably benefited me. I continued until I took nine bottles, and I am now in perfect health."

The "Favorite Prescription."

Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., whose name has become known over the world through his success as a physician, and especially through the reputation of his "Golden Medical Discovery," has done a good work in preparing an especial remedy for the many distressing troubles classed as "female weaknesses." It is known as the "Favorite Prescription." Under its administration all the pelvic organs are strengthened, and the woman becomes that embodiment of health and beauty which God intended her to be.

Greatest Discovery Since 1492.

For coughs, colds, sore throat, bronchitis, laryngitis, and consumption in its early stages, nothing equals Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." It is also a great blood-purifier and strength-restorer, or tonic, and for liver complaint and costive condition of the bowels it has no equal. Sold by druggists.

BRONZE is a very fashionable hue nowadays, but brass has not entirely gone out.

WORMS ARE THE SCOURGE OF CHILDHOOD. Thousands of children die or grow up weak and sickly, with disordered nerves and stunted minds, the food necessary to their growth having been eaten by these disgusting parasites. DR. Don't say there is no help for Catarrh, Hay Fever and Cold in Head, since thousands testify that Ely's Cream Balm has entirely cured them. It supersedes the dangerous use of liquids and snuffs. It is easily applied with the finger and gives relief at once. Price 50 cents at druggists; 60 cents by mail. Send for circular. Ely Bros., Owego, N. Y.

FOR DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, depression of spirits, and general debility in their various forms; also, as a preventive against fever and ague, and other intermittent fevers, the "Ferro-Phosphorated Elixir of Calisaya," made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., of New York, and sold by all druggists, is the best tonic; and for patients recovering from fever or other sickness it has no equal.

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS, please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

Around the County.

Ironton.

Andrew Shoffen of this place met a sad death while walking from East Jordan, on the ice. The night was bitter cold and he was obliged to face a strong wind from the north. He was met by several parties during the evening whom he saluted and was apparently in good health. He was found about 9 o'clock Sunday morning almost within call of his own home frozen to death. Deceased was well known in this vicinity and leaves a large family to mourn his untimely death.

We hear good reports from the protracted meetings being held in the neighboring district south of Ironton, by Rev. J. F. Wakely, and others, and we wish them God speed in their efforts. Meanwhile the good work in Ironton, begun by Rev. Van Auken and seconded by Rev. Potter, is still going on.

A meeting was called to organize a G. A. R. post in Ironton, Monday Jan. 4th. In the absence of expected speakers the evening was given over to informal remarks and rehearsals of camp and prison experiences by the old soldiers present, and the meeting was adjourned to Wednesday evening the 13th. The G. A. R. post at Ironton will no doubt enjoy the distinguishment of being the only post in the state which held a "campfire" before its organization.

The principal of schools in Ironton is contemplating a singing school. There is room for improvement here and we wish him success.

The cold weather of the past week has converted Pine Lake and South Arm not only into a public highway, but also a vast skating rink.

School has commenced in the new school house in Hayes, with a larger attendance than ever before. Miss Gladys Jefferies, of Charlevoix, teacher. It is hereafter to be known as the Hopyard school house.

The youngest son of Andrew Struthers, of Hayes, while playing with a hatchet, accidentally cut two of his fingers. One hung by a little muscle, and there is some question whether it can be saved, but the others were not entirely severed, and the doctor hopes to save them.

An English physician furnishes these cheerful statistics: Select 100,000 healthy boys in the public schools of our country. Let each be 10 years old At 23, 10,000 will be dead; at 50, 30,000; at 75, 60,000; at 85, 90,000; at 93, 99,900; at 95, 99,990—only 10 alive, and in 100 years, 99,999 will be dead.

It took 80 gallons of oysters to furnish the Jackson convicts with a New Year's stew.—Kalamazoo Telegraph. There is many a man in Michigan who has neither committed murder, stolen a horse, nor forged a note, who could afford oysters for New Years day.

No fortuitous circumstances can make the career of a lazy man brilliant.

The salvation army has been marching through the southern part of the state with varying success. Charlotte, Eaton Rapids and Albion are the present battle fields of note.

England's business depression is very great; 700,000 spindles are idle in Lancashire, 40,000 looms are idle, and 16,000 operatives earn nothing. The situation in many other places is almost as bad.

Chief Justice Chas. P. Daly, of the Court of Common Pleas of New York city, has held the office for over 40 years, and now retires by reason of the limitation of his age, with well earned honors of universal approval.

Reports come from all parts of the country to the effect that the storm we have been having for the past few days, is one of the severest for many years. Many cattle are frozen to death in the ranches of Texas. The thermometer registered –52° in Manitoba. In many parts of the west and some parts of the east, trains are behind time, and in a few instances entirely blocked.

At Gilmore, ten miles south of Omaha, a company has started a cattle "fattery." They have expended $75,000 in the erection of big stables. There are 3,850 stalls, and by winter they will have 5,200 stalls. In each stall they will place a "critter," and they will be fed with food placed before them through a system of pipes and cooked in enormous steam vats having a capacity of 1,000 barrels of feed an hour. They will ship in cattle from the Western Nebraska ranches, and fatten them in these stalls.

Instead of giving the parson a silver water pitcher or a donation of dried apples and pumpkins, our ancestors made him the present of a negro slave. This was done in Maine. Although it is not agreeable to be compelled to believe that slavery had existed in this State, the parish records of the town of York show that at a meeting the 9th of January, 1732, it was "Voted that there be a Slave purchased by the parish to be employed for the use of said parish in laboring for the Rev. Mr. Samuel Moody."—Lewiston Journal.

The fact that the chef of the Duke of Noailles has been decoyed into the service of a Republican shows once more, declares a contemporary, the truth of that well-known dialogue by Hoffman: "Papa, I should like to have your opinion on the choice of a profession." "My boy, I should advise you to be a cook." "A cook! But suppose there is a revolution, and no more great houses are kept?" "Revolutions! I have seen more than one. Kings have been beheaded. Princes, noblemen, and Bishops reduced to beggary, but I have never heard of gluttony being at a discount. Believe me, my boy, be a cook."—Foreign Ex.

A rich man in Davenport hired a man to dig a cistern, agreeing to pay $12 for the job. After it was done the rich man seized the laborer's tools and locked them up, alleging that the cistern leaked. It was really a ruse to make the working man take less pay. The latter assembled his rage and induced the rich man to descend into the cistern to examine it. No sooner had he done so than the laborer drew up the ladder and stood guard over the cistern with a club, vowing that the other should not come up until he had settled the bill. The imprisoned one yelled "Murder!" and "Fire!" and a crowd of his neighbors gathered, but when they learned the trouble no one would interfere, and they let him stay until he liquidated.—Peoria (Ia.) Journal.

Temperance Column.

Conducted by a Committee of the W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Boush, the national press superintendent of the W. C. T. U., says in one of her most excellent leaflets: "I mused over this wonderful priestess, the W. C. T. U., benificent, wise, powerful, walking through the earth and scattering blessings everywhere; searching among the laws that govern our country, and pleading for protection for the helpless children; without money, without influence of position and power, establishing her claims upon the heart of the nation. She compels us to do good, and brings us the larger good of the doing. No home so poor but she can enter therein; no prison so dark but she brings light; no heart so lonely but she brings cheer. She is no respecter of persons. She lays an embargo on the rich woman's time and purse, and both are given to her service. She says to the poor woman "Come to me and I will make you rich in good deeds" She has walked over church fences and leveled them down, and taken the bar-posts away. She has folded up the pages of musty creeds and written thereon: "Love thy neighbor as thyself." "Love worketh no ill, therefore love is the fulfilling of the law." She is answering the prayer of Christ himself, "That ye may all be one." Such is the mission of the white ribbon. Is it not one to be desired? Might not angels covet the work given to woman's hands to-day? "True christian women do not wait for popularity except with the Lord," said one of our W. C. T. U. workers when the assertion was made that the light of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union went out with the last election. —Charlotte Prohibitionist.

The following is a brief extract of the remarks of Rev. F. H. Peckham before the temperance union at the recent anniversaries in Providence, R. I.:

The indifference of people to the great evil of intemperance is fairly illustrated by the police of a western city chasing a little mad dog out into the suburbs, and in their chase passing eighty-four rum shops. The liquor problem involves some of the gravest questions before us as a nation. While it is true that the drink bill of the nation costs as much as the bread and meat consumed by the people, and, in addition all the cost of education, and while so much of capital and of industry is diverted from useful channels and worse than wasted, this problem must remain one of the gravest financial questions for those interested in the welfare of our people. The use of intoxicants involves the greatest moral questions of our day. No other evil at so many points touches with so baneful effect the moral sentiment and the moral condition of the people. Again it presents the greatest question there is in politics to-day. Many will say, it must not be mentioned with politics. Glad would we be if it could be kept out of politics and remain a moral question. But the liquor force has already put it into politics, and temperance people must meet the question there. Politics rightly understood is the energy of the nation working for the highest good to the greatest number. Liquor more than aught else thwarts this object. By debauching the voter, by tampering with the ballot, the rum power is acting as a mighty force, especially in large cities, in the interests of bad government. Other grave evils that threaten us would be easily controlled could the liquor question be eliminated. The remedy must be as broad as the disease—by moral means in the field of morals, by the ballot and wise legislation in the field of politics. Much as I am interested in the record we as a people have made on this question, I am more interested in the record we are to make, and that we shall ever be found with those who labor for a "government of the people, by the people, for the people," in place of what is now so common—a government of the people, by the saloons, and for the saloons.—Charlotte Prohibitionist.

AT HOME AND ABROAD;

At church and theatre, in the counting house and work room, in fact everywhere is heard that hacking cough which soon developes into congestion or inflamation of the lungs, bronchitis, pneumonia, and consumption. Be wise in time. Immediate relief and cure can be cheaply obtained. HAMILTON'S COUGH BALSAM will surely give relief from those throat and lung troubles that often terminate in death. Instant relief in croup, and a subdurer of whooping cough. Your consumptive friend will be greatly benefited. Price 25 and 50 cents.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

Wild Cherry and Tar.

Every body knows the virtues of Wild Cherry and Tar as a relief and cure for any affections of the Throat and Lungs, combined with these two ingredients are a few simple healing remedies in the composition of Dr. Bosanko's Cough and Lung Syrup making it just the article you should always have in the house, for Coughs, Colds, Croup, and Bronchitis. Price 50 cents and $1.00. Samples free. Sold by G. W. Crouter. 3

Railroad War.

A fierce struggle has been going on for the last week between the T. & A. A. and D. L. & N. railroads at Howell. The first named road under the charter granted by the state. The T. & A. A. crossed D. L. & N. by tunneling under and bridging up. The D. L. & N. not being satisfied with the bridge filled up the cut, which brought on a struggle, both parties putting over a hundred armed men on the ground. No bloodshed but constant fear. The citizens of Howell held an indignation meeting, greatly censuring the D. L. & N. road. The matter has now gone into the courts for settlement.

To have the power to forgive.
Is empire and prerogative;
And 'tis in crowns a nobler gem
To grant a pardon than condemn.

The above is only a half-truth. Michigan has become noted throughout the union as the state of murders and horrible tragedies, and the good people of the state are beginning to cry out for penal justice.

☞ The Detroit Weekly Free Press four months on trial for 25 cts. Specimen copies free at this office.

THE THROAT

Is often diseased on account of catarrh, producing dryness and a constant desire to cough. That tickling sensation and the hoarseness that is so common to public singers and speakers especially, is relieved at once by HAMILTONS COUGH TOUCHES which are prepared from the most approved formula. Do not wait till acute bronchitis or even consumption takes firm hold of you. Price only 25c por box.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

EATING AND STARVING

It is all the same, for you are sure to suffer from piles. No worse torture can be conceived of. Blind or itching piles are unequaled for annoyance, but by a few applications of PARMELEE'S PILE SUPOSITORIES they entirely dissappear. The knife is often resorted to by physicians for the removal of protruding piles, but such barbarity is not a necessity for PARMELEE'S SUPOSITORIES used according to directions, quickly reduce, replace, and drive them away. Warranted to cure. Price 50 cents per box.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

WHY WASTE TIME AND MONEY

On that which does no good. Your children have worms and are cross, always hungry, sleepless, puny and weak from the presense of worms in the stomach which prevents the food being taken up to nourish the body. PARMELEE'S SANTONINE WORM CANDIES will dissolve and remove the worms and then all will be well. You cannot do better by your children than to attend to their health. Price 25 cents per box.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 152

In Lodgings.

How Alice would smile if she saw me recline
In my easiest chair to look over my pictures,
And pause at one portrait that isn't divine,
Yet doesn't permit any critical strictures.
She would say what a fool I was doting on this,
Till my arm round her waist would grow very ecstatic—
Now you'd almost suppose it was naughty to kiss
When she wants to be very dogmatic.

If Alice were here she would probably smile
At my poor little wofully modest interior;
She'd compare it with quarters I've had, and the style
Is decidedly shabby and wholly inferior.
But one can not live always in clover and June,
Nor while making one's fortune abide in a palace;
I'm content to be thrifty to day for the boon
Of spending to-morrow with Alice.

I have rented a room in the rear of the flat,
And the window looks out on a desolate entry,
Where midnight discover's the jubilant cat,
And a dog-owner's dolorous, vigilant sentry.
Yet the prospect is not at all bad—when you think
You can see a few far-away stars when they're shining,
And the moonlight bestows an occasional blink,
With suggestions of clouds with a lining.

There's an almanac stuck on the back of a door,
And a map of the city is pinned to another;
Here a photograph hangs of my colleen astore,
And one over there they say favors my mother.
Here's a table with trumpery, papers and books,
Here's a basin and highly unclassical chalice
Where I wash, and I wish I were wading the brooks
Where I wandered last summer with Alice.

My trio of chairs could make room for some more
If my drawers and my trunk were a thought less capacious;
If the bed didn't straddle all over the floor
You might come to believe the apartment was spacious.
But the walls are not distant enough to be cold,
Or to lend the enchantment that tickles the poet,
And at least if the place be a den—I'm consoled
That there isn't a grumbler to know it.

There are other folks live in the chambers around,
For I hear their alarums' importunate warning;
You can study the punctual, paganish sound
Through deplorably barbarous hours of the morning.
But that is as near as these strangers attain
To arousing a thought of good-will or of malice.
The day has its labor—the hours that remain
I lavish on thoughts about Alice.
—Albert E. Smythe.

THE CARRIER PIGEON.

Its Habits, Uses, Nature and Training.

Pigeon-flying is of such ancient origin that it is hard to say where it began. In Egypt their domestication goes back as far as 3,000 years before Christ, and in a coronation scene of Ramesis III., the king is represented as having assumed the crown of Upper and Lower Egypt, and a priest lets fly four pigeons, commanding them "to announce to the south, the north, the east and the west that the son of Iris has put on the splendid double crown of the upper and lower country."

The Romans at one time had the pigeon craze. Pliny says of it: "Many persons are insane in their love of these birds." White ones were the rage if they were good flyers, and that they were highly prized may be judged by the prices which were asked for them. There is one instance where a good price was offered for a fine pair, but the owner refused to take less than 400 denarii for them, a sum equal in our money to about $65. It was their custom to carry pigeons to theaters and when out walking, and throw them into the air, rivals betting heavily on whose bird would get home first.

To become good and reliable they must be taken from the nest as soon as they are able to fly, and carried a short distance away, probably a quarter or a half mile. All those that get home quickly are further trained, and the slow ones are killed. In this way the best are preserved. When they find their way home from short distances they are taken further and further, until they cover any distance within the limits of power. They can fly about thirty miles an hour, but more is sometimes claimed. Instances are known where they have flown 1,000 miles without a rest.

As soon as they are thrown into the air they go to a considerable height, and fly around and around until some familiar landmark is seen, from which they take their course and start in a straight line for home. If no well-known mark can be seen they are lost, and often come back to the starting place. In instances where carriers were let go from balloons and could not find their way, they have returned to the balloon, as the dove did to Noah when it could find no place to rest.

It is through no love of flying or keenness of racing that makes the carrier return to its cote, but its love of home. It is this instinct that makes it fly with untiring wing for hours and hours, to rest at last in familiar places and among friends.

Among the Romans, and the Asiatics before them, it was the custom to tie letters around the leg or foot, and many a letter from distant friend and absent father or lover was carried in this way. Travelers going from Rome in olden times, or soldiers departing for distant wars, frequently carried pigeons, releasing them at intervals, that they might be the bearers of good tidings to the folks at home. Tying the message around the neck or wing had been tried, but both were found to impede the bird's flight. At present, when they are used, the message is tied around the leg, high up, where it does not interfere at all.

In England and France, old writers speak of the frequent use of these birds, both for private correspondence as well as public, especially in time of war, when cities were besieged and there were no other available means. At such times the attacking party kept a large stock of falcons, and it was the duty of the falconers to keep a sharp lookout for carrier pigeons. As soon as one would be observed the falcons were let go, and away they rushed in hot pursuit. It is described as intensely interesting to see both pursuer and pursued cleaving the air like arrows; one flying for his game and the other for his life. The falcons frequently proved victorious, and would bring the dead dove back with information of great value.

To circumvent this the besieged sometimes let fly five or six birds at a time, which bore no message, and when the falcons were either engaged with these or too tired to fly fast, another bearing the letter would be let go, and run the gauntlet with ease.

During the siege of Paris this was a very common way of bearing news, and many were the letters which reached outside friends and military leaders far beyond the walls. Sharpshooters were on the lookout for them continually, but as a usual thing were of no avail. It was in this way that much news reached other countries of the condition within the city. The French, not wishing to encumber the pigeons any more than necessary in order that they might enhance the chances of their getting through all right, made very small micro-photographs of newspapers, letters and military orders, the entire budget weighing but a few grains.

The only use they are put to at present is in flying matches. Birds belonging to different owners are kept long enough in the same dove-cote to conceive an attachment for it, and then taken a long distance away. At this "pigeon meet" books are kept with a description of each bird entered and who it is owned by. The owner's name and the exact moment of flight are stamped quickly upon the vane of one of the wing or tail feathers and the birds sent off. At the other end of the "fly" a committee of judges are stationed to record the incomers. It is usually arranged that the entire distance may be traveled in daylight, as the birds are apt to go astray if allowed to fly by night. Large sums change hands yearly in England and France at the pigeon flys.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

A Remarkable Description.

The New York World says that the other day a lady was deploring the death of an acquaintance with one of the latter's most intimate friends. During the course of their conversation the son of the deceased gentleman entered the room and conversation became general. On his departure, however, free and personal comment was passed upon him. Said lady No. 2, "That boy has his mother's eyes." "Yes," subscribed No. 1, reflectively, "and I noticed that he had his father's umbrella." This remarkable description has stuck to him ever since, and he is known as the boy with his mother's eyes and his father's umbrella.

Changes in its composition were a introduced, using less sulphur, and charcoal which, compared to the fo mer practice, was much under-charred, thus producing the so-called "brown" or "cocoa" powder of the Germans.
This powder is said to give less smoke than the ordinary variety, and, while possessed of abundant energy, to develop the same gradually, and in a manner most favorable to the integrity of the gun.

That portion of the bore of cannon which was to receive the powder was lengthened, and given a diameter greater than that of the remainder of the bore. The important principle of "air spacing" was discovered; that is, but partially filling the powder chamber, thus leaving a vacant space therein—the air space.

Sometimes the powder charge is introduced in two or more separate parcels, but one of which is ignited by the act of discharge, the subsequent combustion of the others successively adding their impulse to the already moving projectile. By thus, through these various devices, starting the projectile with a moderate pressure, and following it with persistent energy until it leaves the bore, it is found that while the strain upon the gun is at all times moderate velocities can be imparted to the shot before unheard of. No longer is the charge for rifled guns confined to one-tenth the weight of the shot, as was the rule during our war; one-fourth, one-third, one-half that weight, and even more, is now employed with safety, and with an advantage apparent at once upon consideration of the following rough-and-ready rule for computing the penetration of iron armor: A pointed shot of proper construction will perforate its diameter of iron for every thousand feet per second of its velocity at the moment of impact; i. e., 2000 feet a second velocity will perforate a thickness of twice the diameter of the shot.

Thus one thing reacted on another, till it has culminated in the production of a gun of 110 tons, 17.7 inches calibre, 33 feet length of bore, burning 550 pounds of powder behind a 2110-pound projectile, which is estimated to be able to perforate thirty and a half inches of iron at 1000 yards.

Excluding those of the navy, of heavy guns, we have, it is believed, but two 20-inch guns, both muzzle-loading smooth-bores of cast iron, 315 15-inch guns of the same description, and 140 muzzle-loading 8-inch rifles altered from 10-inch cast-iron smooth-bores by the insertion of a wrought metal tube. Two 12-inch and one 10-inch rifle are under contract. Our other guns, if considered as a defense against modern iron-clads, are beneath notice.

The 15-inch gun, when loaded with 130 pounds of powder and a 450-pound chilled shot, will, it appears, penetrate ten inches of iron at 1000 yards distance. The 8-inch rifle, with a 183-pound chilled shot and 35 pounds of hexagonal powder, will penetrate eight inches of iron at the same distance.

These are our most efficient guns.

Compare them with those against which they would be compelled to contend, and how pitiable must be the result. Krupp's new model high-power 48-ton 12-inch rifle, 35 feet long, takes 356 pounds of powder and a 1000-pound projectile, and will penetrate 29.5 inches of iron at the muzzle, and 21.4 inches at 3500 yards, and gives a range of six miles at fifteen degrees elevation. Rifles of 80 and 100 tons have been mounted on shipboard.

The strength of the carriage and the endurance of the platform upon which it rests restrict the elevation at which guns may be fired—at all events on shipboard; and anything over six miles from the muzzle of the guns of a ship of war may be considered quite safe from their fire.

It is admitted that the proper defense of our more important harbors requires guns capable of penetrating at least twenty-four inches of iron at the distance of a mile. Though improvements in the manufacture of compound plates (those of wrought iron upon which a steel face has been cast) may give still greater resistance without increase in weight, still there is little probability that guns sufficiently powerful to effect the above result will not be ample to cope with any iron-clad that can be made to cross the ocean. In the long struggle for supremacy between guns and floating armor, the guns now seem destined to have decidedly the better of it.—A. P. Wells, in Harper's

Concise Record of the Week.

FORTY-NINTH CONGRESS.

A resolution originally introduced by Mr. Harrison calling for an investigation of the Pension Commissioner's office was adopted by the Senate on the 7th inst., after the incorporation of amendments offered by Messrs. Voorhees and Logan. As it now stands the resolution provides for an inquiry as to the truth of Mr. Black's statement that under his predecessors party tests were applied to pension claimants and as to the present incumbent's management of his trust. There was a long debate on the Utah bill, and Mormons came in for a share of bitter denunciation at the hands of Senators Morgan and Cullom. Mr. Teller opposed severe repressive measures, and acted as the apologist of the Saints. The House of Representatives issued impatiently to the introduction of bills for the admission of Dakota and Washington Territories, to create a postal telegraph, to repeal the tobacco tax, for a commission on the labor traffic, for volunteer regiments in the Southwest, for thirteen public buildings, for the Hennepin Canal project, an unlimited silver dollar, and for a hundred or two other things. Speaker Carlisle announced his committees with Morrison as Chairman of Ways and Means, Randall of Appropriations, Bland of Coinage, and Belmont of Foreign Affairs.

Senator Edmunds' Utah bill passed the Senate on the 8th inst. It is substantially the same as first reported, with the addition of a section providing that marriage between persons of the fourth degree of consanguinity, but not including that, shall be contrary to law. Mr. Eustis offered a concurrent resolution with a preamble as follows: "Whereas, The act of Congress of 1878 declared the silver dollar a legal tender for all debts, public and private; that by the act of 1869 the faith of the United States was solemnly pledged to the payment in coin or its equivalent of all public obligations not bearing interest, etc.; that by the refunding act of July, 1870, the principal and interest of the debt were made redeemable in coin of the then standard value; that since the enactment of those laws it has been the practice of the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the bonds and interest in gold coin, and that the Secretary of the Treasury has issued a call for $10,000,000 of bonds, payable on the 1st of February, 1881; therefore, be it resolved, etc., that in the opinion of Congress said bonds of $10,000,000, payable on Feb. 1, 1881, should be paid in silver dollars, such payment being in compliance with existing law and in aid of the financial policy established by the legislation of Congress." Mr. Eustis desired the resolution referred to the Committee on Finance, and expressed the hope that the committee would report on it at an early day, in order that it may be determined whether or not the practice of paying the United States bonds and the interest on them exclusively in gold coin was approved by Congress. Bills were introduced to appropriate $1,311,000 for improvements at the mouth of the Columbia River; to create a public park near Santa Fe, to pay the Delaware Indians $36,800 for certain lands in Kansas, to increase to $24 per month the pension of soldiers or sailors who lost one eye, and to prohibit the letting of Government supplies to persons employing convict labor. The House was not in session.

The bill to admit Dakota and organize the Territory of Lincoln was favorably reported to the Senate, by Mr. Harrison, on the 11th inst. In discussing the Beck silver question, Mr. Pugh stated his belief that three-fourths of the Southern people were opposed to the suspension of silver coinage. Mr. Blair urged the passage of his bill for the erection of monuments to Lincoln and Grant at the National Capitol. Bills were introduced to permit the Dakota Central Railway to bridge the Missouri River at Pierre; to pay from the Geneva award the sum of $20,000 to William H. Whiting for physical injuries sustained by imprisonment on the Confederate cruiser Alabama, and to appropriate $424,000 for river improvements in Oregon. In the House of Representatives, bills were introduced for the issue of small silver certificates for circulating medium, for large certificates on deposited silver bullion, for functional paper currency, and to pay out all except $50,000,000 of the Treasury surplus in redemption of bonds. Also a bill to divide Dakota and create the Territory of Lincoln, to prohibit aliens from acquiring title to lands, to appropriate $3,000,000 for a steam cruiser, to donate the Creve Coeur lakes to the city of St. Louis, and to enable the people to name their Postmasters. Mr. Weaver, of Iowa, flung in a measure to appropriate $300,000,000 to pay veteran soldiers and sailors the difference between gold coin and the depreciated paper they took from the paymasters. The call of States brought forward 650 new measures, making the total nearly 4,000. Nearly 500 nominations were reported from committees to the Senate sitting in executive session. When the case of Dorman B. Eaton came up Mr. Logan objected to his confirmation as Civil Service Commissioner on the ground that he was a "mugwump" and that the law required the appointment of a Republican. Mr. Eaton was, however, confirmed.

The debate of the Beck silver resolution was continued in the Senate on the 12th inst. by Mr. Pugh of Alabama, who said that silver had not been treated fairly, and that when silver, under the same treatment received by gold, and under the natural laws of supply and demand, failed to hold its own, he would consider the coin controversy settled. Mr. Pugh expressed willingness to support any change in the existing law that would withdraw any paper currency under $10, or even $20, so as to leave the coin needed for the use of small bills or small change to silver and silver certificates, and advocated the passage of the bill heretofore introduced by Mr. George (Miss.). Mr. Vance, of North Carolina, followed Mr. Pugh. He declared that the attempt to depreciate silver was one of the grandest conspiracies ever seen. The banner of the attacking party should bear in plain letters the words of holy writ: "To him that hath shall be given, and from him that hath not shall be taken away even the little that he hath." The success of the efforts against silver would result in the greatest industrial calamities. There was received from the President a draft of a bill to amend the act for the punishment of Indians for grave crimes. Mr. Lapham made a favorable report on a bill appropriating $45,000 to purchase for army purposes the old Produce Exchange Building in New York. In the House of Representatives Mr. Caldwell reported back the Hoar Presidential succession bill. In a debate on the President's message Mr. Reagan advocated the double standard of value, opposed the suspension of compulsory silver coinage, and proposed to charter memorial banks.

EASTERN.

Valises containing about $65,000 in bank bills and securities stolen from the Lancaster, Mass., National Bank have been found at Tamworth, Vt. Veo, the Treasurer of the Rutland, Vt., Marble Company, confessed that he helped McNeal, the absconding cashier of the Lancaster bank, to carry off the funds. Dr. E. M. Nelson, President of the marble company, has been arrested on suspicion of complicity in the matter.

Pittsburgh has completed a crematory on Sixth avenue, to be operated by natural gas.

The Supreme Court of Massachusetts has decided that the authorities of Boston have the right to prohibit preaching on the Common.

Nahum Capen, LL. D., died in Boston. He was Postmaster of that city under President Buchanan, and began the free delivery of letters.

A railway collision at Wilmington, Del., wrecked a passenger train and caused the death of an engineer, fireman and brakeman.

The penitentiaries of New York, two of which are being worked on State account, show a profit for the year of $3,441. All but 10 per cent. of the shoes made at Auburn are sold in the Western States.

A granite building in Clinton street, Boston, occupied by W. O. Rogers & Co. and C. H. Thompson & Co. with farm supplies, was burned, the total loss being about $300,000.

WESTERN.

The manufacturing firm of Crane Bros., one of the largest pipe and general iron manufacturing houses in the West, is about to remove from Chicago to Pittsburgh. A location at Pittsburgh, the Cranes claim, will reduce freights and be a benefit to all concerned.

Time has solved the mystery connected with the disappearance from Chicago last September of J. P. O'Rourke and Miss Mary Larned, who were by many believed to have been lost on Lake Michigan from a row-boat. It appears that they went directly to Detroit, where O'Rourke secured work as a porter in a dry goods house, although he had a good law practice in St. Louis, and had abandoned a wife and children at Kirkwood. It is said that the amour was broken up by an anonymous letter sent by O'Rourke to his wife. The parties involved have returned to their homes.

A Bohemian named Latour, who had been insane and confined in the County Jail at Schuyler, Neb., for two months, assaulted Sheriff Degnar as he was giving him breakfast. The prisoner struck him over the head with a piece of scantling from which he had been cutting kindling. He then made his escape, but was recaptured by ex-Sheriff McCurdy. Degnar died in an hour, his skull having been fractured. Latour had been in an insane asylum, but had been discharged on the ground that he was not insane. About two months ago he was arrested for abusing his family, and in default of bail he was committed to jail. A large crowd surrounded the court house, took the prisoner Latour from jail and hanged him to a tree.

Masked highwaymen in the vicinity of Fort Robinson robbed a stage coach of $5,000 in gold consigned to the Paymaster. General Howard has sent out detachments of cavalry, and scouts are in the field from Sidney, Cheyenne and Deadwood. The loss is likely to fall upon the express company.

The Continental Warehouse, in Kinzie street, Chicago, constructed by F. C. Vehmeyer, was burned, the estimated loss being $175,000. The cotton factory of Greer & Co., at Summerdale, on the Northwestern Road, valued at $75,000, was also destroyed by fire.

SOUTHERN.

Charles Williams (colored) was hanged for outrage at Cambridge, Md. When urged by the ministers to prepare for eternity, he said, "It is too late."

Five railroad laborers were drowned while crossing from the Arkansas shore of the Mississippi to Memphis in a rowboat.

At Lexington, Ky., Green B. Francis paid $5,040 each for the bay filly, Ermine and the bay colt Con Cregan.

Col. Edward Richardson, President of the recent Exposition at New Orleans, was stricken with paralysis on the streets of Jackson, Miss., and died before aid could reach him.

At points in Virginia, Georgia, Tennessee, and North Carolina the thermometer registered from zero to ten below. Blasting-powder is being used to remove ice gorges. A Galveston (Texas) special reports:

By far the heaviest snowfall ever known on Galveston island occurred this morning. About midnight last night the wind suddenly shifted from the east to northeast and a slight flurry of snow and sleet filled the air. Toward morning the storm developed into a real northern snowstorm, and by 7 o'clock the sky was almost obscured by large, wavy flakes. It is no exaggeration to state that almost the entire population of the city came outdoors to see and feel the snow. Thousands of the younger generations had never witnessed a snow-storm before, and to the colored people it is such a phenomenon that henceforth they will reckon marriages, births, and deaths from "de great snow." The average depth was six inches, with drifts a foot and a half deep. No previous snowfall since the foundation of the city, in 1838, has equaled one-half that of today, and then only at intervals of fifteen and twenty years.

WASHINGTON.

A check for $12,000 will be paid by the Treasury Department to Stephen Merritt, the New York undertaker who had charge of Gen. Grant's funeral. About $2,160 will be covered by a special appropriation.

Following is the text of the bill introduced in the lower house of Congress by Mr. Hewitt to secure a uniform standard of value:

Be it enacted, etc., That the gold and silver coins of the United States which are a full legal tender shall hereafter be coined alike at the lawful value, either for the other, upon the demand of any holder thereof, in the office of the Assistant Treasurer in the City of New York, when presented in sums of $100 or any multiple thereof; and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to provide for such interchange, and for coining to be demanded in amount of standard silver dollars as may be found necessary from time to time in order to meet the demand for such dollars; and that all provisions of law fixing or limiting the amount to be coined of such ten and silver dollars be, and the same are, hereby repealed.

A decision promulgated by Commissioner Sparks denies the claim of the Northern Pacific Road to two and a half million acres of land in Oregon and the Territory of Washington, on which settlers have located in large numbers.

The number of private claims coming before Congress has grown to such proportions that the House Committee having such matters in charge thinks of suggesting the creation of a special court to pass on the various demands for relief made by citizens who think money is due them from their Uncle Samuel.

POLITICAL.

The Republican legislative caucus at Columbus, Ohio, unanimously nominated John Sherman for Senator.

Washington special: "The Democratic members of the Committee on Ways and Means evidently don't mean to let the grass grow under their feet. Mr. Morrison called a conference of the Democratic committeemen to-day, for the purpose of developing their views as to the best method of presenting the tariff question to the House. The consultation lasted about two hours, and disclosed some diversity of opinion as to the best way to handle the question. Mr. Morrison indicated a preference for a horizontal cut, while Mr. Hewitt advocated the adoption of his bill, the leading feature of which is free raw materials. There was a good deal of discussion growing out of the various suggestions of the committeemen, by which there was shown to be a general disposition to harmonize upon some bill reducing tariff duties, and to put it before the House with as little delay as possible. All were agreed that it would be most politic to report a bill that would be sure not only to pass the House, but that would also probably pass the Senate. The reformers are in earnest, and if they should fail to pass a general bill they will attack the high-tariff rates by piecemeal, through separate bills.

The Hon. Allen G. Thurman received the Democratic caucus nomination for the United States Senatorship at Columbus, Ohio.

The scenes which were enacted in the Ohio House of Representatives just previous to the selection of the Hon. John Sherman for United States Senator by each branch of the Legislature were most exciting. A dispatch from Columbus says:

The feeling was very high owing to the long and continued contest which has been had over the Hamilton County seats and the unusual and unprecedented measures which it was proposed to adopt. The Republicans had all their members present for the first time, and were able to oust the Democratic members from Hamilton County without the two Republican votes which had refused to go with them. The ball was set a-rolling the first thing in the session by calling up the report of the committee recommending that the Democratic members be unseated. The Democrats filibustered by raising points of order, all to no purpose. The Speaker refused to recognize them or to go outside the programme which had been arranged in Republican caucus. The resolution was put through under the previous question and against the protest of the Democratic members. The Republican contestants were then called on to take the oath of office. They marched down the aisle amid the wildest demonstrations on the part of the Republicans, and, as they formed in front of the Speaker's desk, that official was unable to do anything in the way of restoring order. The infuriated Democrats, after the Republicans had cheered and shouted for fully five minutes, took up the yell, jeering and otherwise insulting the new members and yelling "Rats!" It was feared for a time that there would be trouble, but order was at last restored. The vote on Senator was taken immediately afterward. Sherman received 67 and Thurman 41 ballots. In the Senate 20 votes were cast for Thurman and 17 for Sherman. The joint convention will be held to-morrow, at which Mr. Sherman will be chosen by a majority of 23.

MISCELLANEOUS.

There were 299 failures in business in the United States reported to Bradstreet's during the week, against 297 in the previous week, 348 in the corresponding week of 1885, 345 in 1884, and 312 in 1883. About 82 per cent. were those of small traders whose capital was less than $5,000. Bradstreet's Journal in its weekly summary says:

Special telegrams to Bradstreet's from leading business centers indicate that at Western distributing points general trade is almost uniformly quiet. Dry goods jobbers and commission houses are very hopeful. Stocks at cotton goods mills are lighter than at the corresponding period one year ago, with one exception. Production of woolen goods is lighter proportionately than that of cotton. Jobbers have been buying rather freely of late. Print cloths are lighter and firmer, and stocks at Fall River are smaller than at any date since 1879. In raw wool there have been quite moderate transactions, but the tone of the market is strong. Holders are of the opinion that an advance is more likely at the present time than three months ago, inasmuch as manufacturers are expected to buy more freely before the end of the month. Stocks are reported to be relatively small. Makers of pig-iron do not see their way clear to an advance in prices in the near future, and speculators therein are not so anxious to buy as previously. Southern pig-iron is still coming forward. There have been no imports of Scotch pig during the week. Steel rails have been sold at from $1 to $2 per ton below the nominal quotation of $35 per ton, which sufficiently comments on the tone of the business. Interviews with prominent steel and iron makers as to the condition of the market. The movement of grocery staples is smaller than at the corresponding time last year. Dairy products are in slow demand.

The visible supply of grain, as compiled by the New York Produce Exchange, is as follows: Wheat, 57,978,176 bushels; corn, 9,188,163 bushels.

A theatrical company which has been playing in Canada was so anxious to escape from that land of zero that the members of the troupe attempted to cross the St. Lawrence at Ogdensburg on the thin ice. They barely escaped with their lives, and much of their baggage was ruined by water.

FOREIGN.

Reports from Eagle Island show that dreadful distress prevails among the Irish residents. The people have almost nothing to eat, and no money whatever with which to buy food. Petitions for aid to the Dublin Castle authorities have been met with the reply: "The poor-house is open."

The Great Powers of Europe, it is said, demand that Greece, Servia, Bulgaria, and Turkey shall demobilize their armies.

Advices received by the way of London state that Germany has seized the islands of Samoa in the Pacific Ocean. The King and his chiefs were insulted and finally fled. A force of marines was landed from the German war ship Albatross. The German Consul then hauled down the Samoan flag and ran up the German colors in its stead. The Samoans threaten to make war on the Germans. The American and British Consuls protested against the action of the Germans.

A spirits-monopoly bill has been signed by Emperor William of Germany. If passed by the Bundesrath it will go into effect in August, 1888.

The first member of the new Parliament to shuffle off the mortal coil is Sir George Harrison, of Edinburgh.

The British Parliament convened on the 12th inst. Arthur Wellesley Peel was re-elected Speaker of the House of Commons without opposition.

England has accepted the proposal from Russia that the Powers insist on disarmament by Greece, Servia, and Bulgaria. The Powers have summoned Servia, Bulgaria, and Greece to disarm, promising that Turkey will follow their example.

LATER NEWS IETMS.

Reports from Indian Territory state that numbers of cattle perished during the cold weather.

A boiler explosion wrecked St. Mary's Catholic Church in Fort Wayne, killing Anthony Evans, the engineer, and a school girl. The loss is $65,000.

Deming (N. M.) special: "A gentleman from Santa Fe to-day, who is connected with Territorial governmental affairs, is authority for the statement that the Territorial government is actually negotiating with Col. Baylor, of Texas, the noted Indian-fighter, to raise a body of rangers to come over into New Mexico and exterminate the murdering Apaches. Baylor has had great experience as an Indian-hunter, and it is thought that with a couple of hundred picked rangers he could capture the Apaches or bring their scalps in, long before the army officers succeeded in getting sight of them. The refusal of the President to remove Gen. Crook creates intense disgust here, among all classes. Crook's manner of hunting the light-footed Apaches with heavily equipped cavalry horses has long been the subject of ridicule among old rangers."

A Washington special says that Representatives from New England States are gratified to find that the House Judiciary Committee intends to take up the national bankruptcy bill next week, that it may be reported to the House in time to secure an advantageous position on the calendar. They have high hopes that a bankruptcy bill will pass both houses before the summer arrives. The opposition is expected to come, as it has always come, from the West and South. Only four out of the fifteen members of the committee are from Eastern States, but Chairman Tucker, of Virginia, and some others favor the enactment of a national bankrupt law, and Mr. Tucker thinks the committee will report a bill.

Flames in Montreal destroyed the hardware store of B. & S. H. Thomson, the cigar factory of Fischer & Co., the china store of J. L. Cassidy, and the Mount Royal Vinegar Works, causing a loss of $500,000. The tinware establishment of Levey & Co. at Cambridgeport, Mass., valued at $80,000, the Rathbone Hall Block at Macon, Ga., and the Lathrop Block at Dover, N. H., were also destroyed by fire.

The English Privy Council has rescinded a rule which prohibited the landing of live cattle from a vessel that had touched at a scheduled part within thirty days.

John Magee, the man who attempted to extort money from the Prince of Wales, pleaded guilty at London. He declared that want drove him to commit the crime.

Prince Bismarck has received dispatches confirming the report of the seizure of Samoa by representatives of Germany. The British and American Consuls entered protests against the action of the German naval officer.

Mr. Manderson offered a resolution in the Senate on the 13th inst., calling on the Postmaster General to report why the fast mail is transported from Chicago to the Territories by roads other than the Union Pacific. Mr. Plumb was given permission to withdraw a petition by a British subject presented by him recently. Bills were introduced to prevent the publication of lottery advertisements; appropriating $15,000 to mark the grave of General Daniel Morgan at Winchester, Va., and to grant to the Jamestown and Northern Road the right of way through the Devil's Lake Indian reservation in Dakota. In a speech on the coinage question, Mr. Coke said the silver standard had no terrors for him, and that the fight against silver was directed against the people by the banks and bondholders. The House of Representatives passed a bill to legalize the election of the Territorial Assembly of Wyoming. Mr. Curtin declined the chairmanship of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and was excused from serving.——Among the Presidential nominations confirmed by the Senate were the following: Judge Curry, of Richmond, to be United States Minister to Spain; Charles H. Scott, of Alabama, to be Minister Resident and Consul General to Venezuela; Frederick H. Winston, of Illinois, to be Minister Resident and Consul General to Persia; Pierce M. B. Young, of Georgia, to be United States Consul General at St. Petersburg; George V. N. Lothrop, of Michigan, to be United States Minister to Russia; M. H. Phelan, of Missouri, to be Consul General at Halifax; John B. Stallo, of Ohio, to be United States Minister to Italy; Charles Denby, of Indiana, to be United States Minister to China.

BROWN OF MAINE.

The Report on This Gentleman Provokes a Lively Discussion in the Senate.

Messrs. Voorhees, Vest, and Hale Have a Three-Handed Forensic Bout.

[Associated Press report.]

The Chair laid before the Senate a letter from the Postmaster General, complying with the call of a recent Senate resolution in respect to the appointment of postmasters in Maine, alleged to have been procured through the influence of S. S. Brown, Chairman of the Democratic Committee of that State. The communication having been read, Mr. Hale said that before it went to the country he desired to say a few words with regard to it. It was every day becoming the belief of the people, he said, that the civil service of the Government should not be the reward of party service. Above all, the country desired that we should have a pure civil service. There should be no taint of bargain and sale about it. All parties had recognized this, and the party rallying-cries had been based on this thought. The rallying cry of the Democrats was "Turn the rascals out," which could only mean that if rascals were in office they should be turned out. A singular state of affairs, Mr. Hale continued, has arisen in Maine within the last six months. There were few large offices in that State. There were but twenty-seven presidential postoffices, but several hundred fourth-class ones. No department of the government came so near the people as the postoffice. The Republicans had expected to go out. The clamor of the Democrats for offices had been so great that they expected to go. The administration had taken a conservative course, and the President, though pressed to make a general sweep of the postmasters in Maine, had declined. But the people of many places had waked up one morning in Maine and found that persons had been appointed whom nobody wanted and nobody recommended. In one case it was found that the Chairman of the Democratic committee, Mr. S. S. Brown, had given up his law practice, closed his office, and had come to Washington to attend to the distribution of patronage under the civil-service system. When it was found that this one-man power was the source of removals he (Hale) received letters from Democrats and Republicans alike complaining of the new state of affairs. Mr. Hale then read several letters—one saying that the people had sent the Postmaster General a petition, signed by eighty-four persons, praying for the appointment of a person, who, however, was not appointed. When Mr. H. came to Washington one of Mr. Brown's letters was handed to him (Mr. Hale). This letter became the basis of the present inquiry. He had made the inquiry for the purpose of putting before the Senate full information on the subject. Out of one hundred of the larger postoffices in Maine it now seemed that Mr. Brown had recommended eighty-seven of the new appointments. Mr. Hale requested the Postmaster General of any indorsement of Mr. Brown. Brown had come to Washington indorsed by the Democratic party or its committees. The Postmaster General had turned these matters of appointment over to his assistant, who relied upon Mr. Brown, but the Postmaster General had not made a complete answer to the resolution of the Senate. He had not stated whether the wishes of the people had been respected in the new appointments. No explanation had been made of the infamous system on which the proceedings complained of had been based. Mr. Hale read what he termed the most extraordinary exculpatory letter ever heard of—a letter of Mr. Brown to the Portland Argus, stating, among other things, that the Democratic Committee of Maine and Mr. Brown had arranged that persons who received appointments should pay something for the expenses incurred in their behalf, and also stating that he (Mr. Brown) had secured a large number of appointments to postoffices. Mr. Hale referred to the severe denunciation which, on a former occasion, had been expressed by Mr. Beck in the Senate at a circular issued by a Republican committee chairman, calling merely for voluntary contributions. What was the issuance of such a circular compared to this condition of affairs shown by the facts in the case? The one may have muddied the water, the other poisoned the fountain. The Republican party had not always been perfect, but in twenty-four years Mr. Hale had never heard that public offices had become matters of public sale. Mr. Hale had heard from an employe of the House of Representatives that there had never been in the summer season more Democrats in Washington than during the past summer, and that the Indiana Democrats had not gone home at all.

Mr. Voorhees remarked that when Mr. Hale was so told, he (Mr. Hale) was keeping company with a man who did not tell the truth. Mr. Voorhees warmly denied the truth of the statement, saying that of his personal knowledge it was untrue.

Mr. Hale did not care whether it was true or not, though if the Senator from Indiana (Mr. Voorhees) had remained here at the suggestion of his constituents, to look after their interests, it would have been as well at all times that under consideration. Mr. Hale believed he spoke for the honest, conservative Democrats of Maine in denouncing the course pursued by the Democratic Committee of Maine and by Mr. Brown.

Mr. Vest said it was impossible that the administration should know every man who solicited office. If Mr. Vest had his way he would make it a misdemeanor for any man to solicit office. But what was the Postmaster General to do? It had become a part of the common law in both parties for men to recommend people for office. Was the Postmaster General to go to Republicans for recommendations? Mr. Vest characterized Mr. Hale's position as mere cant. He (Mr. Vest) had before now seen in the departments at Washington such indorsements as this: "This man is indorsed by Vest and Cockrell," and, therefore, the appointments had been refused. Yet the Senator from Maine had discovered what he pretended to be a new evil. But for the Democratic success of 1882, there never would have been a civil-service law passed by the Republican party. The civil-service bill had been in the Senate for years without attention until the prospects of Democratic ascendency became clear to the Republicans.

Mr. Hale said that had nothing to do with the question under debate.

Mr. Vest said his colleague, Mr. Cockrell, and himself, in the course of their investigations heretofore under Republican administrations, had found unmistakable evidences of the use of money in the attainment of public offices, and though they could not put their fingers on a letter showing any use of money they could convince the moral sense of any man that money had been used.

Mr. Voorhees said the facts seemed to be that three Presidential Postmasters and some other minor Postmasters had been changed by the present administration. It seemed to Mr. Voorhees that that simply showed that not as many changes had been made in the postoffices of Maine as the people had, by their votes last fall, intended should be made by the administration. Mr. Voorhees sympathized with the Republican Postmasters who had been turned out. They would get used to it after a while, as the Democrats had got more to it. Mr. Voorhees was not here to defend Brown. He thought Mr. Hale had done a service to the Democratic party by exposing such a man; but did Mr. Hale suppose he could make an impression on the country that the Democracy of the United States favored the course pursued by Mr. Brown? Mr. Voorhees differed from Mr. Vest in one thing. He (Mr. Voorhees) was willing to put in power and office the men who had helped elect the Democrats. He believed it to have been the intention of the framers of the Constitution that the Government should be administered by the friends of the administration which the people should place in power.

Mr. Vest said he had merely meant to say that if he were to consult his own personal case he would do what he had stated. He did not mean that he was not willing to help his party friends.

Mr. Voorhees willingly conceded that fact.

Mr. Logan, referring to the allusion made to the civil-service law and the Republican administration, said that Congress—including the House and Senate, both—had not been for several administrations in the hands of the Republican party.

Mr. Vest said the Senate had been, and for a part of the time every committee was in the hands of the Republicans.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

THE Grants are living quietly in the old home in Sixty-sixth street, New York. Col. Frederick and Jessie R. are engaged in bringing out the second volume of the General's memoirs. U. S. Grant, who is generally known as "Buck," because he was born in the Buckeye State, stays on his farm near Purdy's Station, in Westchester County, N. Y., most of the time. Mrs. Grant goes out seldom. She is not in good health.

A WEEK or two ago there came to Dublin a young man who could speak no other language than the Irish, and who had to be accompanied by an interpreter about the streets of the capital of his native country. The youth was born on the island of Boffin, off the Connemara coast, where, out of 600 or 700 inhabitants, only nine speak English. On this island they possess a rich treasure of traditions, folklore and old poems.

A SILVER quarter of a dollar was found in the intestines of a four-pound trout which was being dressed for the table at Virginia City, Nev., a short time ago. It was covered with a black coating nearly an eighth of an inch thick, and had evidently been in the trout's stomach for a long time. The coin was probably dropped by some fisherman, and the fish, seeing the glittering coin, darted at and swallowed it.

IT is reported that Mr. Blaine has finished his book, or rather two books. The second volume has cost him about eighteen months' severe application. He has been constantly at work for his publishers since the margin of 1,047 carried the State of New York and the Presidential election against him. The first volume was out nearly two years ago. Mr. Blaine has enjoyed writing history so much, and found it such a resource, and withal so profitable, that there are probabilities that he will make it an occupation. It is said he has contemplated writing a history of the last war with England, and discovered treasures of unfamiliar information.

JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER was born in Haverhill, December 17, 1807, and hence is 78 years old. His health is quite good. He comes from one of the strongest of New England families. His ancestors have been Friends, or Quakers, and when the spirit moved them, have ever been able to bear witness of the hope within. His mother was Abigail Hussey, a descendant of Christopher Hussey, who married Theodata, a daughter of Stephen Bachilor, the early Puritan preacher. An element of romance is woven about this early marriage. The Husseys early became Quakers. The grandmothers of Mr. Whittier were of the Greenleaf and Evans families, and still more remotely he is connected with the Reasely and Green families—the very flower of old Essex.

ADDISON CAMMACK, the bear leader in Wall street, wanders into the Fifth Avenue Hotel nearly every night. He dresses like a bear. That is, he wears a great rough cloth overcoat which broadens his square figure out until it gives him the appearance of a big fat bear. Some one was talking with him the other night about Vanderbilt's death, when the question of the dead man's fortune came up. "I never hear it discussed," said Cammack, "but I think of a remark I heard when Moses Taylor died and left $51,000,000. Some one came down on 'Change and whispered the inquiry mysteriously about, 'How much did he leave?' He struck the wrong man after his first inquiry or two, for the answer was shouted out so every one heard it, 'Left it all; didn't take a blessed cent with him.'"

MILLIONS are talked about glibly in these times without a clear understanding of the enormous sum represented by the $50,000,000 left by Cornelius Vanderbilt, the elder, or the $200,000,000 left by William H. Vanderbilt to his sons. A Chicago preacher helps one to realize the magnitude of such fortunes by figuring out that if Cornelius Vanderbilt had been born at the beginning of the Christian era and had saved $2,000 a year ever since, he would not yet have made up his fortune of $50,000,000; and that, if William H. Vanderbilt had been a contemporary of Adam, and had saved at the rate of $25,000 per annum, he would still have been far short of his $200,000,000 at the time of his death, and would still have had to toil and save for 2,115 years in the future before amassing his fortune of $200,000,000. That calculation is based on the usual chronology. Without such examples to give one a measure, it is difficult to form a proper conception of such enormous sums.

THE hereditary Prince of Monaco has been making himself useful by investigating the gulf stream. The common belief, though it has not been scientifically verified, is that that current, after passing the Azores, flows to the northeast and tempers the climate of the British Isles and the Scandinavian coast. To test this the Prince last summer took several hundred wooden floats to the Azores, and then, cruising to northward in the waters in the gulf stream, dropped them overboard at intervals of a mile. Sealed within each was a memorandum stating the date and exact latitude and longitude in which it was cast over and requesting the mariner picking it up to note the same details of that occurrence. Not many of the floats have yet been recovered, but such as have been unanimously testify against the accepted theory, for they were found far to the southward from where they had dropped. Enterprising geniuses who think of turning the British Isles into icebergs by diverting the gulf stream will please take notice that their labor might, after all, prove to be vain.

SAYS the Washington correspondent of the Boston Traveller: "The daughter of a distinguished naval officer is one of the leaders of the healthy craze. Her plump, well-rounded figure and swinging gait can be seen on Pennsylvania avenue nearly every afternoon, rain or shine, and she has the ruddiest pair of cheeks in Washington. She looks the perfect picture of health, but some of her sharp sisters have been tracking up the secret of how her pale complexion disappeared so suddenly. It appears, so they say, that the young lady called in the services of an old sailor who had known her ever since she was a 'wee bit of a thing,' and told him that she was miserable because she could never have any color in her face. She asked him to tattoo her cheeks a delicate shade of red, and, although the operation was quite painful, she stood it bravely, and the consequence is that she will have a red face even after death. It is said that several society belles contemplate undergoing the same course of treatment."

THE natural gas at Pittsburg is odorless. It is not deemed safe to introduce it into dwellings by means of pipes and fixtures, as a leak cannot be discovered, and the danger from explosion would be very great. It is utilized for cooking and heating by carrying the pipes through the chimney flues and using it in the fireplaces, and in case of a leak the gas would escape through the chimney. As it is so abundant and the price so low a leak of gas in the flues is not often searched for, but allowed to run to waste. Meters are not in general use, but where used the price is ten cents per thousand feet. Generally housekeepers bargain with the companies at a fixed price for all they want; $75 per year is the maximum price for all the gas that may be wanted to warm the house and for ordinary purposes, and no coal is used in the house; small houses are furnished at much less prices; a poor family may obtain all the fuel necessary for about $10 or $15. In the city of Pittsburg the use of natural gas has displaced the use of 10,000 tons of coal per day, or 3,650,000 tons per annum, and the city, instead of being enveloped in smoke, is as bright and sunshiny as any city in the country. There are now 500 miles of pipe laid in and around Pittsburg to conduct this gas to the dwellings and manufactories. We have only to imagine, if we can, a great city with its wealth centered in its manufacturing establishments, many of them gigantic in their proportions, and all, or nearly all, of these immense establishments employing natural gas for fuel where formerly coal alone was used, and we may form some idea of the magnitude of the revolution in heating methods. There is a single company, only a few months old, engaged in distributing this gas whose capital is $5,000,000, and whose aggregate sales are $3,000,000 even at the low price of ten cents per 1,000 feet; this would be 20,000,000,000 feet, or twenty times the output of the Boston Gas Company, and this is the business of one company only. It has thus far proved a good fuel, but a poor illuminator.

SILVER.

Sentiments of Foreign Governments Upon the Question—Manton Marble's Mission.

President Cleveland, in answer to a resolution adopted by the Senate Dec. 9, last week transmitted copies of documents showing the action taken by him to ascertain the sentiments of foreign Governments in regard to the establishment of an international ratio between gold and silver. The correspondence is accompanied by a letter from Secretary Bayard to the President, in which he says in part:

"It has been the object of this department and its agents, while avowing our readiness to cooperate, not so much to impress our own opinions and wishes upon others as to obtain well-considered and independent views from the most influential, responsible, and competent sources, in order to lay before Congress: First, the actual status of the metallic currencies in the respective European countries; and, secondly, the intentions and policies of those Governments in relation to the subject, with details of their action up to the present time. It is believed that the accompanying letters from the Ministers of the United States to Great Britain, France, and Germany, respectively, summarize and convey the true condition of opinion and intentions of the Governments and people to whom they have been severally accredited."

The latter then mentions the designation of Mr. Marble as a confidential agent to obtain information upon the subject, and says no separate report by Mr. Marble has been made because the results of his investigations appear fully in the replies of Messrs. Phelps, McLane, and Pendleton. The correspondence opens with a letter from Secretary Bayard to Manton Marble notifying him of his designation to visit Europe upon the mission above indicated. Letters were also addressed to our Ministers at London, Paris, and Berlin notifying them of Mr. Marble's visit and asking their co-operation. A reply was received from Minister Phelps, under date of London, Oct. 20, 1885, in which he gives the result of conferences by himself and Mr. Marble with the leading members of her Majesty's Government, and says:

"From these, as well as other sources, I am satisfied that the British Government will inflexibly adhere to their past and present policy in respect to coinage; that they will not depart from the gold standard now and so long established; that they will not become a party to any international arrangement or union for the creation of a bimetallic standard at a common ratio between gold and silver for the purpose of making both an unlimited legal tender; nor adopt such double standard in Great Britain. On this point both political parties quite concur, and I believe if either were to attempt to introduce such a departure from the existing money standard it would be driven out of power by the force of public opinion."

A reply from Minister McLane, at Paris, dated Oct. 1, 1885, expresses his opinion that:

"While France would gladly receive the intelligence that the United States would adopt the French ratio of fifteen and one-half of silver to one of gold, no consideration of future consequences could induce her to adopt the American ratio of sixteen to one; still less would she adopt any higher ratio to assimilate the present commercial or market value of silver with the value of gold, nor would she consent at any rate now to permit an unrestricted or even a limited coinage of silver at her mints. The present purpose of her Government and people is to maintain, if possible, the two metals at their present ratio of fifteen and one-half to one, in domestic circulation and international exchange."

Mr. McLane says the facts obtained naturally suggest the United States, the greatest gold and silver country in the world, should suspend its silver coinage in order to uphold it, not only for circulation but as part of the Treasury reserve.

—William A. Belcher camp, Sons of Veterans, is a new order at Leslie.

—Jerry Boynton's South Bend Railway is nine miles long "and paying," says the irrepressible.

—The new Evangelical Church at South Rockwood was dedicated by Bishop Dubs, of Cleveland.

—A sanitary convention will be held at Howell, March 3 and 4, under the auspices of the State Board of Health.

—E. G. Hunt's chicken-picking house at Mason has been totally destroyed by fire. This is Mr. Hunt's second loss by fire in a short time.

—The crossing war at Howell led to a suit by the manager of the Detroit Road against the Toledo Company for $50,000 damages to tracks and wires.

—The Revolver is a new Michigan publication devoted to the interests of skating rinks. It make some noise, but will do less damage than the rinks.

—Sheep-killing dogs have done such good execution in the Township of Frenchtown, Monroe County, that the dog tax will not nearly pay the claims already filed for losses.

—William Stevens, of Detroit, who cut the throat of his fiancee, Miss Duckwitz, was convicted of murder and sentenced to life imprisonment, and in ten minutes was on board a train for Jackson.

—The body of John Davis, unmarried, was found the other day in the woods near Hobart. He complained of illness, and started for the camp for medical treatment. It is supposed he was overcome on the way and frozen.

—If the first issue of the Lansing State Republican is a sample of what is to follow a very commendable paper will be offered. The typographical appearance is pleasing, and the whole paper makes a very good impression. Besides that, the Republican "got there" in good shape on the big news in its own field.

—J. B. Corliss, attorney for Rev. Fr. Kolasinski, has prepared an appeal in the St. Albert's Church case, which is to be at once forwarded to Rome. It denies all charges made before Bishop Borgess against Fr. Kolasinski, and charges that the Bishop violated the canon laws in deposing Kolasinski before giving him a hearing.

—A fine legal twist will give the Chicago lawyers a "whack" at the Newberry estate. Julia Newberry, daughter of Walter, inherited $120,000, which she left to her mother on condition of her mother's bequeathing it to some charitable institution for women. Mrs. Newberry preferred inheriting the money as heir to her daughter instead of taking it under the will, and refrained from leaving it to any charitable institution. The Chicago Hospital for Women and Children has begun suit for the possession of this money, on the ground that it is the kind of institution described.—Free Press.

—A. L. Williams, who has just died at Owosso, at the age of 78 years, was a son of Oliver Williams, who came to Detroit in 1805 as a lake fur trader. The senior Williams was captured by the British at Fort Mackinac in the war of 1812. At the close of that war he removed his family from Concord, Mass., to Detroit, and resided at the corner of Jefferson avenue and Bates street until 1819. He then removed to Silver Lake, Oakland County. He had a large family, all of whom were well-known pioneers of Michigan. The deceased, with his brother, B. O. Williams, founded Owosso in 1822. It has been their home ever since, although in the meantime A. L. Williams visited many parts of the world. Gardner Williams, another brother, resided at East Saginaw, of which city he was the first Mayor. E. S. Williams, another brother, now lives in Flint. A sister is the wife of the pioneer proprietor of the Hodges House, at Pontiac. —Free Press.

—Don M. Dickinson, the Michigan Democratic politician, is the subject of a hat story, says the New York Tribune. He was in this city about a month ago with I. M. Weston, of Grand Rapids. They had a room together at the Hoffman House. When they separated Dickinson started for Washington and Weston remained here for a day and then went back to Michigan. Just before he went away Weston found in the room a hat-box and silk hat belonging to Dickinson. Thinking that it had been left behind by mistake, he took it with him. When he left town a week ago to come East with Mr. Dickinson he brought the hat with him. At Detroit he found that Dickinson had started without waiting for him. When he reached New York Dickinson had started for Washington. In the capital they were so busy getting appointments that he forgot all about the hat until they got back to the Hoffman House, in this city, Saturday last. He had faithfully carried it around all this time. When he came to mention the fact that he had the hat, Dickinson's face was a picture, which his reply explained: "That hat," said he. "Why, I have been trying for months to throw that hat away. I left it here in the Hoffman House, thinking that would surely effect my purpose." Weston presented the hat to the porter.

Another Republican Outrage.

The committee on privileges and elections of the Ohio house of representatives, on Jan. 12th, reported a resolution to unseat nine of the democratic members from Hamilton county. The resolution was amended, providing for hearings to be accorded the unseated members. The resolution was adopted under the previous question. The seats were then declared vacant, amid the greatest confusion, and in the midst of a howling mob. Nine republican members. The resolution was adopted under the previous question. The seats were then declared vacant, amid the greatest confusion and in the midst of a howling mob. Nine republican members came forward and were sworn in by the speaker, and were cheered by the republicans and jeered by the democrats. The action assured the election of John Sherman to a seat in the United States Senate, and gave him twenty-one majority on joint ballot in the convention of the two houses.

From Washington.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 11, 1886.

Special Correspondence.

"The powers that be" are evidently averse to allowing government employees to use their positions as a means for swindling innocent people. In September last Oliver P. Burger, of Quincy, Ill., was appointed to a $1,000 position in registry division of the postoffice department. Mr. Burger appears to be an enterprising man, quick to take advantage of an opportunity to rapidly acquire wealth He has been sending postal cards to school teachers and others over the country, stating that "about 2,000 vacancies occur yearly" in clerical positions under the government. After stating in glowing terms the great advantages of these places, and that they are filled by those who pass the civil service examinations satisfactorily, he says: "A pamphlet has been carefully prepared by the undersigned, giving full instructions and useful suggestions to those who desire to take the examination, and will be sent to any address on the receipt of fifty cents in postage stamps." Letters to be directed to him at the postoffice department, Washington, D. C., thus making it appear that the authorities knew and sanctioned his scheme. His proceedings being brought to the attention of the postmaster general, that official at once directed his removal, and he now has an opportunity to make a practical application of his valuable knowledge.

It would be well for those who desire to make application for civil service positions and examination to remember that they can obtain all necessary information free, by addressing the commission. Those who send money to parties advertising to furnish "full instructions how to obtain situations under the government," will make a poor investment.

Congress is in full working order and the affairs of the nation are receiving prompt attention The Michigan representives have been assigned positions on committees as follows:

Hon. W. C. Maybury is on the committee on ways and means and the committee on education.

Hon. T. E. Tarsney, committees on commerce and on labor.

Hon. E. C. Carleton, on the rivers and harbors committee, and the select committee on alcoholic liquor traffic.

Hon. E. B. Winans, on the committee on agriculture and the committee on invalid pensions.

Hon. B. M. Cutcheon, committee on military affairs.

Hon. J. C. Burrows, on postoffices and post roads committee.

Hon. Jas. O'Donnell, committee on education, and select committee on ventilation and acoustics.

Hon. S. C. Moffat, the militia committee, and committee on election of president and vice president.

Hon. S. O. Fisher, committee on patents.

Hon. N. B. Eldridge, chairmain of the committee on pensions, and member of the committee on private land claims.

Hon. C. C. Comstock, committee on war claims, and select committee on American shipbuilding and ship owning.

For a state that "anybody can carry," it would appear that Michigan has been very liberally dealt with by the democratic speaker of the house.

Washington is decidedly unfortunate in having the poorest, stalest daily papers of any prominent city in the country. Many towns with less than half as many inhabitants are supplied with abler edited and more enterprising dailies. But then, what it lacks in quality it tries to make up in numbers.

The "wild west" blizzard, which came from the northwest, struck Washington Friday evening, and the "oldest inhabitant" informs us that there is more snow on the ground than at any one time for many years. It is about four inches deep, and everyone who owns, or can buy, beg, borrow, or steal a horse may be seen sleigh riding. This is a luxury that can be indulged in but once in a long while, as it is seldom that there is snow enough. JOHNSON.

Sweetness and Feathers.

In Africa the bees have a very hard time; for there man has a sharp-eyed, active little friend to help him find their carefully hidden honey. This little friend is a bird,—a rascally, shiftless fellow, that not only fails to build a home for its little ones, but even goes so far as to make other birds have all the trouble and worry of bringing up and feeding them. Like the cuckoo, it puts its eggs in the nests of other birds.

The "honey-guide," as it is called, is exceedingly fond of honey; or, if it can not have that, is very well satisfied with young bees. It is only about the size of a lark, and so is not specially fitted for encountering a swarm of bees fighting in defense of their home. Once in a while, it tries to rob a nest, but is usually well punished for doing so. The little bees seem to know that their stings can not injure the feather-covered body of the bird, and accordingly they direct their attacks at the eyes of the robber; and if the bird does not escape in time, it will be blinded, and so perish of starvation.

However, the honey-guide is seldom so foolish as to run any such risk. It prefers to have some one else steal the honey, and is content with a small portion for its share.

When it has found a nest, it darts away in search of a man. As soon as it sees one, it hovers over him, flies about his head, perches near him, or flutters here and there in front of him, all the time chatting vigorously. The native knows in a moment what the little bird means; and as he loves honey as a child does candy, only something that is very important will prevent his accepting the honey-guide's invitation. When he is ready to follow, he whistles; and the bird seems to understand the signal, for it at once flies on, for a short distance and waits till the man is near, and then flies on a few yards farther. In this way the bird leads the man until the nest is reached. Then it suddenly changes its twitter for a peculiar note, and either hovers over the nest for a moment, or complacently sits down and lets the man find the nest, the best he can.

When it is found, the bees are smoked out with a torch or with a fire of leaves, according to the height of the nest from the ground. A small portion of the honey is given to the bird as its share of the plunder. If the little fellow has had honey enough, it disappears; but if, as is usually the case, it receives only enough to whet its appetite, it will lead to another nest, and sometimes even to a third.—From "Honey-Hunting," by John R. Coryell, in St. Nicholas for October.

Queer Mistakes of Bridegrooms.

Most people the moment they enter a parsonage to get married become embarrassed, and are hardly conscious of what they do. One fellow I heard of was dreadfully afflicted in this way, and without realizing his act pulled a cigar from his pocket and twirled it around in his hands. When that portion of the ceremony was reached in which the lady and gentleman join hands he happened to have the cigar in his right hand. What to do with the cigar he evidently didn't know. The clergyman paused for a moment and then repeated the instruction that they join hands. By this time the poor fellow's embarrassment had increased so that it was painful to behold. He gave one agonized look at the minister and then stuck the cigar in his mouth. Before the ceremony could be concluded the minister had to take the cigar from between his lips. Another prospective groom was in the same dire condition of mind. He was making a great effort to regain his composure by whirling around on his outstretched finger a silk hat when the minister announced his readiness to begin the service. The fellow quickly jumped up. For a second he did not know what to do with his hat, but only for a second, for he solved the problem by sticking the castor between his knees. The clergyman told me he could hardly refrain from laughter as he married that man standing in the ridiculous position he was forced to take.—Philadelphia Record.

How Texas Came Into the Union.

The usually accurate and judicious paper, the Cleburne Chronicle, says: "When Texas was admitted into the Union it was under a solemn contract that whenever she desired to withdraw from the Union she could do so." Could the Chronicle produce such a contract it would rank as one of the most curious secrets in diplomacy. The articles of annexation passed by the United States Congress simply provided for the admission of Texas "as one of the States of this Union" under certain conditions; but not a word was said of the right of the State to secede. As the precise manner in which the Republic of Texas became a State of the American Union is unknown to most of the present generation, a brief recapitulation of the facts may be of interest to many. After various negotiations on the subject the United States Congress passed a joint resolution declaring that the territory belonging to the Republic of Texas might be erected into a new State and be admitted into the Union on certain conditions, including the cession by Texas to the United States of public edifices, such as fortifications, barracks, forts and harbors, navy and navy yards, docks, magazines, armament and all other property and means pertaining to public defense, Texas to retain all her public lands, funds, debts, taxes and dues of every kind. Texas, through her Congress and a convention, accepted the conditions. The final act of the United States Congress on the subject declares that Texas "is admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever." Nothing was said of the right of any State to withdraw from the Union when Texas was admitted.—Galveston (Tex.) News.

Proper Treatment for Coughs.

That the reader may fully understand what constitutes a good Cough and Lung Syrup, we will say that Tar and Wild Cherry is the basis of best remedies yet discovered. These ingredients with several others equally as efficacious, enter largely into Dr. Bosanko's Cough and Lung Syrup, thus making it one of the most reliable now on the market. Price 50 cts. and $1.00. Samples free. Sold by G. W. Crouter. 2

AT HOME AND ABROAD;
At church and theatre, in the counting house and work room, in fact everywhere is heard that hacking cough which soon developes into congestion or inflamation of the lungs, bronchitis, pneumonia, and consumption. Be wise in time. Immediate relief and cure can be cheaply obtained. HAMILTON'S COUGH BALSAM will surely give relief from these throat and lung troubles that often terminate in death. Instant relief in croup, and a subdurer of whooping cough. Your consumptive friend will be greatly benefited. Price 25 and 50 cents.
Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

EATING AND STARVING
It is all the same, for you are sure to suffer from piles. No worse torture can be conceived of. Blind or itching piles are unequaled for annoyance, but by a few applications of PARMELEE'S PILE SUPOSITORIES they entirely dissappear. The knife is often resorted to by physicians for the removal of protruding piles, but such barbarity is not a necessity for PARMELEE'S SUPOSITORIES used according to directions, quickly reduce, replace, and drive them away. Warranted to cure. Price 50 cents per box.
Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

WHY WASTE TIME AND MONEY
On that which does no good. Your children have worms and are cross, always hungry, sleepless, puny and weak from the presense of worms in the stomach which prevents the food being taken up to nourish the body. PARMELEE'S SANTONINE WORM CANDIES will dissolve and remove the worms and then all will be well. You cannot do better by your children than to attend to their health. Price 25 cents per box.
Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

CLEMENT J. STRANG, Editor.

The register of deeds was in town Monday.

Snow is now about two feet deep in the woods.

To Mr. and Mrs. John Cook, Jan. 17, a daughter.

To Mr. and Mrs. Smith Campbell, Jan. 18, a daughter.

Preaching at Ironton next Sunday at 3:30 by Rev. J. T. Iddings.

John Hogan returned home from the upper peninsula last Friday.

F. W. Craine, of Cadillac, is in town to-day, calling on his many friends.

S. G. Isaman is erecting an addition to his store building at East Jordan.

South Arm is considered the best highway now between Ironton and East Jordan.

The boys's band tendered a serenade to Mr. and Mrs. Robert O'Neil, Tuesday evening.

A snow plow driven through the streets to-day made a decided improvement in the sleighing.

The W. C. T. U. of Charlevoix, will meet at the home of Mrs. J. T. Iddings, on Friday, at 3 o'clock.

Orlando Blair and J. H. Stone, of East Jordan, were down Tuesday night and made the JOURNAL a call.

Bishop Gillespie, of Grand Rapids, will occupy the pulpit at the Congregational church next Sunday morning.

E. A. Berdan, of Detroit, attended the marriage of his sister in Charlevoix this week, returning home today.

Ladies, you are invited to meet, with Mrs. Iddings, at the parsonage Friday afternoon, Jan. 22. All are welcome.

The pleasant party of the season was at Mrs. R. W. Kane's, on Monday evening, on the occasion of her birthday.

In lieu of a gospel sermon, Rev. Mr. McCartney gave his reminiscences of the war to a full house, on Friday evening.

Arba Howard removed his household goods this week to Saline, where he is to engage in business on his own account.

Arba Howard, of Saline, was in town over Sunday, and took part in the K. O. T. M. installation of officers last Thursday evening.

The Charlevoix Mfg. Co. have a card in another column of interest to many of our readers. Look the matter up and give it attention.

The voice of the chimney sweep is heard in the land once more. Will Horton and Elmer Mayne have returned from the south part of the state where they have made quite a success at sweeping chimneys.

J. A. Cameron, of Boyne City, expects to make another trip to Texas and New Mexico in about two weeks, to be absent several months.

The young people's society in connection with the M. E. church is doing some good literary and christian work, and having a good social time.

The ladies of Charlevoix will be pleased to learn of the new dressmaking establishment opened on Antrim street, by Mrs. Josie Dartt. Call and see her.

An institution is about to be established in Charlevoix which will bring more people here than any other one industry now here. More concerning it later on.

Six inches of snow fell Friday night,—the right kind to make good sleighing. A little more nearly every day since has made the roads almost perfect.

A day or since, Ed. Bedford went out for the last time this winter to look after his nets. He had a fair catch, but not a very delightful time handling the wet nets.

Would'nt it be "a good scheme" to put the runners on to the fire engine? Eight or ten men would find pretty hard pulling to take it to a fire with suitable speed.

Episcopal service will be held at the Congregational church next Sunday morning at 10:30 a. m. Time and place of evening service announced at the morning service.

On the occasion of her birthday, Tuesday evening last, the friends of Miss Lottie Mason came in such numbers as to completely surprise her. An evening of pleasantries and glee.

The little son of J. R. Dixon, in trying to amuse himself with a feed cutter, one day last week, got his hand between the cog-wheels bruising it badly; but it is now healing rapidly.

A crowded house at Ironton waited a full hour for a minister last Sunday, but waited in vain. The disappointment was the result of a misunderstanding, in which it is impossible now to blame any one.

Rev. J. T. Iddings leaves for our publication special notice of his next Sunday's services at the M. E. church, both morning and evening. The young people's meeting at 6 o'clock will be led by Miss Jefferies.

The firm of D. C. Loveday & Co., hardware dealers, East Jordan, has been dissolved, Mr. D. C. Loveday continuing the business. Mr. Barbour, however, expects to remain in the store with him until spring.

The little daughter of Henry Supernean was severely burned a day or two since. Coming too near the stove her dress took fire, but by the efforts of her brother Willie, a little older, the flames were entinguished.

W. S. Johnson, of Sutton's Bay, was in town last Thursday and Friday. He reports his wife now at Ann Arbor, and apparently making good recovery, after having been given up as hopeless by friends and physicians at home.

The new telephone line is completed between Traverse City and Sutton's Bay. It is already found to be a great convenience there, and we may confidently look forward to the day when it will be connected with our system here.

Horton & Mayne call attention in another column to a matter of considerable interest to almost every householder in town. Examine your chimneys, and if they need cleaning, have it done before it is too late. Delays are sometimes dangerous.

With the building boom sure to come in the spring, and the natural increase of business sure to follow the new flour mill and other business houses soon to be opened, Charlevoix people may look for the liveliest summer in the history of the town.

A little girl came down town the other evening bringing her handsled with her, which she left on the side of the walk while she went into a store on an errand. When she came to look for her sled it was gone. Dilligent search discovered it in use on Round Lake by a party of small boys. This is an example of gallantry which should not be imitated.

Just before the close of navigation a clinker row boat was missed from a Charlevoix Resort boat house, and a careful search by warden Kelly at first failed to discover it, but a letter from Boyne City this week, states that the boat has been found at that place, and taken care of. This is the first item of loss under Mr. Kelley's management and he is fortunate in recovering it so soon and in good order.

Mr. John Leng, late of Toronto, and Al. F. Draper, well known to our citizens from his long connection with the firm of Upright & Emrey, in Charlevoix, and the Pine Lake Iron Co., in Ironton, have joined their fortunes and established themselves in the dry goods and grocery trade at South Arm. They have a large stock of groceries now open in the building formerly occupied by P. LaClair, and a complete stock of dry goods will be opened next week. As soon as spring opens they will make a change in the building, adding a larger and better salesroom, and will aim to take the lead in trade in that community. Mr. Draper's acquaintance with the people and the needs of the community, will assist materially in doing this. The firm will pay the highest market prices in cash for everything the farmer has to dispose of in the line of ties, posts, wood, bark, produce, etc. We wish them success in their enterprise.

Some of the daily papers, in reporting the death of Mr. Shoffen, stated that he was intoxicated at the time. We have taken pains to get at the truth of the matter, and think that while it is a slander upon the county to state unqualifiedly that the man froze to death, it is also a slander upon the man to say he was intoxicated. He was probably sick and becoming suddenly faint, lay down and could not rise, and then froze.

W. F. Palmiter, of East Jordan, is supposed to be a brave man, but last Thursday evening when the party came down to the K. O. T. M. installation, he was pretty thoroughly frightened by the ice which cracked and seemed to give way under the sleigh. He jumped out and ran behind rather than ride with the load. Considerable more than this is said of him by the boys in the party,

There is a constant increase of patronage of our public schools. We have this term seven foreign scholars—five in the high school and two in the intermediate. One of these is a resident of Ohio, another of Harbor Springs, and the remainder of neighboring townships. Considering the closeness of times, and the rate of tuition this is a good showing; for it must be borne in mind that foreign scholars have board bills, as well as tuition to pay.

Tuesday evening Harry Chamberlin came home from Charlevoix to visit his folks, and brought a young lady of that place with him, who stopped with Mrs. Chamberlin over night. In the evening a fire was started in a room up stairs for the young lady's benefit. About ten o'clock, just as the the family were about to retire, smoke was discovered in the house and an investigation showed that the ceiling up stairs, next to the chimney, had caught fire from the stove pipe. An alarm was given, but by the time the hose cart reached the house the fire had been extinguished.—Petoskey Democrat.

Benton Harbor is a place of between 4,000 and 5,000 inhabitants; yet during the month of December only 40 books were drawn from her public library. This fact was noticed by a Buchanan editor, and the statement made, that during the same month, Buchanan, with a population not more than half as large, furnished 800 patrons for her library,—which was an exceedingly good showing: but one, nevertheless, with which we are willing to compare the record of Charlevoix. Our library has been open only 17 days, and there have been drawn 306 books, which for 30 days would be 540 books, and yet our population is only about 1,500. In a friendly way we would say to Benton Harbor: "Brace up."

Heath & Francis are putting these wintry days to good account in their shop by fitting up the inside finishings on the Smithson cottage, and getting everything ready for a prompt completion of that elegant residence with the return of spring. In addition to this, they are pushed with an unusual amount of miscellaneous job work for this time of year. This shop is supplied with a very complete outfit of Barnes' latest improved machinery, and even with the help of these the firm are unable to keep up with their work as they desire. In the Smithson cottage they will put up some elaborate and richly carved finishings, in native wood, which will stand as a monument, not only to the skill of the builders but to our vast resourses of building material.

Several parties promised us wood, "day after to-morrow" and "next week," but failed us in the end. When we had put the last stick in the stove and the mercury began to draw itself in, like an offended snail or a mud turtle's head, a farmer out south promised to bring us a load right away, and went home after it. On reaching home he found it had not been cut in his absence as he expected so he loaded a little on from his house and brought it along. "That's the stuff" friend and we'll remember you. Since the above was in type several of our friends whom we feared had forgotten us, drove up and took us by surprise; and now you ought to see us smile while we toast our shins. But what we now have won't last long with five stoves,—who's next.

New Dry Goods House.

We understand that F. W. Craine's visit to Charlevoix this week was not altogether to visit friends. He has concluded arrangements by which, about the first of April, E. H. Green's new brick store will be occupied with a complete stock of dry goods and ladies' furnishing goods. Frank's long experience in the business, and his wide acquaintance in Charlevoix, gained during his connection with Geo. W. Miller's clothing house, are a guarantee that the demands of the community will be diligently studied, and satisfactorily supplied. We wish him every achievable success.

The Historical Society.

The society met this week at Mrs. Ainslie's. The night was stormy and Elder McCartney was billed for a war lecture at the M. E. church; nevertheless the rooms were well filled.

The program was as follows:

Vocal duet—"Oh Mayest Thou Dream of Me," by Mrs. Frederick Mayne and Miss Flora Ainslie.

Select reading—"The Testing of Azrael," by the President, E. H. Green.

Intermission.

Vocal solo—"Polly," by Gard. Brown.

Select reading—"The Masons on Tap," by John Burns.

Vocal Solo—"Summer Evening Memories," by Mrs. E. M. Clark.

Paper—"Alfred the Great," by Miss Luna Washburn.

The selection by Mr. Green was an exceedingly happy one. It was a story of the rebellion; or rather, an incident of the late war, as the scenes depicted actually transpired, Mr. Green himself having personal knowledge of the facts. During the reading there were many moist eyes, including those of the major himself.

The paper by Miss Luna Washburn evinced extensive study and excellent judgment in separating fact from fiction, and painstaking composition; and being well rendered was received with hearty applause.

K. O. T. M. Installation.

A hastily prepared but altogether very pleasant and successful entertainment occurred last Thursday evening at Odd Fellows' hall, on the occasion of the installation of officers of the Knights of the Maccabees. During the forenoon a number of East Jordan knights decided to accept an invitation previously extended to them to attend the installation of officers to be held here on that evening. They were to be accompanied by the East Jordan band, and the exercises were to be public. The society here were notified of their acceptance, and arrangements were hastily made for entertaining them with supper. The first intimation of the affair to most of our people was the playing of the East Jordan band on our streets, when they arrived about seven o'clock, two loads of visitors having came down on the ice. The ceremony of installation began about 9 o'clock, in the presence of a company of invited guests, after which the Charlevoix knights spread a most generous feast. The revelry continued until nearly midnight, when the visitors returned to their homes, and the Charlevoix tent concluded its labors in secret.

Nuptials.

On Tuesday last at the home of the brides parents, by the Rev. J. T. Iddings, Miss Mary E. Berdan and Capt. Robert O'Neil, were united in the bonds of wedlock. The ceremony was performed at 7 o'clock p. m., after which the cake and its accompanyments were served.

The plan was for a private wedding, —only the families of the bride and groom being invited, but the Charlevoix Boy's Cornet Band, could not resist the temptation to wish the couple lifelong joy "in notes almost divine," and were rewarded by a cordial welcome, a luscious repast, and each a morsel of wedding cake.

We unite with the host of friends in wishing the young couple "a world of happy days and an eternity of bliss."

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. LUCIA'S BUTY.

BY CATHARINE CHILDAR.

"You do not love me, Lucia!"

The speaker was a tall, good-looking young fellow, dressed in the picturesque costume of the shepherds of the Albano Mountains, but his handsome features were spoilt by an expression of petulant ill-humor.

The girl whom he addressed as Lucia sighed deeply, but she did not raise her eyes nor make any answer.

"Is this your last word?" continued the young man. "You mean to say you prefer that wretched foundling that miserable, nameless cripple, to me?"

"See here, Enrico: what you ask me is impossible! How can I turn out of doors a helpless child of six years old? Who is to feed him? Who is to take care of him?"

"But we are poor people. Why are we to keep a stranger's child?"

Lucia lifted her head eagerly; the "we" sounded encouraging.

"Dear Enrico, you shall have no expense. He shall not cost you a farthing. The English signora who taught me to knit has promised to buy all I do. I shall earn a good deal, I am sure. See, I have already begun a stocking, and the work goes on—goes on; whether I watch the goats, or the soup upon the fire, I knit and knit. Look, how fast it goes!" and Lucia made the steel needles glitter in the sunlight.

"Bah! That is nonsense, and the English lady will very likely never come again. Those foreigners are not to be relied on. Besides, when we are married you will have more to do. There will be my clothes to see to, and why are you to be saddled with a foundling? He is no relation of yours."

"True, but he is almost like a brother. Did not my dear mother find him lost among the hills four years ago? Did she not take care of him as if he were her own? Has he not always shared our food and our home? And now that she is dead—she that was his best friend, always patient when I was angry, always gentle when I was severe—now, before she has lain a month in her cold grave, I am to turn out the poor child she rescued from death? No, Enrico mio, such a thing is not possible. As for loving you, ah! you know——" Here the poor girl's voice broke, and she said no more.

But Enrico did not seem convinced either by her glowing words or her silent tears. He made no attempt to console her; he stood there frowning, and kicking the loose stones of the road, looking just what he was, a bad-tempered, selfish fellow. He had been brought up with Lucia, and had loved her after his own fashion ever since they were children—that is to say, he had tyrannized over her himself, but had fought her battles with others—and Lucia had repaid his championship with the deepest love and admiration of her little heart.

Enrico had taken to spending his winters in Rome, picking up what he could get as a model, and returning to his native mountains during the summer months. His affection for Lucia had become a habit, though, as she was poor, he looked upon himself as a very magnanimous young fellow for offering to marry her, considering how many girls were fascinated by his person and manners. But as to the cripple, the little orphan that Lucia's mother had been silly enough to adopt, that was quite another matter. He wasn't going to be saddled with him, a useless creature, that could never be turned to account.

Just then the poor child who was the cause of the lovers' estrangement came hopping and wiggling toward them. One leg dangled, perfectly useless, but he had a crutch, and by means of this and his uninjured leg he managed to get over the ground tolerably fast. Enrico saw the child coming, but took no notice; he only kicked the stones more viciously than before.

"Take care, Enrico!" cried Lucia, anxiously; "you very nearly hit his head."

She spoke too late. Enrico had sent a sharp flint full into the little cripple's face. It struck his lip and made him cry. Without a word of regret or farewell, Enrico turned on his heels and strode quickly away.

The two creatures he had wounded so cruelly wept in each other's arms. Little Pipino's face was cut, and the smart was hard to bear, but what was that compared to the pain in the true and loyal heart of Lucia?

"Do not cry," whispered Pipino, forgetful of his own hurt, and stroking Lucia's face with his small, thin hands, "do not cry. He is a bad man. When I grow big and strong I will kill him!"

"No, dear little one, you must not say such things. It is very wicked to be revengeful. Enrico did not mean to hurt you."

"Yes, he did. He told me yesterday he should like to wring my neck. He would have boxed my ears too, if Nicolo Prato had not come up just in time. Enrico is a coward; he ran away when he saw Nicolo."

"Hush, Pipino!" said Lucia, angrily. "Little boys know nothing about men. Nicolo Prato can box people's ears too, I dare say."

"Ah, but not ours," said Pipino, with such a comic expression that Lucia could not help smiling and blushing. She knew very well why big, rough Nicolo Prato was so kind to the little cripple, but she tried to pretend ignorance.

"Come, come," she said, when she had washed Pipino's face and dressed his wound, "a plate of soup, and then off to bed."

"I don't want any soup. Nicolo gave me some, and I took it all, because I knew there would be more for you."

"That was very naughty of you! You are never to do so again—do you hear?"

The child made no answer. He took his reproof with an air of tolerant superiority, and walked off to his primitive couch.

He was soon asleep, but Lucia lay awake all night. Her love for Enrico was deep and sincere, and now an end had come—an end to all her fond hopes and bright plans for the future.

Enrico had never been a model character by any means, but his winter in Rome had made him worse. He had come back more idle, more selfish, more careless than ever; before that he had never talked of turning poor Pipino adrift. It was a night of sorrow and tears for Lucia, but she adhered firmly to her purpose. It was a cruel, unjust thing that Enrico wished her to do, and great as was her love for him, she dared not yield.

The autumn days drew on. Visitors were flocking to Italy. Without a word of farewell to Lucia, Enrico left Genzano and went down to Rome.

It was a long, dreary winter. People never remembered so much snow. There was much distress about, and Lucia, in spite of her hard work and her constant knitting, began to despair. The English lady had never come back, and it was difficult to find food for herself and Pipino. But Nicolo Prato never forsook them. He was always bringing small presents, ostensibly for Pipino, and Lucia could not be ungracious to the child's benefactor. She recollected with shame and regret how often she had laughed at the big, rough peasant—how she had encouraged Enrico to make fun of his awkward ways, and how she had mimicked his bashful speech. And now he was the only friend who stood between her and starvation.

News sometimes came of Enrico. It was a cold winter, and Rome was crowded with strangers; the models were "coining money;" so Enrico sent word. But never a message for her; she was nothing to him now. She had only the tiny, clinging hands of the cripple to caress her, and his baby talk to give comfort for the future. And while she sat and grieved in silence, Nicolo, the warm-hearted, awkward peasant, stood timidly aloof, longing, but not daring, to cast his love and devotion at her feet.

One evening Pipino was later than usual. Lucia grew alarmed. What could have happened to the child? The twilight grew deeper, still Pipino did not appear.

Suddenly a firm, heavy tread was heard, and Nicolo stood in the doorway.

"What is it?" cried Lucia. "Where is the child?"

"Don't be alarmed," said Nicolo, standing awkwardly on the doorstep, uncertain whether to retreat or advance. "He is at my house——"

"Your house? Why? Has anything happened?"

"It is nothing serious. His crutch slipped upon a stone; I carried him home."

"But why did you not bring him here?"

It was too dark for her to see the flush of embarrassment which spread over the honest fellow's face as he stammered his reply:

"It was so much further—my house is bigger—he thought—I thought——"

"Whatever you thought, it was foolish," cried Lucia, stamping her foot impatiently. "If the child is in your house, how can I go and nurse him?"

"Ah, Signorina Lucia!" sighed Nicolo, and then he was silent. Lucia grew embarrassed in her turn—neither spoke for a few seconds.

"This is folly," exclaimed Lucia. "Why are we wasting time while the child is suffering? I must go and fetch him here."

Nicolo felt it was now or never. He stepped further into the room and seized her two hands eagerly. Lucia was too amazed to utter a word.

"Yes, Lucia," he said, "let us go; but if you come to my house, you must never leave it again. I want you there—to stay with me always—so does Pipino. I will work for you both. I am strong. I can earn enough for us all. You will not mind my mother living with us. She loves you already, and she is not old; she is no trouble. You can mind the house together."

Lucia was so bewildered by this avalanche of words that she could not speak. The shy, bashful Nicolo, emboldened by her silence and the semi-darkness, came closer still, and put one arm around her, holding fast her other hand.

"Come!" he said gently, drawing her to him—"Pipino wants you."

"Ah, no!" she said, suddenly ronsing herself with a cry, and pushing Nicolo violently away. "How can you say such things to me? It is only a few months since—since——"

"You were betrothed to Enrico. I know; do not think I forget it. I know, too, I am a poor, rough, ugly fellow by the side of him, but I will take care of the child."

Lucia sank panting into a chair. Her old love for Enrico, her affection for Pipino, her gratitude to Nicolo, all fought and struggled in her heart. Then she started up again.

"Why do you keep me talking here and the child is suffering? Is it a bad accident?"

"It is not dangerous, and my mother is with him. Give me an answer, Lucia. I love you with my whole heart; will you marry me?"

The girl burst into a passion of tears. She knew what Nicolo said was true. Even when she had laughed and scoffed at him the most she had always known he loved her. And yet—and yet her foolish heart clung to Enrico.

"Nicolo," she cried, and at the sound of his name the honest fellow thrilled all over—"Nicolo, forgive me. I can not forget Enrico."

"Ah!" came like a gasp from the breast of Nicolo; then he was silent, and nothing was audible but Lucia's sobs.

"I know," she said pleadingly—"I know I am foolish. He is perhaps careless and idle; but if he were to return and say to me, Lucia mia, forgive me and marry me, why, then, Nicolo——"

"He will never say so," interrupted Nicolo harshly. "Yesterday he married Maddalena."

"Maddalena!" panted Lucia, a hot flush tingling her whole body. It was the name of the worst girl in Genzano, who had gone to Rome that winter.

"Tell me that again," she said quietly—"Enrico has married Maddalena?"

"Yes," answered Nicolo, very quietly also.

A wave of outraged love and indignation swept over Lucia, and overwhelmed forever in its depths the memory of Enrico.

"I did not speak before," said Nicolo, in a broken voice. "I was afraid I should have no chance, but I have loved you as long as Enrico. I have toiled and slaved to get a home for you, and I will work for you all my life. Come—Pipino wants you."

She rose with an hysterical laugh, wrapped a shawl round her, and went out with Nicolo into the twilight.

It was a grave and solemn walk; both realized what was implied in it.

Nicolo's mother met them at the door, and welcomed Lucia with a silent embrace; the two young people went on to where Pipino lay upon the bed.

He greeted them with a shout of rapture.

"I told you so," he said. "I knew she would come if Pipino wanted her."

He threw an arm round each of their necks, and drew their faces down to his and kissed them. Then he said, half roguishly, half gravely:

"Now kiss each other."

But Lucia rebelled, and rising from his bed with flushed cheeks, began to reprove him.

"How is this, Pipino? Is it a trick you have played upon me?"

"No, no," cried the child eagerly. "The doctor says I have hurt my leg badly; but I don't care if it makes Nicolo happy."

And so the little orphan, who had severed one love-match, cemented another, and Lucia became the wife of Nicolo Prato.

The spring days came, and all things seemed to prosper. The English signora took up her abode again in Albano, and often visited the young wife and little Pipino, who had not only recovered from his accident, but was getting less lame under the skillful treatment of the kind doctor. The boy was very clever, too. People began to shake their heads wisely, and prophesy that he would do great things some day.

"Ah!" they said, "it was a lucky hour for Lucia when she took that child. He will turn out a genius."

Sad accounts came from Rome—sad stories of the life led by Enrico and Maddalena, but they never reached Lucia's ears. Nicolo guarded against that. To him, also, the mere mention of the names brought bitter memories, and no allusion to them ever crossed his lips.

And so Lucia's life went on, passed in tranquil happiness. The love she had accepted was honest and sincere, not full of stormy gusts, like the passion of Enrico, but patient and unselfish, filling every day's commonplace duties with sweet and thoughtful attentions. With her husband at her side, Pipino growing up, and baby voices calling her mother, Lucia has reason to bless the day she took the name of Prato.

Cause and Nature of Meteors.

It is now known that meteors can not originate on the moon, or within the regions of the earth's atmosphere. It is also universally conceded by all observers of natural phenomena that innumerable minute bodies fill celestial spaces, moving around the sun in every possible kind of orbit. Of the exact nature of these small bodies comparatively little can be known, but it is certain that our earth is continually encountering them in its passage through its orbit. They are burned in passing through the upper regions of our atmosphere, and the shooting-star is simply the light of that burning. The question how they can be burned so quickly and with so intense a light puzzled astronomers until it was seen that these phenomena could be fully accounted for by the mechanical theory of heat. It is now established that heat is only a certain form of motion; that hot air differs from cold air only in a more rapid vibration of its molecules, and that it communicates its heat to other bodies simply by striking them with its molecules, and thus setting their molecules in vibration. An exact measure has been found for this increase of heat, a velocity of 125 feet per second being shown to increase the temperature one degree, and higher velocities increasing temperature in proportion to the square of the velocity, as 4 degrees with a velocity of 250 feet, 16 degrees with one of 500 feet second, and so on. To find the heat to which a meteor is exposed in moving through our atmosphere we divide its velocity in feet per second by 125; the square of the quotient will give the temperature in degrees. Now, the earth moves in its orbit at the rate of 98,000 feet per second, and if it met a meteor at rest this velocity would create a rise in temperature corresponding to about 600,000 degrees, which largely exceeds any temperature that can be created on the earth, even by artificial means. If, as is commonly the case, the meteor is also moving to meet the earth, the increase of temperature will be even greater. It can not be said that the meteors are actually heated up to this temperature, but the air acts upon them as if it were heated to this point; that is, it burns them instantaneously with an enormous evolution of light and that, just as a furnace would if heated to a temperature of several thousand degrees. Nor are the light and heat of ordinary burning even mentionable in comparison with the fusing temperature, the intense blaze which such heat would create in the hardest, most non-combustible substance in nature. Now, if the meteor is so small and fusible that the heat can act upon it instantaneously, it is all dissipated in the upper regions of the atmosphere, and we have simply a shooting star or brilliant meteor. But sometimes these bodies are so large and firm that the heat has not time to penetrate into their interior, but spends itself melting and volatilizing the outer portions; the body then passes through the atmosphere and falls upon the earth as an aerolite, or meteoric stone. Sometimes when the body strikes the denser part of our atmosphere, the resistance is so great that the aerolite is broken to pieces with great violence, causing a tremendous detonation. This is usually spoken of as an explosion, but there is a good reason to believe that the loud sound and bursting of the stone are both due to its striking the rapidly moving air with an enormous velocity of its own.—Inter Ocean.

PISCATORIAL STATISTICS.

Universal Fish Culture Necessary to Supply the Harvest of the Sea.

From Turf, Field, and Farm.

If Mulhall's statistics are reliable, says an angling journal, there are not far short of 160,000 vessels engaged in Europe and North America in fishing. Between 600,000 and 700,000 men are employed in this industry, and the total annual product of fish is not far short of 1,500,000 tons. Few people realize the meaning of these latter figures. A ton of fish is equal in weight to about twenty-eight sheep; and hence, if Mulhall's estimate is approximately correct, a year's fish supply for ten European countries, included in this estimate, and the United States and Canada might be represented by 42,000,000 sheep. Of this amount the United Kingdom, Canada, Russia, and the United States alone aggregate 1,000,000 tons, equivalent to 28,000,000 sheep. It has been truly said that we talk in a metaphor of the harvest of the sea, but we have only lately been able to realize what the metaphor means. The Fisheries Exposition in London in 1883 did a great deal to encourage the study of marine biology, and it is with no small degree of satisfaction that we are able to say that in this much-needed work the United States ranks second to no other.

On the other hand, Great Britain, whose fisheries are of vital importance to her for food, has done little, and can not yet boast a laboratory on the seashore. Indeed, Professor Lankester, an eminent authority on marine biology, declares the British fishing industries still barbaric. The produce of the sea is recklessly seized, regardless of the consequences of the method, the time, or the extent of the depredations. According to English authority, the old proverb that there are as good fish in the sea as ever came out of it no longer holds good. The harvest of the sea in the future, like the harvest on land, needs cultivating. It was shown not long ago that in eight months twenty-eight boats engaged in the haddock fishery at Ryemouth, England, used 620 tons of mussels—about 47,000,000 mussels—in the capture of the haddock. Yet Professor Lankester says that no pains are taken to cultivate or preserve the mussel, and knowledge of its reproduction and growth is still incomplete, as it is of other bait. Soles are every year becoming scarcer, and oysters are becoming more difficult to obtain. At present, said the same authority, absolutely nothing is known of the spawning of the sole; the male fish is not even recognized. The reasons for oysters being scarce are not known, nor how to make them abundant. There are many economists in England who maintain that the haphazard and improvident methods of fishing are exhausting the fish supply of that country as sure as mining is exhausting the supply of coal. The supply of many kinds of fish is rapidly diminishing, and the only way to check the waste is by systematic study of the conditions which regulate the supply. It is undoubtedly true that "the world could not be fed if men sought their food on land with as little forethought and system as fishermen cast their nets into the sea?" To what extent these facts, which are causing considerable discussion in England, apply to the United States we are not prepared to say. The excellent work for many years of our fish commission exonerates our Government from the accusation of total neglect of this important industry.

THE great variety of colors and dyes obtained from common plants, growing so abundantly almost everywhere, is apparently known to but few persons except chemists. The well-known huckleberry or blueberry, when boiled down, with an addition of a little alum and a solution of coperas, will develop an excellent blue color; the same treatment, with a solution of nut-galls, produces a clean dark brown tint, while with alum, verdigris, and sal ammoniac various shades of purple and red can be obtained. The fruit of the elder, so frequently used for coloring spirits, will also produce a blue color when treated with alum. The privet, boiled in a solution of salt, furnishes a serviceable color, and the over-ripe berries yield a scarlet red. The seeds of the common burning bush (euonymous), when treated with sal ammoniac, produces a beautiful purple-red. The bark of the currant bush, treated with a solution of alum, produces a brown. Yellow is obtainable from the bark of the apple tree, the box, the ash, the buckthorn, the poplar, elm, etc., when boiled in water and treated with alum. A lively green is furnished by the broom corn.

FOR an American to marry in Mexico is a somewhat serious business. He must be three times married, twice in Spanish and once in English, besides having a public notice of his intention of marriage placed on a bulletin board for twenty days before the ceremony. This is the law. The public notice can be gotten around by the payment of a sum of money, but a residence of one month is necessary. The three ceremonies are the contract of marriage, the civil marriage—the only marriage recognized by law since 1858—and the usual but not obligatory church service. The first two must take place before a judge, and in the presence of at least four witnesses and the American Consul. The civil marriage is the legal form of marriage. These ceremonies are necessarily in Spanish. Most weddings are confirmed by a church service.

Ah! life holds few such moments as this.

"WHAT do these letters stand for?" asked a curious wife of her husband, as she looked at his Masonic seal. "Well, really, my love," he replied, encouragingly, "I presume it is because they can't sit down." She postponed further questioning.—Merchant Traveler.

"I DON'T wonder that people talk of the good old times," said the President of the gas company. "At one time it was dark for three days and three nights on a stretch in the land of Egypt. THE BAD BOY'S FRIEND.

Grandma is old and wrinkled and gray,
The bloom of her beauty has faded away,
But the words of affection still fall from her tongue,
And her heart is as warm as when she was young.
She's kind to the young, and it makes her heart glad
To shield the bad boy from the wrath of his dad.
Ah! let him be grateful to her while he may,
He'll lose a warm friend when she passes away.

A CURIOUS sect in Russia, called the "Folk of the Godly Nest," dig graves, which they call nests, in their earthen floors or gardens, into which they retire at certain times and "fast and see visions of saints and devils." It is a queer notion. In this country "folk" can see such visions, if not worse, by simply eating a mince-pie and a pickle before retiring to their nests.

"MRS. PRIMP is a beautiful woman, isn't she?" "Yes, she is quite handsome, but they say she paints." "Well, suppose she does, what of it?" "I don't like to see a woman resort to such dodges to make herself attractive." "I don't see why she shouldn't. When it has got to be all the rage to decorate potato-mashers, scoop-shovels, and so on, you can't blame a woman for giving herself a dab with the brush now and then."—Chicago Ledger.

LITTLE Charley was presented with one of these new brand of cheap watches which keep pretty good time, but consume half the existence of a boy in winding them up. The other morning he was four hours late for school, and when taken to task for his tardiness, he told his mother that he stopped on the way to wind up his watch, and before he had finished the job the scolars were coming home to dinner.—Norristown Herald.

M. DELAUNEY, a weather prophet of France, predicts several destructive earthquakes next year, and says that Saturn will present a part of his ring in the shape of a comet that will eclipse the famous comet of 1858. Delauney is not a very pleasant man to have around, but his prognostications might have been worse. He might have predicted that several French "stars" would appear in this country next year.—Norristown Herald.

Possibility of the Portiere.

The portiere is a creature of mischief. When I think of the conspicuous part which the nice-to-hide-behind curtain plays in novels, ancient and modern; the jealous lovers that have used the drapery as a covert, the mischief-makers who have found the folds of the noiseless portiere a sure refuge for their eavesdropping, I feel a sense of horror at the renaissance of the portiere.

A wooden door gives forth an honest "Look out!" sort of a bang, and the rattle of its knob or latch enables a young couple to have some sort of chance in preparing against unwelcome intrusion. But the portiere is a snake. Its sinuous folds betray neither the coming nor the departing one. In absolute silence the cruel father, the stern mother-in-law, the suspicious husband, can part its treacherous folds and stand revealed to the very people who most wish the intruder in the wilds of Africa. All the possibilities confront the man who removes his doors and substitutes the charming but treacherous portiere.—Washington Republic.

A CONNECTICUT genius has invented a bonnet for men, which he thinks will do away with all other kinds of headgear for the male part of humanity. It is a cross between a Kossuth hat and a Scotch cap, only much higher and more fantastic than either.

HE who betrays another's secret because he has quarreled with him was never worthy the sacred name of a friend. A breach of kindness on one side will not justify a breach of trust on the other.

"I have known many singers in my day and heard many stories about them and their voices, but I have never heard of but one case where a man willed his voice to another," said Mr. L. E. Gannon, the barytone, in talking with your correspondent recently. "'Sher' Campbell, the barytone, who with William T. Castle did so much in making English opera a success in this country," said Mr. Gannon, "was raised in Salem, Mass., the place where I hail from. Before Campbell and Castle began singing in opera they were ballad singers in a minstrel troupe, and excellent ones, too. On their first trip to the Pacific coast they were in a party which included John Hecker, who had a magnificent barytone voice. At that time both Campbell and Castle were tenor singers. Campbell's voice was even higher than that of Castle. Hecker got sick and had to be left on the way. He died soon afterward. He felt that he was going to die, and told all the members of the troupe that they would never see him again alive. As Campbell was leaving him he said: 'Johnny, you can leave me in your will that pin (a small diamond he wore), but what I would prize more, if you could will it to me, would be your voice. I am tired of singing tenor.' Well, the minstrel party went to San Francisco. While there word came that Johnny Hecker had died. Some weeks afterward Campbell received the diamond pin, which Johnny directed should be sent him. With it was a note stating that as he (Campbell) had asked for the pin it would be sent him after his (Hecker's) death. The note ended: 'I also will you my voice, which you also asked for.' Campbell was very much affected by the message. He talked of nothing else all that day and far into the night. When he woke the following morning he had a barytone voice. His voice had changed from a tenor to a barytone."—New York Herald.

Entering Upon a New Life.

"My dear," said an old man on his daughter's wedding morning, "a new and untried life is before you; you are putting away forever the light and careless existence of girlhood and taking upon yourself the serious responsibilities of the wife. Do you feel that you will approach the matrimonial altar tonight impressed with a full knowledge of the solemn vows you there will take, and——"

"Of course, papa; how absurdly you talk!" replied the young woman, "but we are to have a rehearsal this morning at 10, and I must n't keep them waiting. Good-by, papa."—New York Times.

Everything Goes Wrong

In the healthy mechanism when the liver gets out of order. Constipation, dyspepsia, contamination of the blood, imperfect assimilation, are certain to ensue. But it is easy to prevent these consequences, and remove their cause, by a course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which stimulates the biliary organ and regulates its action. The direct result is a disappearance of the pains beneath the ribs and through the shoulder blade, the nausea, headaches, yellowness of the skin, furred look of the tongue, and sour odor of the breath, which characterize liver complaint. Sound digestion and a regular habit of body are blessings also secured by the use of this celebrated restorative of health, which imparts a degree of vigor to the body which is its best guarantee of safety from malarial epidemics. Nerve weakness and over-tension are relieved by it, and it improves both appetite and sleep.

Hard Times in Persia.

It came to pass when King Ahasuerus returned from the skating rink that his royal bones ached and his temper was cross. Then cometh to him his chamberlain and saith:

"O King, great trouble is come upon us."

"Speak!" commanded the King. "What is it? Have the Judeans again revolted?"

"Worse, O Light of the World."

"Tell me instantly what it is."

"The water-pipes in the kitchen have burst, O King! Shall I send for the plumber?"

"Alas! This news is terrible!" quote Ahasuerus. "Bring me a second-hand suit of sackcloth and ashes. What shall we do for funds? The last levy of 10,000,000 talents on the people of Persia I had hoped would pay the summer's ice bill, and leave something over for cigarettes, but if the plumber is so early getting in his work, another 10,000,000 must be raised instanter."

And he clothed himself in sackcloth and ashes.—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

What Would the World Do without woman; asks the cynic who starts out to say something new on this oft-treated subject. Of course, the human element of the world would not exist without woman, so the question is gratuitous. It would have been far more sensible to ask: What would the world do without the salvation of woman, without a panacea for her physical ills and a cure for her peculiar diseases? In a word, what would the world do without Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription," the great remedy for female weakness? It is indispensable for the ills of womankind.

How to Crystallize Grasses.

Take one pound of alum, pulverize and dissolve in one quart of hot water, but do not boil it; pour the solution into a deep earthen jar and let it stand on the back of the stove till it is about lukewarm. Fasten the grasses with strings to a stick and lay it across the top of the jar, having the grasses entirely submerged in the liquid. Put the jar in a cool place and do not permit the grasses to be moved for twelve hours, and then take them out and let them drain. When the water of the solution has quite evaporated the blades of grass will be quite covered with the crystals of alum. For blue crystals add half a pound of indigo; for yellow boil a few saffron leaves in a little water and mix it with the alum solution; for pink or red add some red dye. Prussian red is the best. Be sure that the grasses are quite dry before putting them into the crystallizing solution. If the first immersion does not crystallize sufficiently heat the solution and dip a second time, and so on until the result is quite satisfactory.—Inter Ocean.

Nightmare,

sick-headache, depression of spirits, and want of ambition are symptoms of a diseased liver. The lungs, stomach, and bowels are all in sympathy. Life is only a living death. Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" acts upon the torpid liver, and effectually removes all these difficulties and disorders. Nervous feelings, gloomy forebodings, and irritability of temper all disappear.

Selection of the Fittest.

Great possibilities have been attributed by men of science to the process of selection and survival of the fittest; but in railway traveling there is one other thing to be observed, of equal, if not greater, importance. That is, selection of the quickest. There is no more marked example of this truth than that afforded by the Danville Route, to Florida and New Orleans. The Danville crosses the Ohio River on the new bridge, near Evansville, and is thus able to carry its passengers from Chicago to Nashville in sixteen hours—one-third less than any competing line. With this advantage at the start, it is, of course, an easy matter to maintain the lead to the Gulf, and the Danville does it. Here, you see, is an opportunity offered Southern travelers, of selection of the fittest and quickest. Palace Buffet Cars and the highest rate of speed have contributed their share to the popularity of this line. No change of cars to Nashville, and but one change to New Orleans and all points in Florida. Send a two-cent stamp to William Hill, General Passenger Agent, Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad, Chicago, and get a copy of the new illustrated work, "Florida—A Story."

The Great German Physician.

The remarkable phase in the practice of Dr. Peter W. Schmidt (frequently called Dr. Pete) is, he never asked one to describe their disease but tells each one their trouble without asking a question. His success is phenomenal. His practice enormous. He is sought after by hundreds wherever he goes, because he cures when every other physician and remedy have failed. He has allowed his great medicines, Golden Seal Bitters and Lung Food for Consumption, to be offered to the suffering, and we assert without fear of successful contradiction that there is no disease they will not cure. Thousands of bottles have been sold. Thousands of broken-down and discouraged invalids saved. Send to Golden Seal Bitters Company, Holland City, Mich., for Facts for the Million! Free.

Dr. W. D. Wright, Cincinnati, Ohio, sends the subjoined professional endorsement: "I have prescribed DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS in a great number of cases, and always with success. One case in particular was given up by several physicians, who had been called in for consultation with myself. The patient had all the symptoms of confirmed Consumption—cold night sweats, hectic fever, harassing coughs, etc. He commenced immediately to get better, and was soon restored to his usual health. I found DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS the most valuable expectorant for breaking up distressing coughs and colds."

TREATED FREE.
DR. H. H. GREEN & SONS,
Specialists for Thirteen Years Past.
Have treated Dropsy and its complications with the most wonderful success; use vegetable remedies, entirely harmless. Remove all symptoms of dropsy in not to two weeks.
Cases pronounced hopeless by the best of physicians.
From the first dose the symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two-thirds of all symptoms are removed.
Some may cry humbug without knowing anything about it. Remember, it does not cost you anything to realize the merits of our treatment for yourself. In ten days the difficulty of breathing is relieved, the pulse regular, the urinary organs made to discharge their natural supply, sleep is restored, the swelling all or nearly gone, the strength increased, and appetite made good. We have constantly cured cases of long standing—cases that have been given up and pronounced incurable—after using from three to five bottles, and the patient in the meantime unable to leave bed, sometimes for days and weeks at a time. Give age and history of case. Name sex, how long afflicted, how badly swollen and where, are bowels costive, have legs bursted and drained of water. Send for free pamphlet, containing testimonials, questions, etc.

Around the County.

Ironton.

The sleighing is good. Wood is coming in fast in the yard of the Pine Lake Iron Co. Their kilns are about full.

The Pine Lake Lumber Co. has a large pile of logs on the beach. They had a scaler here two weeks but he leaves to-day.

There was no preaching last Sunday at the church. The minister failed to put in his appearance; but Bro. Bird supplied the pulpit.

There will be a meeting at the school house at Ironton, Wednesday evening, Jan. 26 for the purpose of organizing a liberal society. Everyone is cordially invited to attend.

Our prominent young druggist succeeded in getting to Charlevoix last Saturday night to see his "best girl." He has worn a smile on his face ever since.

The society Willing Workers now meet in one of the rooms of the hotel every Saturday afternoon, to work.

Mrs. Walter Manney left for Lincoln, Neb., to visit friends. She will remain about three months.

Al. F. Draper and A. R. Upright passed through town to-day on their way to East Jordan.

Prof. Howe's singing school is under quite a headway.

Two years ago Geo. Robb was a well-to-do farmer; to-day, a broken down old man. He is making arrangements to go to the soldiers' home in Grand Rapids, having lost all of his property through domestic difficulties and bad management. Mr. Robb was shot through the head in the war and at times his mind seemed clouded.

Wm. Holland who was badly hurt by a falling tree on the 7th inst, is still very low for he was injured internally.

Rev. Mr. Parmenter addressed the G. A. R. boys and their friends Friday evening. Saturday evening, the 23d, they meet again to further consider establishing a post in Ironton.

Pine Lake and South Arm are navigable (to stage coaches) in all directions. Mercury high, sleighing good, and barometer indications for fair weather.

Because of a misnnderstanding, Rev. C. F. VanAuken's appointment for Sunday afternoon was not filled. It seems he invited Rev. Mr. Strang to fill his appointments, meaning Charlevoix and Ironton, while he was absent in Reed City. Mr. Strang believed he was filling all appointments by preaching in Charlevoix. We must ask our minister to be a little more explicit in the future. Mr. Strang will be with us next Sunday, at 3 o'clock, P. M., if Mr. VanAuken does not return as he expected.

Clarion.

Weather warm and plenty of snow.

The Clarion literary society has been reorganized, and will have literary exercises every Friday evening hereafter.

The bowl factory of A. K. Smith & Co. has received 6,000 blocks within the past six weeks. They have also contracted for a large number to be delivered on the banks of Bear Lake. These they will try to bring to the factory during the summer in boats. This will enable them to run at full capacity winter and summer.

Blood Bros.' mill and factory, now completed, is one of the largest in northrern Michigan. They will em ploy about 25 men.

Johnson's mill is also running steadily and is sawing some of the finest basswood we ever saw.

Clarion is to have a new M. E. church in the near future. Mr. L. Babcock, with his characteristic liberality, has donated a lot for the same. The trustees are gentlemen of push and vigor, who never fail, hence we think the church an assured fact.

A. K. Smith says that it is all he can do to furnish himself with rubbers.

Clarion boasts of a good hotel and four first class boarding houses, all with high sounding names.

Some sickness at present, but not very severe.

Mrs. Wm. Johnson is quite sick.

Not a death in Melrose township the past year.

W. C. Niles has bought a saw mill from parties at Boyne Falls, and will move it to this township.

A. A. Foote has returned from southern Michigan, bringing with him a fine team.

Our cemetery has been surveyed and platted, and it is a credit to our place.

The boys enjoyed a chicken roast last Saturday night,—so we are informed,—and several chicken roosts suffered in consequence thereof. They made a raid up to uncle John Vansaw's about 1 o'clock, but the good old man happened to be sitting near a window reading his Bible, and espied them, and the way he laid aside the good book and dispersed that crowd was a caution.

J. R. Huss contemplates a visit to Indiana this week.

Charles Vansaw and Melissa Gokee married last week.

Elevators at Detroit are com filled with wheat, so that grain is greatly retarded for want room.

Marion.

Rev. J. T. Iddings preached at Black's school house last Monday evening.

Mr. James Adams is getting out timber for a large barn.

Mr. John Ward is improving in health.

Mr. Wm. Black, our school inspector, has lately been visiting the schools in his district.

Farmers around here are, for the most part, very busy hauling logs, of which the Pine Lake Co. get nearly all. Wood is not moving very freely this winter.

There is now and then a surprise party out here to break the stillness of the otherwise monotonous evenings.

We now have an established road on the section line direct from the county road to Johnson's school house.

The firm of McIntosh & Lynde are running their mill every day. They have a new Emerson & Smith planer toothed saw which works to perfection. The mill has a stock of 150 M now, which they intend to increase to 400 M before spring. The above firm are getting out timber for a barn to be built on the Upright place.

One of our young men was chased by a wildcat recently while returning home from a visit to his best girl. That is his story but some are inclined to think there is another fellow who might have made the mill man think there was more than one "wild cat" around. At any rate rumor saith said mill man's hair was standing straight on end when he arrived home.

Burgess.

The timber business is just booming.

15 teams are busy hauling logs into Whitford & Crane's mill.

E. M. Clark is taking all the timber of the Sam Oney place.

J. J. Bennet has bought 160 acres of timbered land just south of Lewis' farm and has a large force of men and teams getting out logs on it.

The friends of Mrs. C. Whitford will be sorry to learn that she is quite sick. Dr. Lewis is attending her.

J. A. Bacot has entirely regained his health, and proposes to take an active part in our township affairs the coming spring. He is one of our heaviest tax payers.

Every taxpayer in Hayes should consider every item on his tax receipt and see where his money has gone to.

Miscellaneous.

Cadillac is to have a new roller process flouring mill.

Boston has caught the tobogganing craze. It has a club of 200.

Tobogganning on the part of females is interdicted by catholocism.

The new salt well at Manistique is 1,600 feet deep and still going down.

Big Rapids folks are making arrangements for a fourth of July celebration.

The recent poultry exhibition in Battle Creek, is the largest ever held in Michign.

Judge Fallas was called away yesterday by the illness of his father.—Cadillac Democrat.

R. Rigg, of Petoskey, has bought the flouring mill at Baldwin and will remove to that place.

The discovery of potter's clay in Lake county, has created considerable excitement there

The Cadillac Democrat claims to have the largest circulation of any paper in Wexford county.

Theodore York, of Cheboygan, committed suicide a few days ago. The jury's verdict was temporary insanity.

Kalamazoo has shipped 200,000 tons of celery during the last six months, bringing the growers from $300 to $500 per acre.

John B. Gough is again on the platform for temperance, after a three months vacation trying to become accustomed to a new set of teeth.

The ostrich farm at Los Angeles, Cal., is proving a grand success. $6,000 worth of feathers have been sold from the 21 birds during the last 7 months.

Cadillac village schools are so crowded as to make evening sessions necessary to accommodate some of the classes. Why not build more houses and hire more teachers?

It is estimated that the lumber left on the dock at Muskegon when navigation closed will not exceed 100,000,000 feet as compared to 250,000,000 feet at the close last year.

The rise of themometer saved the city of Cleveland from a water famine. Three out of four of the pipes by which the city is supplied from the lake, were frozen up for three days.

The officers of the U. S. senate have forwarded to Mrs. Hendricks the inkstand used by her husband in his private room at Washington. It is a massive unique work of art worth $300.

Can't fool Cadillac any more with the yarn that the mysterious light seen in southwest just after sunset is a reflection of the Chicago electric sun. She is rejoiced to know that it is from the planet Venus. An enterprising citizen climbed a tree and discovered the fact.—Kalamazoo Telegraph.

It is reported that Joseph Bushy is soon to receive a pension with back pay amounting to $1,728. We think this is the proper treatment Uncle Joe should receive at the hands of Uncle Sam.

For appreciation of the necessities of small boys the school board of Kalkaska takes the ribbon. Under its direction an artificial hill has been built on the school ground for coasting purposes.

The heirs of Dr. J. C. Ayer, of Lowell, Mass., have 175,000 acres of military road lands in the upper peninsula. Upon this tract it is reported that there are 500,000,000 feet of pine, besides iron, copper, and silver mines.

Statistics show that during the year 1885, there were 1,808 murders and 978 suicides, committed in the United States; and yet our per cent of murders and suicides, considering our population, is much lower than in any foreign country.

A new industry has been begun in the Ionia House of Correction this fall. Sixteen knitting machines have been placed in the tailor shop and when the boys get used to working them there will be fifty dozen pairs of socks turned out daily.

Mr. Sly, manager of the Petoskey Lime Co,, has invented a new hard finish and will engage in the manufacture of the same at the corner of Fulton and Ionia streets under the style of the Combination Hard Finish Co.—Michigan Tradesman.

Suspense is agonizing! The editor of the Kalkaska Leader, after hanging from a nail over the eaves of his house by the "basement of his pantaloons for what seemed like half a century," thinks chimney sweeping should be done only by professionals.

Montgomery Thorpe, father of Col. T. J. Thorpe, died last week at Cadillac, at the ripe old age of 93. Mr. Thorpe was one of the pioneers of Wexford county, and built the first log house ever erected there, a structure that still stands.—Kalkaska Leader.

Jackson city shows a building record for 1885 of $501,660 including $45,000 improvements on the state prisons, and challenges the state to show equal prosperity in a city of equal size. Kalamazoo accepts the challenge and foots up $526,950. Both are good records.

Kalkaska county appears to be very unfortunate in its selection of town treasurers. Nearly every year some one of them skips out with the funds. This year it is a Mr. Smith, treasurer of the town of Glade, who is reported missing with three thousand dollars of the people's money.—Traverse Eagle.

A satisfactory item in the commercial reports of the past year is furnished in the statement that while the failures of the year were only 3 per cent less than in 1884, the liabilities show a decrease of nearly 50 per cent. This is an unmistakable indication of a revival of business prosperity.

Traverse City is very much elated over the electric light recently put into the northern asylum located there. The wiring was a difficult job as the work was not begun until the building was nearly finished; but the skill of Mr. Bateman overcame all difficulties. The building required 132,500 feet of wire.

E. A. Stowe, of the Grand Rapids Tradesman, has formed a partnership with W. N. Fuller, wood engraver, and job printer, and has established a job printing business in connection with the Tradesman. Fuller's reputation as an engraver is such as to give the new firm the inside track for commercial printing.

"During the last cold snap, a great change has resulted in the lumbering regions of northern Michigan," said a prominent lumber merchant recently. "Should this cold weather continue with the present fall of snow up north, there need be no apprehension as to all of the logs reaching the streams. The output will more likely exceed that of last winter. Reports from across the lake are that the late storm gave the lumbermen all the 'beautiful' they want, and in some localities a little more so. The prospects in general are decidedly bright, and a rise in price is looked for in the spring."—Ex.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the condition of a certain mortgage, made by Mary Blackbird to John A. Bacot, dated October 3d, A. D. 1884, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, on the 3d day of October, A. D. 1884, in liber 8 of mortgages, on page 522, which said mortgage was on the 22d day of December, 1884, assigned by said John A. Bacot to Frederick W. Mayne, said assignment being on record in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 10 of mortgages on page 610, and on the 14th day of December 1885, was assigned by said Frederick W. Mayne to Hugh Miller, said assignment being recorded in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 13 of mortgages, on page 146, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of One hundred and ninety six and 15-100 dollars, as principal and interest, and no suit or proceedings at law having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof. Now, therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and the statute in such case made and provided, notice is hereby given that on Saturday, the 13th day of March, A. D. 1886, at one o'clock in the afternoon, I shall sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the town hall in the village of East Jordan, (that being the place where the Circuit Court for Charlevoix County is holden,) the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with ten per cent interest, and all legal costs, together with an attorney's fee of fifteen dollars, covenanted for therein, the premises being described in said mortgage as all that parcel of land situate in the township of Hayes, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, and known and described as follows: The south west quarter (¼) of the south west quarter (¼) of section thirty-six (36) township thirty four (34) north of range seven (7) west, containing forty acres according to the United States survey.

Dated Charlevoix, Mich., Dec. 15, 1885.

HUGH MILLER,
Assignee of Mortgagee.

FREDERICK W. MAYNE,
Attorney for Assignee of Mortgagee.

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage, made and dated the tenth day of September, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four, executed by Henning Frizzell to the Pine Lake Iron Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, and doing business in the County of Charlevoix, in the State of Michigan, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of the said County of Charlevoix, in Liber 11 of mortgages at page 11, on the 18th day of April, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-five, at one o'clock in the afternoon, and the same is now owned by the said Pine Lake Iron Company. And whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of Fifty-Five Dollars and Twenty-two cents, principal and interest, which sum is a part of the purchase price of the premises herein described, and a further sum of fifteen dollars provided by law as an attorney's fee in the foreclosure of said mortgage, which is the whole amount claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage, and no suit or proceedings at law or in chancery having been instituted to recover the debt now remaining secured by the said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in the said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises herein described at public auction to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in the township of South Arm, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, which is the place of holding the circuit court for said county, on Friday, the 2d day of April next, at twelve o'clock meridian, which premises are described in the said mortgage as follows, to wit: Lots twenty (20) and twenty-one (21) in block number twelve (12) in the Pine Lake Iron Co.'s plat of Ironton, town of Eveline, county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan.

Dated December 30th, A. D. 1885.

Temperance Column.

Conducted by a Committee of the W. C. T. U.

Those Wild Beasts.

In the Witness of the 24th inst., "A. R. C.," in treating of "The Great Setback," quotes this sentence: "I am too good a temperance man to be a prohibitionist." This brings to my mind a modern fable, which I beg leave to present to the public through the columns of your paper. It runs something in this way: A man was standing by a large pump, with one hand on the handle and the other grasping a scoop; beneath the spout of the pump was a roomy tub; near that two casks, one bearing a chemical inscription, and the other marked very plainly "Chalk." The man is supposed be a city milkman who is preparing his morning's supply of fresh milk. Suddenly he is seen to drop the scoop in a fright and rush to the house crying, "Mary! come quick bring the gun, there are two wild beasts coming into the yard." Mary, who is possessed of all the curiosity common to her sex, will not bring the gun until she sees the brutes. She runs to the window and looks down the lane. Now, by virtue of reduced rates, Mary has been to the country and had an opportunity to study into the mysteries of the animal kingdom. At the sight of the beasts she sent forth a peal of laughter. "Why, John, you dance, that only a cow and a calf." Here the story ends, and be it said to the credit of the milkman that it is a fable only. Now for the application. In christian circles there are a great many men who are playing the role of the city milkman. They have been temperance men all their lives, but are alarmed when they see a prohibition cow followed by a smaller beast of the same species, the third party calf, coming into the field and on to the platform, and they cry "Shoot the brutes." It often happens that they will become reconciled to the cow, but not to the calf. Oh, no! it must be put to death at once, while it is still young. They can never tolerate it, and why? Simply because it is too spry for them. Just as sure as they are having a good time at a temperance meeting, a some one by chance says "local option" or "legal suasion," that awful calf is up jumping around, flinging hind heels in the face of the persons present, and if there is a local politician in the house the frisky young thing is sure to tread on his corns, which, by the way, is the tenderest portion of the politician's make-up, his heart not excepted. The christian who is not a temperance man whose principles have not enough backbone in them to stand a little politics is no good. What we want is earnest, sincere men for an honest work. Rather let us nourish the prohibition calf by our votes to a full grown cow, and then we will sweep the land clean of the greatest curse that ever rested upon it. May God hasten the day when every honest man will come out on the side of right and dare to vote for "God, home, and native land!" The temperance work as one man, is the power that is rapidly scattering the darkness of high license ($5:00 per year) to make way for absolute prohibition.—Selected.

Mr. Tilden's letter to Speaker Carlisle contains a sentence worth special notice. It is to the effect that to reduce the revenue to make whiskey cheaper to the consumer and leave our coast defences unprotected, is a solecism. Most true. Yet the whiskey ring is mighty, and a foreign war seems far off. Whiskey is not the only foe of coast defenses, but of home defenses. It is an enemy already here, more deadly than any foreign power. For the government to do anything to make whiskey cheaper or more accessible to the consumer is a solecism.—Christian Advocate.

Doubtless some sentimentalist will arise to say "the poor fellow was drunk and did not know what he was doing," and by such sympathy attempt to steal from the halter the neck of Tom King, who spent his hours of Christmas festivities beating his wife to death. The time is coming when "he was drunk" will be a crime, and punishable. "The poor drunkard", has too long been the recipient of sympathy instead of punishment.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

The total cost of the liquor drank is $557,500,000 per year, and the average expense per head of our entire population would be ten dollars. Last year $316,000,000 worth of beer was consumed, and there was more money sunk in spirits by $346,000,000 than was paid for boots, shoes and cotton goods. The amount expended on drink yearly would sustain six million people.—Chicago Times.

A citizen of Lynn, Mass., has donated $90,000 for the enforcement of the laws against liquor selling, and the trustees of the fund are now prosecuting violators of the law.

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., Jan. 21, 1886.

A Faithful Executive.

On Christmas, 1884, a letter from President Cleveland was made public in which he expressed the determination to carry out in good faith the civil service law, and beyond that to do what might lie in his power to abolish the spoils system, to curb and discourage the strife for patronage and place, to establish and maintain a non-partizan civil service, and to base appointments to office on character and fitness rather than upon "persistent importunity or self-solicited recommendations."

A little over one year has elapsed since that letter was indited, and ten months of that time has been passed by Mr. Cleveland in the highest office within the gift of the people. We find in a recent issue of the New York Herald some interesting information as to how the promises above referred to have been carried out. "There are," the Herald states, "over four thousand places to which the president can appoint only with the advice and consent of the senate. Of these four thousand places, all filled by republicans when he came in, he has "suspended" only six hundred and forty-three to put new men in their places. That is to say, of four thousand he has made only six hundred and forty-three removals." There are 49,500 fourth class postoffices, all non presidential appointments, and of these only about 7,000 have been changed under ten months of democratic administration. Under previous republican administrations not a single democrat ever held one of these offices, a fact which effectually disposes of the charge that President Cleveland has been engaged in making a "clean sweep," that he has spent the last ten months mostly in removing republicans and filling their places with democrats. In corroboration of this view the Herald says:

> By his cautious and conservative course the president has not only avoided a mischievous and dangerous disturbance of the public peace, but he has, as republican partisans confess, coerced the great number of office-holders whom he has not removed to cease to be what in his letter he rightly called "offensive partisans and unscrupulous manipulators of local party management." A republican senator recently confessed this in Washington, saying:
> Compared him, he has completely demoralized the republicans in my state, and has broken up our organization by retaining in office some of the most active politicians we have. Of course, they want to hang on as long as they can, and have therefore, been afraid to do anything to help lest they might be removed for offensive partisanship. Our state committee sent out letters to all of the men who have usually looked after the canvass, and of the seventeen hundred to whom they were addressed only about six hundred replied, and some of those merely stated that they were unable to furnish the information desired, because their entire time was required by their official duties. We never received such an excuse before, and a similar circular sent out a year previous to the same men was responded to almost unanimously. I wish the president would dismiss every blessed republican now holding office in my state. Then we would have five or six hundred more active party workers than we have now.

It is true that many good democrats who adhere to the principle that the offices should all be filled with men in political sympathy with the administration, oppose this policy of the president and are as disposed to criticise him for "going too slow." Yet it must in the face of the figures as to appointments herein presented, be admitted that Mr. Cleveland has been thoroughly consistent, that he has been faithful to the pledges made before and since his election, and that his course has redeemed the people of both parties, in a large measure, from the bondage of political bosses. However much democrats may differ with the president as to his policy it cannot be truthfully charged that he has proved recreant to the policy he pursued while governor of New York, and which he outlined when he consented to accept a higher position. That policy contributed largely to his nomination and election, and those who expected him to depart from it have evidently mistaken the temper of the man.—Saginaw Courier.

Is is earnestly to be hoped that Michigan's representatives in both branches of congress will exert themselves strenuously during the present session to procure favorable action in relation to the improvments of the Great Lake water route, for which appropriations will be required. The growth of our lake commerce in the past few years has been enormous, and the general government can hardly do too much in the direction of rendering navigation cheaper and safer on the chain of lakes composing this magnificent water-way. If congress appreciates the national character of the work to be provided for by appropriation, it is hardly conceivable that it will deal with the matter in a niggardly spirit. To enlighten their colleagues on this point should be regarded as a sacred duty by our representatives and senators, who can in no other way render their constituents so great a service as by procuring the action desired on the bills providing for the improvement of the lake route.—Mining Journal.

A Still Day in Autumn.

I love to wander through the woodlands hoary,
In the soft light of an autumnal day,
When summer gathers up her robes of glory,
And like a dream of beauty fades away.

How through each loved, familiar path she lingers,
Serenely smiling through the golden mist,
Tinting the wild grape with her dewy fingers,
Till the cool emerald turns to amethyst.

Kindling the fitful stars of the hazel, shining
To light the gloom of Autumn's moldering buds;
With hoary plumes the clematis entwining,
Where o'er the rock her withered garland falls.

Warm lights are on the sleepy uplands, waning
Beneath soft clouds, along the horizon rolled,
Till the slant sunbeams, through their fringes gaining,
Bathe all the hills in melancholy gold.

The moist winds breathe of crisped leaves and flowers
In the damp hollows of the woodland sown,
Mingling the freshness of autumnal showers
With spicy airs from cedar aligys blown.

Beside the brook, and on the numbered meadow
Where yellow fern-tufts deck the faded ground,
With folded lids beneath their palmy shadow,
The gentian nods, in dewy slumbers bound.

Upon these soft fringed lids the bee sits broading,
Like a fond lover forth to pay farewell;
Or with shut wings through silken folds intruding,
Creeps near her heart, his drowsy tale to tell.

The little birds are in the bushes busy
Flitting necessary along from spray to spray,
Storing as seed want or ungrown but tiny
Seeds in their purest wings and softly glides away.

The scentless flowers, in the warm sunlight dreaming
Forget to breathe their fullness of delight;
And where in the trance of woods soft airs are teeming
Still as the swoon of the Summer night.

So, in my heart, sweet, unworded feeling
Stirs, like the wind upon the yellow shield,
Through all these quiet matters stealing,
Yet finds no words its tender grace to tell.

—Sarah Helen Whitman.

JACKSON AND BOONE.

This quaint little town, nestling among the hills of east Tennessee, is the oldest in the state and was once, says a correspondent of the New York Tribune at Jonesboro, Tenn., the seat of the territorial government. It was settled in 1779, and is now the county seat of Washington county, which was then a part of North Carolina, and extended as far west as the Mississippi river. In the logs of an old stable, still standing in the middle of the town, is to be seen a remnant of the old court-house in which, during the first years of the present century, Andrew Jackson sat as presiding judge, and other less noted celebrities appeared as counsel for the enterprising pioneers. The present temple of justice is more pretentious, but some of the first records of the county are still preserved in it. In looking over the musty volumes to-day, a Tribune correspondent came upon the following remarkable record, which is reproduced word for word. The docket from which it is taken extended from Feb. 15, 1788, to Feb. 28, 1798, the date of this particular case being Feb. 22, 1890. It shows with what great severity horse-thieves were treated by the intrepid pioneers:

State of North Carolina } Washington County } The jury are agreed } We, the jury, find the prisoner guilty of horse-stealing.
John Wilson & Jas. Fagan, Esqrs., Coroners.

Being called to the bar and asked what they had to say why sentence of death should not be passed upon them, say nothing.

It is therefore ordered that the said John Wilson and James Fagan be conducted to the public stocks for the space of one hour, that each of them have both his ears nailed to the pillory and severed from their heads. That they receive at the public whipping-post thirty-nine lashes upon their bare backs, well laid on, and that each of them be thereupon bound to their good behavior, and that the sheriff of Washington county put this sentence into execution between the hours of 12 and 4 this afternoon.

Along the margin of the docket is significantly written: "Sentence executed." Such lawbreakers were always obnoxious to Tennesseeans and less than twenty years ago horse-stealing was a capital offense in this state. The same dockets in later years bear the bold signature of Andrew Jackson, presiding judge, in more places than one. In the latter part of the past century he was admitted to the practice of the law in Washington county, and a few years later he was elevated to judgeship. The memory of "Old Hickory" is still green in the minds of the older residents of Jonesboro, and they delight to narrate reminiscences of the intrepid warrior.

A tradition showing at the same time the remarkable courage and true democracy of the man is as follows: Russell Bean, probably the first white child born in what is now the state of Tennessee, grew up to be a great Indian-fighter and a very desperate man. Along in 1802 he made a protracted excursion into the Indian country, and returning found a new occupant of the cradle at his hreside, which the length of his absence led him to believe had no claims on his paternity. The discovery naturally incensed him and in a fit of anger he brutally cut off the child's ears, remarking, as he did so: "I want to be able to distinguish the brat from my legitimate children." This barbarity greatly incensed sober-minded people of the new settlement, and when court assembled an indictment was found against him for maiming the child. Bean defied the sheriff, and, proclaiming that he would never be taken alive, intrenched himself among the chinquapin bushes on Greene hill, which rises at the south of the town. He was well armed, and the sheriff and his posse were afraid to attempt his capture, although they had him entirely surrounded. That officer, not wanting to kill Bean and much less to sacrifice any of his own men, repaired to the court room, where Judge Jackson was presiding, for instructions. The facts having been reported to him, Jackson said: "Enforce the law. Bring in your man, either dead or alive. If you have not men enough to do it, summon them. Summon anybody and everybody; summon the court if necessary."

"In that case, judge," said the sheriff, "I will summon you."

"All right," replied Jackson; "I think we can bring him. You need not summon any more."

Having adjourned the court and secured his pistols, he strode rapidly up the hill, and was soon confronting the desperado single-handed. That worthy discreetly surrendered, admitting afterward that he "saw shoot in Jackson's eye." As the story goes, the prisoner, who that morning had boasted that he was "a stallion that no one could ride," was taken down the hill and secured under a wagon-bed upon which a huge stone was with difficulty placed. In the morning he crawled out from his restricted prison house and was taken before the judge. The memory of the oldest inhabitant fails to recall what punishment Bean was made to suffer, and no record remains.

Six miles from Jonesboro, on what is called Boone creek, stands a huge beech tree, in the bark of which is still legible the inscription:

D. Boone killed bear on a tree; and under this is a date not legible, but supposed to be 1770. Daniel Boone, who hunted through this country previous to the first settlement, was a warm personal friend of Col. John Sevier, the famous "Nolichucky Jack," who was the first governor of the state of Frankland, or the present state of Tennessee. Gov. Sevier's mansion, built of logs, with portholes for defense during Indian attacks, still stands a few miles from this historic town.

A Prairie Dog Village.

Staying over night and the next day at Rawlins, I made the sixty miles to Fort Fred Steele next morning before breakfast, there being a very good road between the two places. This fort stands on the west bank of the North Platte river, and a few miles west at the river I rode through the first prairie dog town encountered in crossing the continent from the west, though I shall see plenty of these interesting little fellows during the next 500 miles. These animals sit near their holes and excitedly bark at whatever goes past. Never before have they had an opportunity to bark at a bicycle, and they seem to be making the most of their opportunity. I see at this village none of the small speckled owls, which, with the rattlesnakes, make themselves so much at home in the prairie dogs' comfortable quarters, but I see them farther east. These three strangely assorted companions may have warm affections toward each other; but I am inclined to think the great bond of sympathy that binds them together is the tender regard entertained by the owl and rattlesnake for the nice, tender young prairie pups that come at intervals to increase the joys and cares of the elder animals. I am now getting on to the famous Laramie plains, and Elk mountain looms up not over ten miles to the south—a solid, tow ring mass of black rocks and dark pine forests, that stands out bold and distinct from the surrounding mountain chain as though conscious of its own strength and superiority. A snow storm is raging on its upper slopes, obscuring that portion of the mountain; but the dark forest-clad slopes near the base are in plain view, and also the rugged peak which elevates its white-crowned head above the storm, and reposes peacefully in the bright sunlight in striking contrast to the warring elements lower down. I have heard old hunters assert that this famous "landmark of the Rockies" is hollow, and that they have heard wolves howling inside the mountain; but one of these old hunters see and hear strange things.—Outing.

Winter Evening Reading.

It is a delightful way to pass the long Winter evenings, when the children are old enough for it, for the family to take up the plays of Shakspeare, assigning the various parts to different members of the family. If your own circle be not sufficiently large, call in your neighbors. Let the young people be made to read correctly, intelligently and well; thus you are able to accomplish several things. An ease of manner in reading is acquired, a correct ear, a knowledge of the best use of words, and naturally follows a love of the highest literature. Then when it becomes possible for the children to see some one of these familiar plays on the stage, take them yourselves. Thus they will easily see that the theater is to you a place where something good may be seen and heard; possibly you may be able to form so correct a taste in early life as to preclude all desire for inferior actors and plays. Set your intellectual standard high and try to keep yourselves in sympathy with the children in every way, and they will have no desire to conceal anything; the book, the amusement, the friend, will be all the more enjoyable because of the presence of the father and mother into their inner life.—Mrs. Ellen Bass Moore, in "Good Housekeeping."

Concise Record of the Week.

FORTY-NINTH CONGRESS.

THE HOAR Presidential bill passed the House of Representatives on the 15th inst., by a vote of 183 to 77, precisely as it came from the Senate. Following are the provisions of the bill: "In case of removal, death, resignation, or inability of both the President and Vice President of the United States, the Secretary of State, or, if there be none, or in case of his removal, death, resignation, or inability, then the Secretary of the Treasury; or if there be none; or in case of his removal, death, resignation, or inability, then the Secretary of War; or if there be none, or in case of his removal, death, resignation, or inability, then the Attorney General; or if there be none, or in case of his removal, death, resignation, or inability, then the Postmaster General; or, if there be none, or in case of his removal, death, resignation, or inability, then the Secretary of the Navy; or if there be none, or in case of his removal, death, resignation, or inability, then the Secretary of the Interior shall act as President until the disability of the President or Vice President is removed, or a President shall be elected: Provided, that whenever the powers and duties of the office of President of the United States shall devolve upon any of the persons named herein, if Congress be not then in session, or if it would not meet in accordance with law within twenty days thereafter, it shall be the duty of the person upon whom said powers and duties shall devolve to issue a proclamation convening Congress in extraordinary session, giving twenty days' notice of the time of meeting. SEC. 2. That the preceding section shall only be held to ascribe and apply to such officers as shall have been appointed by the advice and with the consent of the Senate to the offices therein named, and such as are eligible to the office of President under the Constitution, and not under impeachment by the House of Representatives at the time the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon them respectively. Section 3. That Sections 146, 147, 148, 149, and 150 of the Revised Statutes are hereby repealed." There was no session of the Senate on the 15th. At a caucus of Republican Senators it was decided to call upon the President for papers throwing light upon causes of removals or appointments. The position was assumed that the Senate has a right to these papers, and from them should judge what course to take in the matter of confirmations.

THE judicial salary bill, giving United States Judges $5,000 a year, and prohibiting them from appointing their relatives to office in their courts, passed the Senate Jan. 18. Mr. Cullom submitted a bill regulating interstate commerce, which provides for the appointment of five commissioners. Mr. Frye offered a resolution to provide for a commission to settle the fisheries question. This led to a sharp debate, in the course of which Messrs. Frye, Edmunds, Hoar, and Dawes attacked President Cleveland for extending the Canadian fisheries treaty. Mr. Morgan defended the President. Mr. Ingalls presented a resolution asking the Secretary of the Treasury to state what proportion of the bonds lately called in is held by national banks as a basis for circulation. Mr. Eustis addressed the Senate on the silver question. The President, he said, had told Congress that there was not enough silver now in circulation to cause any uneasiness; that the whole amount now coined might, after a time, be absorbed by the people without apprehension, but that it was the "ceaseless stream that threatened to overflow," etc. From this it was to be understood that the silver dollar is an honest dollar when absorbed by the people, but dishonest when offered to the bondholders. The results of the Congressional policy of coinage had never been fully tested according to its true intent and spirit because the executive department had, in its practice, manifested an unfriendliness to that policy, and, by partiality and discrimination, had retarded it. If that department had not discriminated in favor of the bondholders as against the people, its representations as to finance would have been entitled to more respect. In conclusion Mr. Eustis said: "If this disloyal practice of incivism by the executive department in declaring war against silver coin, which is a coin of the Government, in belittling its usefulness, in depreciating its existence, and in inviting others to believe that it is a deformed offspring of legislative imbecility, is to continue, than some of the evils that have been predicted may come to pass; but those evils will not be attributable to any vice in our financial system, but to the practice and assertions of the executive department in dishonoring and discrediting the coin which it is their duty to sustain by all the influence and power of their official authority." In the House of Representatives, bills were introduced for the resurvey of the Bay of San Francisco, to provide for the inspection of live stock and hog products, to abolish the Fort Wallace military reservation in Kansas, to pension the only surviving granddaughter of Thomas Jefferson, to confer on Lieut. Green the rank of colonel, for the admission of Montana as a State, and for the erection of an Indian school building at Carson, Nevada. Mr. Wadsworth offered a resolution declaring that President Cleveland has faithfully endeavored to maintain the equality of gold, silver, and paper dollars.

THE Senate, after considerable debate, adopted a resolution on the 19th inst. extending the privileges of the floor to Mr. Moody, of Dakota. A joint resolution was passed to appoint Gen. John F. Hartranft a manager of the National Soldiers' Home in place of Gen. McClellan. A resolution was agreed to directing the Secretary of the Treasury to state the details of each purchase of silver bullion for coinage since last July. Mr. Teller argued against a gold standard, and Mr. Morrill gave notice of his intention to speak on the subject of silver. Speaker Carlisle laid before the House of Representatives a letter from the Chief of Engineers, asking for an appropriation of $50,000 for surveys on the Mississippi River. Bills were reported back for the purchase of the old Produce Exchange Building in New York, to place Fitz John Porter on the retired list as a Colonel, and to increase the pensions of widows from $8 to $12 per month. A resolution was adopted accepting the statue of James A. Garfield presented by the State of Ohio. A bill was passed appropriating $12,000 for the relief of the Northern Cheyennes in Montana.

A RESOLUTION directing the Secretary of the Treasury to forward all papers relating to the contract to put an additional story on the Post-office at Peoria, Ill., including a protest against the work being performed by convict labor, was agreed to by the Senate on the 20th. The discussion of Mr. Beck's silver resolution was then resumed. Mr. Morrill declared that the only hostility to silver arose from what seemed to be a fixed and passionate purpose of some of its advocates to promote such an excess of silver coinage as will drive gold out of the country and leave our vast trade and commerce based upon silver only. He stated that no man proposed to demonetize the white metal; but the public seemed to forget that out of a coinage of 215,000,000 silver dollars we had only pushed 50,000,000 into circulation. Mr. Morrill denied that there had been any failure on the part of the Treasury officials to comply with the laws regarding the application of the money received from customs duties. He contended that the public faith was pledged to the payment of the bonds, both principal and interest, in gold, and that our credit would be dishonored by paying them off in silver worth 79 cents on the dollar; that a continuance of the coinage of silver meant the banishment of gold, a monetary crisis, and an indefinite issue of greenbacks or the revival of wildcat banks. Mr. Beck said that to stop coining silver money in order to make silver money more valuable was like stopping the grinding of wheat into flour in order to make wheat more valuable. The purpose was to suspend it now and never to resume coinage. He gave notice that in due time he would reply to Mr. Morrill's speech. Mr. McPherson (N. J.) expressed himself in favor of as much silver coin as would keep it on a par with gold. Mr. Beck said the people of the West had shown their confidence in silver. They had sent East 66,000,000 of gold dollars and took silver certificates for it, sustained by silver alone, until the Treasury stopped it. Mr. Teller, in whose time most of the debate had taken place, declined to vivisect any longer, and continued his remarks. He repudiated the idea implied by the gold advocates that the people whom he represented meant to scale the debt. Mr. Maxey said the bankers had been doing all they could to bring about their own predictions, and a little ring of them had been formed for the purpose of shipping a little gold. President Cleveland sent to the Senate the name of Charles J. Canda to be Assistant Treasurer at New York. The House of Representatives passed the Senate bill for the purchase of the old produce exchange building in New York. Bills were reported to retire Lieutenant W. B. Randall as a Lieutenant Commander, and to authorize the voluntary retirement of naval officers who have served for thirty years or who have been conspicuous for heroism. A lively debate took place on the bill to increase the pensions of widows from $8 to $12 per month.

In the coke regions of Pennsylvania 2,772 ovens are idle owing to the strike, and the Hungarian laborers have assumed a threatening attitude. Strikers made an attack on the Alice mines, near Mt. The Hungarian women are worse than the men.

A dispatch from Philadelphia reports steel rails quiet, but firm, at $34.50 to $35.50, with inquiries for large blocks for summer delivery.

Advices from Pittsburgh, Pa., say that the strike in the coke region is assuming serious proportions. Four thousand ovens and 6,000 men are idle. The Hungarians, who constitute the majority of the strikers, are well armed, ferocious from drink, and threatening trouble. Three hundred of them visited the works at Stonerville and compelled the men working there to knock off and join their ranks. Adjutant General Guthrie has been requested to send a regiment of the State Guard to the disturbed districts, but he hesitates to comply.

About twenty masked men went to the jail at Vincennes, Ind., early Saturday morning and demanded the colored murderer, Holly Epps. They broke into the hallway and covered the Sheriff with revolvers, but after fruitless attempts to obtain the keys and batter down the door, the mob dispersed. The following morning the mob were more successful. They assaulted the jail, battered down the doors, dragged the murderer from his cell, hurried him to the outskirts of the town, and hanged him to the limb of a tree.

The minority report of the House Committee on Military Affairs on the bill for the relief of Fitz John Porter was laid before the House last week. The minority says: The only tenable ground on which the report can be sustained and finding of the court-martial reversed is that the court wickedly, corruptly, and maliciously conspired to sacrifice Porter to save Pope from the odium of defeat, and it would be a bold man who affirms that proposition. The minority argues that the bill is unconstitutional inasmuch as it is a usurpation by Congress of the functions of the co-ordinate branches of the Government. They say that if the bill does not nominate Porter to office it is an absolute nullity. If it does nominate him, it is an invasion of the executive prerogative. It is advice or law. If advice it is useless, and if law it is usurpation. If the court-martial erred, there was no appeal. The minority respected Porter for his persistence, still it could not but believe that his disobedience and inaction cast a shroud of woe over thousands at home and brought disaster to the national cause.

Bills have been introduced in the United States Senate by Mr. Voorhees to admit Washington and Montana Territories into the Union of States. Senator Voorhees was asked by a correspondent the other day if it was proposed on the Democratic side to make the admission of Dakota conditional on the admission of Montana, as it had been reported the Democrats were disposed to do. The Senator replied:

I can speak only for myself. I think the best arrangement we can make is to admit Dakota, Montana, and Washington together. They must all come in soon, and they might as well come in now. I do not see how we can prevent Dakota from coming in. She has a voting population of 80,000, and is certainly entitled to admission. I thought at first I should oppose the division of Dakota, but I do not see how I can. Dakota has an area of five times my own State, and South Dakota will be about as large as Ohio and Indiana. Montana has a voting population of 26,000, and is decidedly the most decorous and well-behaved youngster that has come along lately. Washington has a voting population of 40,000. There are not fifteen Congressional districts in the country with the population of Washington, and not a hundred with that of Montana. Dakota is Republican, Montana is Democratic, and I am confident she will remain so. Washington is close, and may be won by either party. If she comes into the Union by Democratic votes, under a Democratic administration, our chances in the new State will be all the better. It seems to me much the best plan to take in these three Territories at once. They are entitled to it, and practically it will be as fair and equitable an arrangement as can be made.

Army officers at Washington who know the secret of the bitter hostility that existed between Gens. Grant and Halleck, say that when Gen. McClellan's private war papers are made public a profound sensation will be created, and the hatred of Grant for Halleck will be no longer a mystery. On Feb. 16, 1862, Gen. Grant sent his famous "unconditional-surrender" letter to Gen. Buckner at Fort Donelson. The news of the surrender had thrilled the north from one end to the other, and the name of Grant was upon all lips. Gen. Halleck, the commander in the West, was at St. Louis. He was troubled at the great renown so suddenly attained by his subordinate officer. On Feb. 18, two days after the surrender of Donelson, McClellan telegraphed to Halleck: "Where is Grant?" The same day McClellan received the following from Halleck: "In answer to your question would say Grant is somewhere in the rear of his army, drunk." What Gen. McClellan desired to ascertain was the whereabouts of Grant's forces, and whether they had moved forward from Fort Donelson. The reply of Halleck was all the more inexcusable from the fact that Grant had kept him constantly posted of his aims and plans, and on that very day had telegraphed Halleck that he proposed to go ahead on a gunboat and reconnoiter the river in the direction of Nashville.

LATER NEWS IETMS.

News comes from Burlington, Montague County, Texas, of a battle between law-and-order people and a party of cowboys, in which four of the latter were slain. "Nine cowboys from the Red River section," the account runs, "bent on having a high old time." What followed is thus described by telegraph:

They began to visit the saloons, and in a few hours were crazed with whisky. They had lots of money, and kept up their carouse the entire night until daylight. During the night they amused themselves by scouring the streets and bringing every one they met into the saloons, forcing them to drink bad whisky at the point of the pistol. After carrying on in this fashion until 4 a. m. they mounted their horses, started down the principal street, firing revolvers at the windows, and shooting at every one they chanced to see. They rode around the square several times, shouting like Comanche Indians, firing promiscuously. The little town was completely terrorized, and people fled and hid, fearing they would be murdered. Deputy Sheriff Cooke, who resides in Burlington, attempted to arrest them, but they defied him, and told him to "git" at the point of the pistol. Cooke then formed a citizens' posse, determined to keep the peace even at the cost of their lives. About daylight the cowboys saw Cooke and the men gathering, and they fled, going toward Indian Territory. The officers pursued, and about four miles from Burlington overhauled the desperadoes. A regular running fight followed. The cowboys opened fire and rode furiously. The officers pursuing had fresher horses and Winchesters. They blazed into the fleeing band, and killed four of them instantly, known as Bill Winns, Lake Jackson, Buck Trimble, and Jim Hartley. Five of the cowboys' horses were killed under them. About forty-five shots were exchanged. The remainder of the gang, except one, were permitted to escape. It is calculated that the cowboys did several hundred dollars' worth of damage to various saloons and other places they visited on their wild tear. They shot all the mirrors, broke all the bottles, and cleaned out nearly every saloon in town. This is the first time in many years that any town in this vicinity has been visited by cowboys.

A dispatch from Harold, Texas, reports how another festive cowboy came to die with his boots on:

Gaines Sallard, a cowboy, who it seems has been in the habit of getting drunk and riding into the saloons and stores, came into town, and, as usual, attempted to repeat his old tricks, but was fooled. Private Y. D. Murray, of the rangers, attempted to arrest him by grabbing the bridle-reins. He requested Sallard to halt. At this Sallard leveled his Winchester rifle at the ranger, but Murray proved too quick, and shot him through the heart with a six-shooter, killing him instantly.

THE SILVER QUESTION.

Senator Teller, Whose State Produces Considerable Silver, Talks About Coinage.

Treasurer Jordan's System of Book-keeping Criticised—A Plea for Fair Dealing.

Mr. Ingalls, of Kansas, offered a resolution in the United States Senate, Jan. 18, which, without debate, was agreed to, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to inform the Senate what amount of silver bullion had been purchased for coinage in each year since July 1, 1878, in what market the same had been purchased in each case, and from whom, and the price paid; also, whether in any instance all bids had been rejected, and if so, for what reason, and in what money or currency the payment for such silver bullion had been made. Mr. Teller then addressed the Senate on the silver question. His remarks were supported by many figures. The following is a fair abstract:

Money scarcity means dull times and low wages, the money-lenders suffering least from the scarcity. Gold and silver combined had been found insufficient to carry on the business of the world, and all nations had resorted to paper currency based on those metals. From this it was plain that gold alone would not suffice. He showed that the bondholders and capitalists were opposed to the people in this struggle. The creditor class wanted silver demonetized because of the consequent enormous increase in the purchasing power of gold. He presented figures showing that when the silver coinage act passed there was $193,000,000 in gold in the United States, and now there is $623,000,000—an addition of gold at the rate of $20,000,000 a year in the face of the cry that we would lose all our gold, would lose our national credit, and would be unable to sell our bonds. The Bank of England was fast losing its coin and bullion. In the last six months it had lost $38,000,000 of it, and in the same time had lost $18,000,000 of its deposits. Was it not extraordinary, if our financial policy was so unwise, and that of England so wise, that we had accumulated so large an amount of gold while England was losing her gold? The whole condition of our country, Mr. Teller continued, was an eloquent denial of the truth of the predictions and complaints of the enemies of silver. The stoppage of silver coinage would be equivalent to the addition of $300,000,000 to the national debt. It would add from 20 to 30 per cent. to every dollar of debt in the land—an amount almost too great for computation. The creditor class demanded suspension of the coinage, which was practically a stoppage of it, and also that we pay in gold the $346,000,000 of national-bank notes and withdraw them from circulation. The next move would be to take from the silver dollars already coined their legal tender value, thus effecting a reduction amounting altogether to $562,000,000 in the circulating medium—over one-third of our whole circulation. Then, with $40,000,000 of balance locked up in the Treasury, as now, the business of the country would be left to be done with about one-third of our present stock of money. The laboring men were well aware that the great Treasury Department of our Government had passed into the control of the banks, bankers, and moneyed powers. Every scheme that could disgrace silver had had the sanction of that department, if it did not directly originate in the department. The Treasurer of the United States had even gone into a convention of fifty-four banks—a convention whose object was the depreciation of silver—and his presence among the bankers was carefully telegraphed to all corners of the earth. Another attack on silver was found in the system of book-keeping newly adopted by the Treasury Department in treating as a liability and not as an asset the $100,000,000 of revenue held in order to redeem the greenbacks. According to this idea the more money the Government had in its vaults with which to redeem its paper money, or pay its debts, the greater its liabilities. This change of book-keeping came of long experience in Wall street. It was for the purpose of deceiving the people as to the amount of available funds in the Treasury, as it would always show $100,000,000 less than was actually in the Treasury. No doubt the Treasury officials believed that the continued accumulation and retention of money in the Treasury was beneficial to the country, and that the suspension of the silver coinage would also be beneficial to the Treasury; but the trouble with the Treasury officials was that they had consulted the national banks and money loaners, and not the real business men of the country. Had our Government officers executed the laws of the land as they found them there would have been no trouble with the silver question. Mr. Teller did not demand a forced circulation of silver; he merely demanded for it an equal chance with gold. When that was done he would abide the decision of the commercial world. Let the gold advocates give to silver free coinage, as they gave it to gold and let the judgment of mankind be taken on its value as money. Do not allow Government officials to discredit it. Do not allow Government agents (the national banks) to refuse to receive it on deposit. Let all men understand that payment in it was a just and fair payment of debt within the letter and the spirit of the law, and when that was done silver would resume its place as the favorite money metal of commerce. If it were said that the special interests of Colorado warped Mr. Teller's judgment, he would reply that, although Colorado produced one-quarter of all the annual silver yield of the world, yet the question of silver coinage was one of but little more importance to Colorado than to the other States of the Union. The real question was whether the world's commerce should be conducted with all the world's stock of money or with only one-half of it. That question affected nine men in every ten in the United States. He spoke, therefore, for all who toiled in mill and field—that great host, as mighty in numbers as modest in aspiration, who constituted the strength and power of the nation; who, though forbearing and long-enduring, yet, when aroused in defense of their rights, knew how to compel their agents to respect their will.

PLEADING FOR DAKOTA.

Senator-Elect Edgerton Presents Arguments for the Admission of the Southern Half of the Territory.

[Washington Special.]

The Dakota delegation, headed by Senators Edgerton and Moody, called upon President Cleveland by appointment, and were heard upon the questions of dividing the Territory of Dakota, admitting to Statehood the southern half, and organizing the northern portion into North Dakota Territory. The President listened attentively to the delegation for an hour. Senator Edgerton did most of the talking. After reciting the steps taken by the Territory which resulted in the meeting of the constitutional convention, he said:

"It has been said that there was no authority for calling the constitutional convention; in other words, that the law enacted by the Legislature is without authority, and consequently void. I will not examine the question as to whether the organic act passed by Congress investing the Legislature with the power to legislate upon all rightful subjects of legislation not prohibited by that act gave the Territorial Legislature power to provide by law for a constitutional convention or not. That is not necessary for our present purpose. When statutes are silent, precedents make law. While the Constitution of the United States provides that Congress shall have power to admit new States, it nowhere provides, in direct terms or by implication, what steps shall be taken to bring the matter of admission of a new State to the attention of Congress, or how or with whom the first steps shall be instituted. Precedents have varied in many instances. Congress has initiated proceedings by providing for a convention in other cases, and not a few conventions have assembled by authority of the people of the Territory."

THE FAR WEST.

Dame Fortune Points the Way.

There is perhaps no place in America that offers to the energetic, industrious man a more sure reward for his labor than the country that has so recently sprung into prominence, and whose unparalleled resources have been quite unknown until within the last few months. There is a reason why the general world has not known of its existence, although it lies within a few days' travel of populous centers of civilization. We speak of the country lying in Northwestern Nebraska and Southwestern Dakota, and it has seemed as though that rich and fertile farming section was to remain undeveloped on account of its geographical position and the difficulty with which travelers reached it.

It has been known for years that the fertility of the North Platte country in Nebraska was unequaled by any soil in the world, and men who have had the moral courage to take their chances have availed themselves of the opportunity of a profitable investment, and have secured homes by homestead right and purchase, until nearly all the land lying near the railroads has been taken possession of by actual settlers, and, as a result, we see Northeastern Nebraska one of the most prosperous sections in the West. But lying just beyond is a country more fertile and possessing more natural advantages, fed by mountain streams, and rich with mineral deposits.

We know that it is a popular opinion that the best land has been taken, and that there only remain undesirable patches of arid soil unfit for cultivation. This may be true of certain sections of the Northwest, but cannot be said of a country that lies entirely open to settlers, and which will, before the ending of the present year, be in the possession of those vigilant business men who are always upon the alert to take advantage of the country opened up by the building of new lines of railway. Such opportunities do not often occur, and a man may live his life and not have such chances thrown in his way as are now offered.

The Black Hills country, now for the first time thrown open to the world by the extension of railway enterprise, has by its entire isolation from civilization existed in the minds of many people only as a myth. The death of the brave Custer, which occurred some distance from there, brought that country into public notice, and the agitation of those times resulted in the opening of the Hills to white settlement, but the extreme distance rendered it impossible for any but the most brave and adventurous to go there. All this has been changed, however, with the coming of the locomotive, and the Black Hills region to-day, without question, constitutes the richest district for its area in the world. Its gold, silver, tin, mica, iron, coal oil, its timber, its mountains of marble, and gypsum, show it to be the most prolific in resources of any section of country on this continent.

Lying toward the western limit of the more thickly populated portion of Nebraska is the town of Valentine, and seventy-five miles further west you reach what is known as the Antelope country, and beyond this it is simply magnificent, both in appearance, topography, and richness; and that condition obtains almost entirely to the State line between Nebraska and Wyoming, as does also a similar condition northward from the Dakota line to Rapid City and vicinity.

A false idea has gained some credence that this portion of Dakota and Nebraska was only fit for grazing purposes, but this is a great mistake, for some of the finest wheat and oats ever grown in the States has been harvested in the immediate vicinity of what is now known as Buffalo Gap. There seems to be no limit to the depth or richness of the soil, and, besides this, the face of the country is beautiful, being just rolling enough to be picturesque, yet little of it that is not tillable.

It has been quite reliably reported that during this year the Fremont, Elkhorn and Missouri Valley Railroad Company and the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad, both being under control of the Northwestern Railway, will extend their line to Fort Fetterman, Wyoming Territory. Another extension will be made from Buffalo Gap to Rapid City, a distance of fifty miles, as will also a line be built from Fremont to Lincoln, a distance of nearly fifty miles. Still another branch will be constructed, starting westward from Scribner, in nearly a direct line, some sixty miles. It is possible, however, that the last named route may bear slightly to the northwest, the geographical surface of the country being more favorable to its construction. Too much praise cannot be awarded to the enterprise of these railway companies, in thus taking the risk of exploring a hitherto unsettled country, and to their exertion alone can be attributed the brilliant prospect now opened to those who wish to avail themselves of an opportunity to make a substantial start in life.

It is not out of place in this connection to give a brief description of Buffalo Gap and Rapid City, the two most important towns lying upon this railway line now pushing its way where others dared not go. Buffalo Gap is a village of 800 population, and lies midway between Chadron and Rapid City, fifty miles distant from each. The site upon which the city is situated is a beautiful second bottom, far above high water, three miles from the Gap proper, and at the base of beautiful hills which are about 1,800 feet high, while the far-reaching valley of the Beaver, touching the Cheyenne, and the Cheyenne River valley are plainly visible in the distance. It has a fine agricultural country around it, the stock ranges of the Cheyenne River tributary to it, and plenty of fine timber within hauling distance. On the 10th of December of last year the railway was finished to the Gap, and it is reliably estimated that fully 140 houses were erected in the incredibly short space of ten days after the arrival of the first railway coach.

Buffalo Gap is at the present time the terminus of the railway line, but the proposed route lies northward to Rapid City, which is the county seat of Pennington County, and its location is as beautiful as could be imagined. Lying on the banks of Rapid Creek, a clear, swift stream, it is surrounded by fertile valleys and picturesque hills, with the mountains and forests of the great mining region but a few miles away. The country tributary to Rapid City contains varied and inexhaustible wealth, and the farming country is, without exception, as rich as any in Central Dakota. The forests contain their stores of timber, and so great is the supply of pine that it is estimated that the timber will not be exhausted in half a century, and that lumber for export will shortly be made an important industry. The quarrying of building stone, sandstone and slate will soon be begun, and already Eastern capitalists are purchasing land with a view of working the quarries. Although Rapid City has been a frontier town, society is in a state of the most refined culture, and its educational facilities are of the best. Large and commodious school buildings have been erected, and beautiful churches give evidence of a high state of intellectual advancement and cultivation.

The Dakota Hot Springs, twelve miles west from Buffalo Gap, are unquestionably a specific for rheumatism and other diseases cured at the Arkansas Hot Springs; and situated, as they are, in the Hills, with the mountains all around them, with canons leading in all directions, each being in itself a natural road-bed, these springs are destined to become not only a sanitary but a pleasure resort, and the height being 3,500 feet above the sea level, renders it the most pleasant to live in of any altitude known. A large hotel is being built at the Springs, which will be completed in early spring, and a tally-ho coach line will be run from Buffalo Gap to this hotel, in connection with the railway train; also, an ambulance will be provided for the carrying of those who are unable to ride in the coach.

Already the tide of emigration has set in, and as soon as the frost leaves the ground in the spring active operations will be begun by the railroad company in the extension of their lines, and a new country will be opened up to settlers. Regarding the relative merits of the two cities, Buffalo Gap and Rapid City, each has advantages not possessed by the other, and it only remains to determine which of these two ambitious cities will be the metropolis of Western Dakota.

Draining Enormous Marshes.

Few people are probably aware of the great engineering undertaking in which Russia has been engaged for years, of draining the Pinsk marshes. These are so extensive as to secure special designation on the ordinary map of Europe, being, we believe, the only case of the kind; and, in point of area, are very much larger than Ireland. Situated on the Russo-Polish confines, they have become famous in Russian history as a refuge for all manner of romantic characters, and have remained an irreclaimable wilderness in the midst of a prosperous corn-growing region up to within the last few years. In 1870 the Russian Government first took in hand seriously the abolition of this wild expanse, which, owing to being perpetually more or less submerged and covered with jungle growth of forest, prevented not only communication between Russian districts on either side, but also between Russia and Austro-Germany. Consequently a large staff of engineering officers and several thousand troops were drafted into the region, and these have been engaged upon the undertaking since. Up to the present time about 2,000,000 acres have been reclaimed, thanks to the construction of several thousand miles of ditches and of canals, so broad as to be navigable for barges of several hundred tons burden. Just now the engineers are drawing up the programme for next year, which comprises the drainage of 350,000 acres by means of the construction of 120 miles of ditches and canals. Of the 4,000,000 acres already reclaimed, 600,000 acres consisted of sheer bog, which have been converted into good meadow land; 900,000 acres of "forest tangle," which have been prepared for timber purposes by cutting down all the underwood and thinning the trees; 500,000 acres of good forest land—forest oases in the midst of the marshes—hitherto inaccessible, but which have been connected, more or less, with navigable canals, and thereby with the distant markets; and, finally, 2,000,000 acres have been thrown open to cultivation, although only 120,000 acres have been actually occupied up to now. Besides making the canals and ditches, the engineers have built 179 bridges, bored 1:2 wells from forty feet to eighty feet deep, and 425 from twenty feet to forty feet, and have made a survey of 20,000 square miles of country hitherto unmapped. When their task is finished, Russia will have effaced from the map of Europe one of the oldest and toughest bits of savage nature on the continent, and a few years will suffice to render the Pinsk marshes undistinguishable from the rest of the cultivated region of the sources of the Dnieper.—Engineering.

The Pale, Wan Clergyman.

During his recent lecture here in Pastor Conwell's church, at Berks and Mervine streets, the Rev. T. De Witt Talmage related a little incident that will bear repeating. He was speaking of a brother clergyman who was very thin. "One day," he added, "as the preacher was walking along the street near his home he was stopped by a man of robust proportions. 'Are you the clergyman living in this neighborhood who the people say is dying of consumption?' inquired the hearty-looking individual, at the same time taking an ample survey of the divine's meager frame. 'I don't know, brother,' meekly replied the clergyman; 'but I have been preaching the gospel at this weight for fifteen years, and man's the time I have conducted funeral services over just such a big, healthy brother as you.' The robust individual said not a word, but thoughtfully walked away."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

CONGRESSIONAL TALK.

Interesting Debate in the House on the Hoar Bill Passed by the Senate.

The Silver Question in the Senate—Messrs. Brown and Maxey Favor Coinage.

Presidential Succession.

Mr. Caldwell, of Tennessee, called up the Hoar Presidential-succession bill in the House, and stated that the committee, in reporting this measure, had not dealt with indifference or disrespect with other propositions before it. There were many measures proposed that would more properly meet all possible or imaginary exigencies than the one now reported, but they all required a constitutional amendment before they could become laws, and a constitutional amendment involved a delay which would ill accord with the reasonable anxiety which the great body of the people felt. There were many exigencies which the pending measure did not cover, but the present exigency it completely covered. It was a temporary bridge thrown across a chasm in order to meet public demand, and would be followed in due time by an enduring structure over which a long line of Republican-Democratic Presidents might march in unbroken succession. Mr. Cooper, of Ohio, who prepared the minority report, protested against the general principle of the bill—against the idea of vesting in the person who occupied the Presidential chair the power to perpetuate the succession, by naming his successor. He was profoundly doubtful of the constitutionality of a provision which would vest the Presidency upon a man appointed by an outgoing administration. He believed it to be in violation, not only of the spirit and letter of the Constitution, but of the spirit out of which the Constitution rose; and was unwise legislation, because it tended to widen the space between the President and the people. If there were defects in the present law they should be remedied by carefully considered legislation. What was worth while for the American Congress to do, was worth doing well. He could see no exigency which required red-hot haste in passing this measure.

Mr. Eden, of Illinois, defended the bill against adverse criticism, and pointed out wherein it was an improvement over the existing law. The present measure would preserve the country from anarchy in cases of trouble arising in the matter of the Presidential succession.

Mr. McKinley, of Ohio, gave notice of a substitute which he would offer for the bill. This substitute preserves the law of 1792, with the addition of a provision that for the purpose of having a Speaker of the House of Representatives continually in office Congress shall convene on the 4th of March next succeeding the elections of Representatives of Congress, and whenever a vacancy exists either in the office of President pro tem of the Senate or the Speaker of the House the President shall convene the House in which the vacancy exists for the purpose of electing a presiding officer.

Mr. Peters, of Kansas, regarded the pending measure as unconstitutional, inexpedient, and impotent. But for these faults it was a pretty fair bill. He asserted that Congress had no power to enact a law which violated the intent of the Constitution, and which in effect declared an appointive officer should act as President. It was a flagrant usurpation of the power vested in the people. The best measure on the subject, in his opinion, was the bill introduced in 1887 providing for the meeting of Congress on the 4th of March each alternate year. That would amply provide against any break in the line of succession.

Mr. Seney, of Ohio, believed that the Presidential succession under existing law was at best doubtful and uncertain. He earnestly advocated the passage of the pending measure, maintaining that it would remove many dangers from the path of the Presidential succession.

Mr. Rowell, of Illinois, characterized the bill as a crude one, and suggested that if the presiding officer of the Senate was of the same party as the Executive there would not be the haste to amend a law which had stood for ninety-four years. The strongest objection to the bill, in his opinion, was that it permitted the party in power to perpetuate that power for an indefinite number of years, as admitted by the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. Caldwell). Never before had the American people been presented with such a temptation to crime, such a temptation to anarchy, such a temptation to revolution.

The Dollar of the Fathers.

In the Senate Mr. Brown called up Mr. Beck's silver resolution and addressed the Senate on it. The officers of the Treasury, he said, should treat all public creditors alike; if they paid the bondholders in gold alone, they should pay the laborer in gold alone. As to the accumulation of silver dollars in the Treasury, Mr. Brown insisted that it was the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to pay them out to the public creditors who never anything was due, and if they did not dispose of them, he should call in enough bonds on which the people are paying interest to absorb the silver dollars, and so stop the interest payments. If the public creditors were paid 30,000,000 or 40,000,000 of silver dollars their endeavor would be to keep up the value of silver; if paid in gold alone the tendency would be to depreciate the value of silver—to make it represent less property. It is were said that it was not honest to pay them in silver, on the ground that the silver dollar was not an honest dollar, Mr. Brown would reply that it was always honest to pay a debt in the very currency which the creditor, by his contract, had agreed to take. The creditors had secured several successive changes in the contract, and the contract as it now stands, was that the bondholders should be paid in gold dollars or silver dollars, at the convenience of the Treasury. Though they had thus agreed to take payment in either gold or silver, they were being paid in gold alone, while everybody else was paid in silver. This was neither fair dealing nor common honesty. Mr. Brown advocated the issuance of silver certificates to represent the silver in the Treasury. Every surplus gold and silver dollar, he said, not part of the necessary Treasury reserve, should be put into circulation by a gold or silver certificate. Instead of having too much much silver coin, business would be much improved if we had more of it in circulation in the form of paper certificates. If the national banks attempt to practically demonetize silver, said Mr. Brown in conclusion, and if the officials who now represent the people in the different departments of the Government will not take the matter in hand, then the people, at their recurring elections, should take it in hand and fill all the departments of Government with men who will apply the corrective and forfeit the charters of such banks as abuse their privileges.

Mr. Maxey followed on the same subject. He said the raid on silver was a European raid, and if successful would inflict incalculable injury on the United States. The bugbear of silver, so terrifying to the European money-changers, had no terror for the American people. The people of the South were not grievously burdened with silver or any other money, but if they should by chance find themselves hampered by a great weight of silver they could exchange it for paper certificates, which, when based on coin, dollar for dollar, were better than coin for active use. Mr. Maxey expressed himself as utterly opposed to an irredeemable paper currency, and declared a fluctuating currency inconsistent with healthy trade, while a sound currency, based on the precious metals and convertible into coin, was a blessing to civilization. The silver advocates, he contended, repelled the imputation that they wanted to take any advantage of their creditors by paying a dollar debt with an 80-cent dollar. A fouler lie had never been uttered against a brave and industrious people. The people know that the fall of silver was the result of a conspiracy of combined capital to demonetize silver as a money metal; and the gamblers were but reaping the fruits of their own folly. The suspension of silver coinage was but another name for the total stoppage of the coinage, and such suspension or stoppage would be fraught with most serious consequences to the people. What we needed in our dealings with the bondholders, Mr. Maxey insisted, was a strong, vigorous enforcement of the contract made with them.

REGULATING RAILWAYS.

Senator Cullom's Interstate Commerce Bill Reported to the Senate.

Its Stringent Provisions for Restricting Monopolies—An Elaborate Accompanying Report.

The report of Senator Cullom's Select Committee upon Interstate Railroad Transportation, which was submitted to the Senate on the 18th of January, is a voluminous document, which discusses the transportation problem in all its bearings, and especially the question of the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce. With the report Mr. Cullom submitted a bill regulating interstate commerce, which he asked might be referred back to the committee, and that the committee be continued. The request was granted. The following is a brief synopsis of the bill:

After specifying the classes of carriers, or rather the kinds of traffic, to which the regulations prescribed are to apply, and declaring that all charges made by such carriers shall be reasonable, the preliminary sections aim to prohibit every variety of unjust discrimination; to prescribe adequate penalties therefor, and to prescribe for their enforcement in the courts of the United States. These sections include the requirement that all carriers shall afford reasonable facilities for the interchange of traffic with connecting lines, and the prohibition of a greater charge for a shorter than for a longer distance, except when it can be affirmatively established by the carrier that such charge does not constitute an unjust discrimination. Such common carrier may, however, in special cases be authorized by the commission to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers and property.

Another section requires all carriers subject to the provisions of the proposed act to file their tariffs and classifications with the Interstate Commission, and provides that they shall be posted or otherwise published, but leaves to be determined by the commission the manner of publication and the places at and between which rates shall be published. Provision is made for enforcing the requirements of the commission in these respects through the courts, and for the maintenance of the rates that may thus be published.

Provision is also made for the appointment by the President of five Commissioners, to be confirmed by the Senate, the Commissioners first appointed to continue in office for the term of two, three, four, five, and six years respectively, beginning the 1st day of July next, not more than three of whom shall be appointed from the same political party; and several sections are devoted to prescribing the duties of the Commissioners and the manner in which complaints are to be investigated and penalties instituted under its direction when found necessary. The salary of each Commissioner is to be $7,500 per annum.

The report accompanying the bill is a voluminous document. It says the outlook is not good for the United States to ship breadstuffs in unlimited quantities throughout the civilized world, and the principal markets, both for breadand meats, must henceforth be sought at home. In its discussion of the power of Congress to regulate commerce, the committee reviews exhaustively the deliverances of the United States Supreme Court on the subject. It says:

From the judicial construction of the word commerce by the court of last resort, it is apparent that it has a very wide meaning as employed in the Constitution, and that it includes not only intercourse and traffic, but as well the subject-matter of intercourse and traffic, and also the channels through which and the agencies by which such intercourse and traffic may be carried on. Railroads are everywhere recognized as common carriers, and as such are held amenable to the courts for the performance of such duties as devolve upon common carriers under the law. No common carrier has the right under the law to discriminate between persons or places, or to give preferences in any manner. The theory of the common law is that all who are situated alike must be treated alike. Unjust discrimination is the chief cause of complaint against the management of railroads in the conduct of business, and gives rise to much of the pressure upon Congress for regulative limitation. The railroad companies do not recognize, as they should, the fact that they sustain a different relation to the public from persons engaged in ordinary business enterprises. Railroad companies are not so disposed to regard themselves as holding a public office and bound to the public as expressed in the ancient law. They do not deal with each citizen alike. They discriminate between persons and between places, and the States and Congress are consequently called on to in some way enforce the plain principles of the common law for the protection of the people against the unlawful conduct of common carriers in carrying on the commerce of the country. The railroad corporations necessarily rest under the same obligations to deal fairly and equitably with all its citizens without favoritism or discrimination as the state itself. There is no occasion to consider the necessity of a constitutional amendment for the regulation of transportation until it has been demonstrated by actual trial that the powers now possessed by Congress can not be exercised effectively.

The subject of competition between water-ways and railroads is discussed briefly, and the conclusion is reached that as waterways are the most effective regulators of railroad charges, and the emancipation of the waters is a national necessity. The improvement of the Mississippi and its tributaries is briefly alluded to and warmly indorsed.

Of the Hennepin Canal the committee says that the commerce of the nation would derive fresh and continued advantages from the construction of this canal.

The committee formulates its conclusions (accompanying each with arguments and citations to show the ground upon which they are founded) as follows:

1. The public interest demands regulations of the business of transportation because in the absence of such regulation the carrier is actually the sole and final arbiter upon all disputed questions that arise between shipper and carrier as to whether rates are reasonable or unjust discrimination has been practiced.

2. It is the duty of Congress to undertake the regulation of the business of transportation, because of admitted abuses in its management and of acknowledged discriminations between persons and places in its practical operations—evils which it is possible to reach and remedy only through the exercise of the powers granted by the Constitution to Congress, and against which the citizen is entitled to the protection and relief the national authority can alone afford.

3. National legislation is necessary to remedy the evils complained of, because the operations of the transportation system are, for the most part, beyond the jurisdiction of the States, and until Congress acts, not subject to any governmental control in the public interest.

4. National legislation is also necessary because the business of transportation is essentially of a nature which requires that uniform system and method of regulation which the national authority can alone prescribe.

5. The failure of Congress to act is no excuse for the attempt made by the railroads to regulate the commerce of the country in their own way and in their own interests by whatever combinations and methods they are able to put into operation. That a problem of such magnitude, importance, and intricacy can be successfully solved by any master-stroke of legislative wisdom is beyond the bounds of reasonable belief. That the railroads, modified or circumscribed, can or will eventually work out its solution seems highly improbable, judging from past experience, and can not reasonably be expected. That a satisfactory solution of the problem can be secured without the aid of wise legislation the committee does not believe.

The committee declares that publicity is the best remedy for unjust discrimination, and recommends the posting of rates under the direction of the commission. The concluding chapter embodies a recommendation for the establishment of a national commission to enforce the legislation which the committee recommends.

Honest Convictions.

A late number of the New York Evening Post says that President Cleveland has made a great many converts and silenced a great many detractors since he entered the White House, but they generally keep their change of heart to themselves. Among the few who have spoken out, and honorably acknowledged that they were mistaken in the view they took of him during the canvass, is Judge Noah Davis, of the supreme court, who, as every New Yorker knows, was, in spite of his place on the bench one of the most ardent supporters of Blaine, with all that the term implies, in 1884. Judge Davis now says, in a speech he made at the marine society's dinner Monday night:

"So far as I am capable of judging the man who is at the head of the government of the United States, a man whom I admitted to the bar in western New York not so many years ago, who, in the various offices he has been called upon to fill, has exhibited power and a capacity to do justice between man and man, and who has reached, almost at a bound, the highest office in the gift of the people, I say to you, republican as I am, no man has ever sought more ardently than he to do his duty, or, in my humble opinion, has succeeded better than the president of the United States."

We trust others will follow Judge Davis's example and come out with what they now think about the administration. The little men who thought Cleveland was "a small man," and the great rascals who thought he was not moral enough, and the blockheads who thought he was not bright enough, ought all to unite in a general shout of recantation. They ought to do it in their own interest, for things do not go well with Cleveland's enemies. Look at our esteemed contemporary the Sun, for instance. It opposed his election bitterly, and has never retracted or apologized. Well, its circulation at once began to decline, and has been declining ever since the election. It is never too late for a Blaine man to repent.

If it do not result in a return of temporal prosperity, it will at least be good for the soul.

Cleveland Endorsed.

In his speech at the recent banquet tendered him by the democratic business men's club of New York city, Gov. Hill said:

Those who expect me to antagonize the national administration will also be disappointed. That administration needs no defense at my hands. It is administering the government wisely, safely, successfully, and to the satisfaction of the people. Of President Cleveland's honesty, courage, and true democracy there can be no question. I had the honor of being associated with him in the state government for two years, and our relations were and have ever since been of the most pleasant and cordial character. I respect his sincerity of purpose, his sterling integrity, and party fealty.

This cordial endorsement of President Cleveland's administration by Gov. Hill is a complete refutation of the charge that there are bitter antagonisms between these eminent democrats. That is not true any more than is the statement that there are irreconcilable differences in the party in this state. The democracy will everywhere present a united front to the opposition next fall.—Lansing Journal.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 18, 1886.

Special Correspondence.

The weather for the past week has been the severest known for many years. A week of passably good sleighing has been enjoyed by lovers of "the beautiful." Several cases are reported of people being frozen to death during the week. A warm wave put in its appearance Saturday, and was given a hearty welcome by the citizens.

The position of sub-treasurer at at New York, with its annual salary of $8,000, is apparently going a begging. It has again been declined—this time by Hon. W. F. Russell. The president will make another selection this week, and Manton Marble, ex-editor of the N. Y. World, is more than likely to be offered the place.

A senate committee is soon to investigate the street car companies and their methods in this city. It is proposed to find out the reasons why these corporations do not furnish better accommodations to their patrons and pay their taxes.

At a senatorial caucus it has been decided that the senate has a right to, and will insist upon knowing the reasons for discharging or removing republican officials and appointing democrats in their places, and that this information is to be demanded from the president. If this policy is carried out there is a possibility that republican senators may learn more of the characters of their office holding friends than they care to have made public.

The railroad rate war, recently began by the B. & O. on west bound passenger traffic, is being met by the Pennsylvania line, and a cut on through tickets of $5 00 is in effect. It is expected that this will be followed by still greater reductions, and that a similar cut will be made by the B. & O. on east bound traffic.

It is reported that an exodus of 3,000 colored people has taken place from North Carolina. That number could be easily spared from the national capital and not be missed.

There was a general feeling of sadness Saturday upon the announcement of the sudden death of Miss Kate, eldest daughter of senator Bayard. Friday evening Miss Bayard assisted her father at a reception and party, and appeared in excellent health and spirits. The party did not break up until late and it was one o'clock before she retired. When her sister went to the room to call her, Saturday, she was found to be dead. The cause of death was heart disease. Miss Bayard was a great favorite in society, and her loss will be sincerely mourned by hosts of warm friends.

There is a movement on foot to place the Washington navy yard, which, it is claimed, is one of the best in this country, again in active operation. There are many good and sufficient reasons why this should be done, and it is said that Secretary Whitney heartily favors the plan, as do several members of the house and senate naval committees.

Sporting people here are highly elated by the admission of the Washington club into the National Base Ball League. Nearly three months time has been consumed in accomplishing this result, but it is at last an established fact, and the club and its friends are jubilant. Jonsson.

Notes and News.

The action of the Ohio senate in unseating nine democrats, has given that body two complete organizations, with prospects for an interesting parliamentary conflict in the near future.

That republican outrage in Ohio so excited the political editor last week that he forgot to read the proof, and the article went through the press in bad shape, but of course there is no use to speak of it: everybody saw it and mentioned it to us.

Congressman Catchon voted against the "presidency succession bill." The representative from the ninth district has a faculty for getting on the wrong side of important questions. It is stated that he is preparing another speech assailing Fitz John Porter.—Big Rapids Herald.

The question of presidential succession is finally settled, the bill having passed the house as it came from the senate. By the provisions of the bill in case a vacancy occurs in both offices of president and vice president, the succession passes to the secretary of state, from him to the secretary of the treasury, and so on through the other members of the cabinet.

The Ypsilantian of Jan. 21st contains an interesting article on the state normal school located there. We have not space to publish the article in full, but cannot refrain from stating that the institution was never more prosperous and efficient than at present. The great need is more room to accommodate the constantly increasing attendance. It is hoped that at the next opportunity, our legislature will generously consider this fact. Parents and guardians should certainly send for a catalogue before deciding where to send those under their charge for a complete education.

President Cleveland has respectfully informed the senate that his reasons for the removal of any officer, is none of its business. Senators are entitled to all the information they can obtain concerning the qualification of any man named for appointment, and that is all they can look for from him. What an interesting fund of information would be opened up if such a rule as the senators demand were enforced.

Criminal Neglect.

Jackson county is apparently guilty of criminal neglect in allowing an empty reservoir to be the only fire protection in a $12,000 poor house. Last Sunday morning the building took fire and was totally destroyed. Five of the inmates were burned to death in the catastrophe, and several others will probably die from exposure, having escaped in a nude condition with the mercury at 10° below zero.

Three Cheers for Tarsney!

Harbor Springs Independent.

We clip the following from the Evening News of Thursday:

"WASHINGTON, Jan. 14. Mr. Tarsney will introduce a resolution in the house this afternoon calling upon the treasury for information as to how much money there is in the treasury which can be legally used for the payment of interest-bearing obligations of the government; and why such surplus has not been used in calling in the bonds. The resolution is carefully prepared, Tarsney is in earnest. He says the surplus is big, and when the democrats declared on the stump that they would use it to reduce the debt they meant what they said. He says there is about $105,000,000 held to pay coin certificates and about $83,000,000 held to pay silver certificates, and altogether a surplus of about $230,000,000 which ought to be used in calling in interest-bearing bonds and paying off the public debt. When the secretary's reply is received Mr. Tarsney means to have a bill passed, compelling him to call in 3 per cent bonds and pay out the surplus in reducing the debt as rapidly as possible. The resolution will go to the ways and means."

Every Michigan man who believes in reducing the debt and restoring to the people the money that has been extorted from them, should throw up his hat and hurrah for Tim Tarsney.

His prompt action on these vital questions has done more to secure another fusion next fall than all the cold blooded patronage in Michigan. Even those who have hitherto doubted the policy of fusion must now be convinced of the wisdom of the action which sent brave, keen, far sighted, self-made "Tim" to congress to honor the seat which the Saginaw clown disgraced. Next year there will be no voting ticket in the eighth district.

HOOK 'er up, Tim; hook 'er up to the last notch and throw her wide open! The people have given you your bells and the jingle, and now's the time to push the old boat off the shoals where she is grounded.

"I Want to Inform You."

Washington, Jan. 18. To a republican senator who called on the president to-day, the latter said: "I am led to believe that the majority of your body intended to insist that I shall give my reasons for suspending an officer earlier at the time I nominate his successor. I want to inform you that I shall do nothing of the kind. Nominations are made by and with the consent of the senate. It is fitting in such cases that the senate should have all the information they desire regarding the men whose nomination they are asked to confirm, but when they insist upon my reasons for making removals they are usurping a privilege that belongs to the Executive alone and their request will in every case be denied. That is the position I propose to take and I am ready to abide the consequences."

WHY WASTE TIME AND MONEY On that which does no good. Your children have worms and are cross, always hungry, sleepless, puny and weak from the presence of worms in the stomach which prevents the food being taken up to nourish the body. PARSELEE'S SANTONINE WORM CANDIES will dissolve and remove the worms and then all will be well. You cannot do better by your children than to attend to their health. Price 25 cents per box.

A young friend hands in the following, which, he assures us, some people will understand, even though the editor does not: The old folks sometimes "get left" when they try to help entertain their daughter's beau, as was the case here last week. But the young lady was "up to snuff" and visited a neighbor's where they passed several hours as happy as could be.

Judge Clover and party, of St. Louis, who have spent several summers in Charlevoix, have already engaged rooms at the Fountain City house for the coming summer. The party expected to visit Europe this summer; but changing plans in that respect, they write at once saying that "Charlevoix is good enough for us, and the Fountain City house certainly is."

W. H. Francis, of the firm Heath & Francis, met with an accident last Friday, which kept him from work until yesterday. His right arm was badly lascerated, but is healing fast now, and will soon be as sound as before.

The young people's society enjoyed a pleasant meeting on Tuesday evening in the "upper room" of the M. E. church. The literary portion of the program consisted of a few select readings, and a paper entitled "The News Boy," bristling with "locals," "contributions," and "cinders."

Ben Davis insists on making Elk Rapids famous for its game fish, and keeps up the stories even in mid winter, like the following: "Joe Minnie and a woman living on Torch lake made some good catches last Saturday. Joe caught five trout weighing about nine pounds each, and the woman caught a muskalonge weighing sixteen pounds and five trout weighing eight and nine pounds." Will Charlevoix fishers let this pass without showing a better catch?

"It will interest you to step in and see the new clocks and silverware just arrived at Mr. Bellinger's. He has taken a new departure in getting in a fine assortment of walking sticks. His gold headed ebony, certainly cannot fail to please the most fastidious. His order was cash direct to the manufacturers, and saves to his patrons the jobber's profits. He is also just now fitting up a new optical case which will be ready for use in a few days.

Last Saturday was an interesting day for some of the boys and girls of Ironton, and with the terms we might include some who would disdain in other relations, to be called boys and girls. The object of interest was a Jersey calf, at the Iron Co.'s stables, less than a day old. It's a beauty,—only about two and a half feet long, and perhaps two feet high to the top of his back, with its head enough higher to give it a graceful appearance. Add to these its pale color, fawn-like expression, and quick nervous movements, and you have a good idea of what caused an almost constant stream of visitors to the Ironton stables.

Every farmer's boy knows what it is to be plowing along, thinking of what he is going to do next Sunday evening, when, all at once, the plow striking a stone, he finds himself lying several furrows away, and feeling as though he had been kicked by a mule. Well, that's about the way the editor felt when he looked over the files of the Journal for an item he supposed was published in the issue of Jan. 7. The item was, that C. D. Hilton spun the 4th day of January plowing. We were going to challenge the south part of the state to show equal evidence of a mild climate. It's a cold day to put this item out doors now, but we're going to do it, if it gets badly frozen.

The Enterprise Reporter.

A "reporter" from the East Jordan Enterprise recently visited Ironton, and "wrote up" a glowing account of the present business, and business prospects of that thriving little town. The article would be considered fairly exact by the average reporter, and in terms not so exceedingly glowing as to "make the judicious grieve, the censure of which—you must in your allowance, o'erweigh a whole theatre of others." Ironton appreciated the article, and ordered all the extra copies the Enterprise had on hand; and through one of her citizens wrote a letter of appreciation, from which we clip the following:

"We willingly and gracefully concede East Jordan's right to the county seat, the "Whoop" factory, and to the paper with the largest circulation in the county, and all other desirable enterprises she may get. We are also glad to acknowledge that Boyne City and Charlevoix have three other newspapers, each, no doubt, with the "largest circulation in the county." And also admit Charlevoix's pre-eminence as a summer resort. As for ourselves we modestly claim to make the best quality of Lake Superior charcoal pig iron, and as regards the beauties and advantages of our situation, we invite our friends to come and see us. Of course we know we are the "Hub of the Lake" and that the steam yachts in summer, and stage coach in the winter, passing from the three extremes of Pine lake—East Jordan, Charlevoix and Boyne City must revolve around us. Our friends who travel on the lake can't help seeing us and with the return of spring and the aid of the big whistle, we intend they shall hear us also."

Last week the "reporter" put on his cap and overshoes and went out again for a stroll in the balmy air, apparently in deep meditation over the county seat problem. His reverie came to an end by finding that he had arrived at "a beautiful village of about 500 inhabitants, located on the G. R. & I. R. R. in the township of Boyne Valley, in this county." He immediately catches inspiration from the scene before him, and "with the pen of a ready writer," describes the natural advantages of the place, the blessings which flow from the railroad, the various church societies and the well conducted schools, and the convenience and material prosperity, derived from a good supply of hotels, stores, mills and manufacturing establishments, all of which reminds us of the hero of Carlyle's Clothes Philosophy, describing the little German village as seen by moonlight. Well, on the whole, brother reporter, we think your wanderings have not been unsuccessful, even though your meditations have been frequently interrupted.

Friday evening was "a terror," nevertheless there were about twenty came to Mr. Brown's to enjoy the usual literary treat. It was finally considered best however to postpone the program one week, and to meet at the same place. Those present then spent a very pleasant evening with music, games, and social chat.

The paper next week is by Mrs. E. M. Clark, Subject, Longfellow. Remember when your name is called you will be expected to respond by reciting a passage from the poet of the evening.

Reduced R. R. Fare.

At a recent meeting of passenger agents of the various railroads of Michigan in the city of Detroit, it was decided to give reduced fares for the following meetings:

"Brighter than ever," is the testimony of all concerning Vick's Floral Guide for 1886. Besides its usual description and priced list of nearly everything grown in vegetable and flower gardens, and ornamental grounds, it has bound with it the January number of Vick's Magazine, which is growing in artistic beauty and usefulness with the growth of art, and its union with nature in home adornment. There is nothing shoddy about this firm or anything it sends out. We have patronized them for several years and never sent them an order that was not filled in scripture quantity and quality. The price of this beautiful and useful book is only ten cents; but this amount is deducted from your first order, and next year you get it free about Christmas time. Address James Vick, Rochester, N. Y.

THE THROAT

Is often diseased on account of catarrh, producing dryness and a constant desire to cough. That tickling sensation and the hoarseness that is so common to public singers and speakers especially, is relieved at once by Hagan's "Cough Tokens" which are prepared from the most approved formula. Do not wait till acute bronchitis or even consumption takes firm hold of you. Price only 25c per box. Sold by Dr. G. W. Crozier, Charlevoix, and Crozier & Harris, Ironton.

☞ Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease and tone up the system you will find Parmelee's Condition Powders unexcelled. Full pounds 35 cts. Sold by Dr. G. W. Crozier, Charlevoix, and Crozier & Harris, Ironton. 92-143

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose a chronic affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Boschee's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crozier. 152.

SPECIAL PRICES.

We regret that our high priced neighbors are grieved because we are quoting low figures in the public prints, but have no time to shed tears when sympathy is undeserved. They prefer the old plan. Keep the customer in ignorance of real values, boast of "square deals," fossilization, low prices in the abstract and great facilities for buying cheap, but it would not do to commit themselves to a price. In these times, when money is scarce, and every commodity low, the public is not to be gulled with any such chuff. Our prices are acceptable to the people and our business is to serve them.

THE HEART WILL HAVE ITS WAY.

Poor Reason tries her best to rule,
And keep an honest grip;
Yet men will sometimes play the fool,
And give their wigs the slip;
Let Judgment caution or condemn,
And Conscience still cry "Nay,"
Sweet Fancy sings her song to them,
And gives the heart its way—
Its own delightful way—
In spite of all that Thought can do;
In spite of Judgment, tried and true;
And all Experience ever knew—
The heart will have its way.

So Nature wills it—old and young,
The wisest and the best,
Have caught the strain from Passion's tongue,
And felt her sweet unrest.
'Tis well to be of human kind—
To own dear Nature's sway;
For, midst the dim, cold realms of mind,
The heart would lose its way—
Its own delightful way—
In spite of Wisdom's hoppiest rules;
In spite of sages and of schools;
In spite of reason, we're but fools—
The heart will have its way.

See yonder child, by Nature led,
No rule of life to guide;
See Prudence with her thoughtful head,
And manhood in its pride—
All run in pleasure's heedless race,
And after folly stray—
At every age, in every place,
The heart will have its way—
Its own delicious way—
In spite of all the head can do;
In spite of judgment, tried and true;
In spite of sad experience, too,
The heart will have its way.

Alas! for him whose heart is dead
To every generous beat;
No love-light on his life is shed,
No sympathy he'll meet.
'Tis better far to give the price
That fools to folly pay—
To men in everything but vice,
And give the heart its way—
Its own delightful way—
In spite of Wisdom's golden rules;
In spite of sages and of schools,
We're all but erring, love-sick fools—
We give the heart its way.

THE TRAMPS.

BY EDWIN GOADBY.

Is there any more enjoyable feeling in life than to be under a bright morning sky, comfortably equipped, on the tramp through a pleasant country; a world of meadows—a rocky dale—a stretch of brown, billowy moorland? The pulse beats freely, thoughts chase each other like summer butterflies, and you seem to annex every pretty or wild bit of scenery, every quaint homestead, every living thing about you, with an enlarged and conquering individuality. Crowds oppress, cities tire, books weary; but on the tramp you are free to enjoy to receive, and to romance. The junior tramp, however, is a limited individual, and he never gets far away from society and civilization in our island home. The senior tramp, on the contrary, takes ship over sea, and has a wider range. He is everywhere at home. This elder brother is justly entitled a traveler; the junior has to be content with the less ambitious and sometimes shady designation of a tramp. Wandering and little-known tribes are not for him. He feels it at home, with good hope of reaching railways and hotels somewhere, if he turns his back upon them with fine scorn, and a philosophy warranted to endure for twelve or fourteen hours, but good enough while it lasts, and renewable with morning light.

Alas! there are others on the tramp, whose philosophy has little warrant at all, and whose burdens are ever pressing, not gayly left behind! Apart from fine scenery, freedom, and rude health, it is in chance meetings with such specimens of the junior tramp, bright or dull-eyed, that an observing man will find much of the romance of his revolt against acres of bricks and mortar and the elbowing of crowds. The division just made is an induction from a pretty large experience.

The bright-eyed tramp is always a man with an object and a character. He has either a home before him or behind, to reach or to brighten. He will converse freely with you, tell you his history, and accept little kindnesses in a manly spirit. The dull-eyed man does not like you to look him in the face too closely. Scenery seems to oppress him. He ambles along through the finest bits as if he were passing down a back slum. He is a waif; he has no home—only a native parish. He begs, whines, bullies, and I fear he also steals; so true is it that home has its subtle effect on the eye, the character, and the conception of Nature. Meeting such men on a lonely moor, we ask ourselves what restrains them from robbing, and perhaps murdering? The answer comes clear:

"The other idea that sways their minds, the Law!" Cruel Nature, and almost omnipresent Law—these are the only two ideas that rule them.

Walking across a lonely moor, the white road winding ribbon-like over distant brown hills, I was once thinking, in a dreamy way, over some scenes in Scotch history, wherein the sound of a pibroch suddenly filled an apparently deserted hillside with human life, when two men, who had been lying on the dry roadway, making a pillow of their boots, started up, and sent my heart into my mouth. I was never so startled in all my life, for it seemed as if my thoughts had been heard. Looking straight into their steady eyes, and noting there a hopeful look, though the men were almost as startled as I was, I said:

"Good-morning. How's work, mates?"

It was a policeman's hint I was acting upon. To know anything about a man, he had told me—his name, occupation, object—always gives you a certain command over him in a critical moment. Exchanging glances, the tramps answered:

"Bad—awful bad! Do you know of a job, gov'nor?"

I wished I did. They were making a new road seven miles off at P——; they might inquire there.

Work-seekers' stories are often most pathetic.

"What, you on the tramp?" was my remark one day to a young fellow, out at elbows, and with frayed garments, who visited me at home, handing me an envelope addressed to him in my own handwriting. Yes; he had lost his situation in a cotton mill in Lancashire, and had trudged southwestward through many counties round to London, and then through the Midlands, without getting a single job. Of late he had not tried; his clothing forbade it. He was clever; a hard, philosophic student; an original man in every way. Yet he had been herding with the meanest, sleeping anywhere, mostly—out-of-doors, living in aboriginal fashion on raw vegetables, and occasionally sharing what others begged. His wife and child had gone home to her friends, and he had never heard of them for nine months, though he had written to his wife at first regularly. She might be dead.

How had he endured it all? He could scarcely say. He dare not think. Then followed a charming bit. As he had tramped along, it had been his custom to recite all the prose and poetic passages he could remember from his favorite authors—and he had a well-stored memory—to preserve his "identity," to prevent him from sinking to the low conversational level of his queer and casual companions. Occasionally others would repeat the little poems they had learned as children at school; sometimes "flash" ballads, bought in penny sheets at fairs. One companion had stuck to him for months, and whenever my friend seemed to be dull, or the way was dreary, or people were uncivil, this seedy-black-coated "chum" would say to him:

"Give us a bit o' poetry, mate."

Can we ever tell to what uses we may put the verses and passages we learn at school and in early youth? They may perhaps save our sanity and self-respect.

Here is another story. A tanned face, unkempt hair, intelligent eyes, clothes worn into a fluffy softness of texture, boots with loose soles, obviously never made for the wearer, hands dirty and large, announced to me, as I looked at them, a broken-down specimen of the work seeker. His companion, a suspicious, furtive-looking tramp, a sailor, and not unlikely the inspirer of the journey. Condensing what it took me a couple of hours to learn, this was his story:

"Respectably connected, had never learnt a trade; had been a shop porter, married a pretty seamstress, lived happily together for years on our joint earnings. No children—didn't want them—hadn't a care. Wife's work fell off, food lessened; she became ill; bit by bit furniture sold, her heart broken at parting with what she had painfully won by her labor. When we had to sell the sewing machine, I could see 'twas all over—she mourned and died. After her funeral, started off. Friends had left the place. I couldn't stand the work. No more happiness for me, sir. Whither bound? To S——. Worked there once—might get a job. T—— the only man I knew. Hard, sir—very hard!"

During this fragmentary conversation, I saw the man greedily grasp at a fragment of newspaper, lying upon the ground, which had evidently been wrapped round something.

"Might have an advertisment on it, you know!"

The sight of a sewing machine always suggests his touching history, told me along a road skirting the sea one misty spring day.

Tramps are mainly men with no definite trade at their finger-ends. There is always a chance for them somewhere, and they lose nothing by not asking for it. The skilled men on the road are much rarer now, since railway traveling has become so cheap, and unionism has developed. A crisis or a strike will, however, act in two ways—sending men out, and drawing them in. A bundle of clothing or tools is generally carried by the skilled tramp, and his gait is more energetic.

To show how gait betrays, here is an odd story. Meeting two brawny navvies in Cornwall one day, I said to my companion:

"Two well-set men. See how they swing in step; ex-soldiers or policemen, evidently."

Two days afterward we were near one of the barrack-gates at Devonport when, behold, our two tramps coming along in custody. An acute rural policeman had, so we learned, noticed their military step and bearing and gone up to them, saying, with a bold guess:

"You are deserters from Devonport?"

Taken aback, as such persons are if you can show you know anything about them, and possibly suspecting the man had a description of them, they admitted they were, and offered no resistance, discipline once more asserting its power. They belonged to a kilted regiment; they had only been five days from barracks; and finer fellows I never saw. They were navvies by occupation.

Foreigners on the tramp are not very common, except on the coast-roads, and they are mostly sailors. They are not communicative, and know little English. The oddest specimen of a foreigner I remember was a German clock-mender I met in the Midlands, who puzzled me greatly. He walked like a drilled man; had well-kept side whiskers, and a bag over his shoulder. We passed and repassed several times. He called at road-side houses, and as I slackened pace, generally overtook me, but I failed to get him into fair conversation.

"Going far? To M——? Long way yet."

His peculiar German accent was coming out more strongly.

"Seeking work?"

"Yes, as he went along."

For several minutes we kept step in silence. Taking out a newspaper I began to read. The man's face relaxed.

"Any news of Garibaldi?" was the sudden question that startled me. A Garibaldian. I said to myself at once. It was just at the time the Italian hero made his last armed venture. I read him the news, and he broke out warmly:

"Ah, bad man—bad, wicked man!" He became more of a puzzle than ever—a nut I must crack.

I waited on his movements, diverted from my intended walk, and devoted myself to getting his story. He became too excited to be very connected, and his German came grinding out at intervals with orchestral effect. A friend had beguiled him into associating with Republicans; he had been in some trouble in the movement of 1848; he had been imprisoned for opinions he did not hold; he was an absolutist and a skeptic. He had lost all his friends, and had come to England. He was a clock-mender, good at American or any other make, and he tramped a district from a center, earning about ten shillings a week. Our conversation became lively; he forgot to call at road-side houses; and to my defense of Garibaldi, all he could splutter was, "Bad man—very—wicked man!" The chat seemed to excite him very much, and at last he dumbled into a little shop, got a job, and I went forward.

Beggar-tramps are the honest juniors' aversion. They are full of tricks, and sometimes smart in speech.

"I never give to beggars on the road," I remarked to one of this class, airing a young man's general principle, perhaps with some self-conceit.

"Well, p'r'aps you'll honor obligge me with yer name and address, and I'll call on yer?" was the prompt retort.

Between Coventry and Kenilworth swarms of beggars had formerly a fine harvest. I once counted twenty. Some were blind and lame; others were singing vagrants, humming snatches of their wailing ballads. One elderly man, with his legs in the dyke—a true tramp's way of sitting—was conning written testimonials, or begging letters, written on dingy yellow paper, that Chatterton might have envied. He had a tiny black pipe in his mouth, the kind of thing a tramp carries in his waistcoat pocket, and he was studying his papers with an author's self-admiring interest. I fear he was marking down some country parson for a victim.

"Dear Sir—The bearer——" was all I could see before he slipped the paper into a pocket in the lining of his waistcoat.

A dingy haversack and dirty garments may make even an honest junior seem like a beggar. Calling at a house in a lonely part of a well-known Yorkshire dale, to ask where I could get refreshment, the girl shut the door abruptly, and said nothing. To a second knock it opened again, and two timid women appeared, the elder in the rear shouting, "Seven miles further on!"—a pleasant answer for a hungry man! A more civil shepherd's wife, to whom I told my story an hour later, said they were not "particular at Beggarsmond" (Beckermonds), whereat I smiled, for the woman was evidently not punning, though at first I thought she was. Over the moor I should soon see "the Settle;" she meant a large viaduct on the Settle and Carlisle Railway.

With food and tobacco, a junior's heart can always be reached. On one occasion, meeting a hungry specimen, I gave him some of my bread and cheese without any request or word from him.

"Thank you, sir," was all he said, in a cold tone; but after he had gone a pace or two, and begun to eat, he turned round, saying, "Bless you, sir, bless you!" as if some new or old chord of feeling had been reached.

The better tramps are often amusing company, and even the worst compel you to moralize anew on the old theme of the universe and the individual. "Chats with a roadside stone-breaker—the true conqueror, because he always rises on the ruins he makes," as a witty prince said—are often pleasant. The turf-cutter, with his long spade pushed before him under the soil, is also an interesting object. Pleasant, too, it is to watch a thatcher thatching his hay with green rushes; to come across strange birds and animals; to note the old village wells and sun dials, the churches and meeting-houses; to get glimpses of heavy antique furniture through cottage doorways; to be mistaken for a wool-buyer, an artist, "the new exciseman," as I was on one occasion; to spread news of big deeds; to find everywhere that Home is sacred, be it never so small or so lonely. He scarcely lives, in fact, who always carries with him the burden of society, who never tempts the unknown, except over sea, and who has never enjoyed the full and exquisite pleasure of being "on the tramp."

Dampness in Houses.

The absorption of rains and melting snows by the foundation and underpinning walls is a source of dampness not so readily discovered as a defective roof or a naturally wet cellar, though quite as dangerous as either, and it is greatly aggravated when the sills of the house or the first floor is near the ground. If it also happens that the ground around the house is nearly level, then the lower part of it, the part that is in the ground and near it, will surely be damp. It is not alone the water that falls upon the roof of a building that must be kept from the cellar. Even when this is caught in gutters, brought to the ground in conductors, and possibly carried off in drain pipes to some sewer or remote outlet, there is still the water to be taken care of that strikes the sides of the building in driving storms, and which at times is scarcely less than that which falls upon the roof. This is sure to follow down the walls and find its way into the cavity in which the house stands; for it must be borne in mind that every house with a cellar under it occupies a hole in the ground. If this is a wet hole the house is sure to be a damp one. Against this there is one simple precaution that should never be omitted except in latitudes where it never rains; this is, a concrete, or, better, an asphalt, pavement, two, three, or four feet wide, the inner edge resting against the underpinning, entirely surrounding the house, and of course pitching outward. This may not seem as picturesque a setting for the house as to have the rich green turf closely embracing it; it is immeasurably better from the common-sense and sanitary standpoint. If vines or green things of any sort are allowed on the outer walls, they ought to be trained by some means to the upper parts, where the wind can sweep through them, and where they will not keep the ground next the foundation walls moist, spongy, and porous.

A Lawyer's Opinion.

One in the long roll of celebrities who have lived and died in the good old town of Winthrop was a country lawyer and a justice of the peace, known as 'Squire Howe, who flourished three-quarters of a century ago. Lawyers of his class in those days took their pay in work. So, when a man came to him one day and said, "Squire, I want you to tell me how small an amount a man can sue for?" Howe told him to work half a day in his field and he would answer the question.

The man performed a half-day's work, and asked the lawyer for his answer.

"You want to know how small an amount you can sue for, do you?" repeated Howe.

"Yes, sir."

"Well, sir, you can sue for nothing at all, and recover the same amount.—Lewiston (Me.) Journal.

FUN AT HOME.

Entertaining Parlor Games, Tricks, and Pastimes.

THE STOPPLE GAME.—Stick a knife or any sharp thing in the side of an open doorway, leaving the door open and having the knife placed about as high as the head. Then place a cork large or small, on the knife. Go back ten feet, place the left hand over the left eye, walk briskly toward the cork and knock it off with the first finger of the right hand.

SHADOW BITE.—A large sheet is stretched across one end of the room, and one of the party sits on a low stool between it and the light. He is to look right at the sheet, and neither sideways nor behind him. The other players then pass between the light and the seated person, disguising themselves by action or clothing as much as they please, while he is to guess, by the shadows, who they are. When he guesses correctly, the person whom he names must take his place.

THE HIGH JUMP.—Tell one of your friends to place two chairs back to back, about two feet apart, then to take off his shoes and jump over them. If he fails or fears to try, take off your own shoes, put them side by side, and jump over them. This was what you expected your friend to do, only he did not understand you in that way.

LEAVES OF DESTINY.—One of the number is chosen sibyl; she holds slips of paper numbered from 1 to 50; the others draw and the sibyl reads the corresponding number in "Leaves of Destiny."

1. You'll meet this year on Brighton strand, one destined for your heart and hand.
2. Choose one, if you are shrewd, no safely lies in multitude.
3. Endless flirtation doth seem your vocation.
4. Bracing air and embracing arms give Coney Island especial charms.
5. Young or old? Love for gold? Toss odd or even, you'll be told.
6. Some natures change on change of name, but like the rose you'll be the same.
7. For music and balls, you'll have nursery squalls.
8. The right one cometh from New York, with heart and purse as light as cork.
9. Away with pride and cold disdain, or you'll too long alone remain.
10. Don't have for motto, "Both are best," but, "Now choose one, look at the rest."
11. 'Tis simply true, though now you laugh, that you will worship a golden calf.
12. This year a lover will with pride watch thee sporting in the tide.
13. At Ocean Grove you'll forsake worldly notions, drink nothing but tea and attend your devotions.
14. A heart and fortune you will gain, in this summer's grand campaign.
15. Before you go too far, be sure there's not another side the brighter side to mar.
16. A life both long and wisely spent, and children to your heart's content.
17. Happy when single, but not content, you'll marry in haste and soon repent.
18. Lovers and books romantic—the music of the grand Atlantic, this year will make you nearly frantic.
19. The "Mighty Dollar" cannot buy the love for which in vain you sigh.
20. A well-known line you may transpose, "A thorn is always near a rose."
21. You nobly strive to make it known "'Tis bad for man to be alone."
22. Before the present year is out, your wedding cards will be about.
23. A heartless flirt: You'll penance do for all the innocents you slew.
24. Or some fine day, not very remote, you'll meet your match on a ferryboat.
25. Your head is hot, your heart is cold, I pity your lot when you are old.
26. With throbbing heart and trembling hand, soon at the altar you will stand.
27. You'll count amongst your future joys, six little girls, six little boys.
28. Your pace I fear is rather fast—your love's by far too hot to last.
29. Inconstant as the fickle wind, from day to day you'll change your mind.
30. Ever dreaming—never doing, you'll gain naught by seaside wooing.
31. You will love and run away, and live to love another day.
32. You'll have a busy summer, flirting hard with each newcomer.
33. Be merry now, no more you'll laugh when you have found your better-half.
34. Cheer up! cheer up! I plainly see bright golden days in store for thee.
35. Like the flow and ebb of tide, your spirits rise and soon subside.
36. You're building castles in the air, to end in grief and dark despair.
37. You lack the courage to say "no," hence all your troubles here below.
38. Lawn tennis is a pastime sweet, where a life partner you will meet.
39. Enjoy the sunshine while you may, too soon the chance will pass away.
40. Sweet and bright as the month of May, your life shall seem a holiday.
41. You'll break the heartless law of fashion, and own at last the tender passion.
42. Your destiny is hard to fix, bitter and sweet so freely mix.
43. The wedding bells soon merrily shall ring a chime to gladden thee.
44. When you go out to sea to fish you'll catch the very thing you wish.
45. You soon must solve the problem grave—"an old one's pet or a young one's slave?"
46. Some dress to live; but you, I guess, like many, only live to dress.
47. Unless you're a Mormon or a Turk, contented you'll be with this year's work.
48. The happy day is drawing nigh, to all your pains and cares, good-bye.
49. You're leaving now to meet no more the only one you could adore.
50. To young and old I bid farewell, and will next Year their fortunes tell.

Whiling Away the Time.

A gentleman who lived in a small town not very far from Buffalo went the way of all flesh, and the burial ceremonies to be performed over his remains were committed to the charge of the local undertaker. The funeral was quite an important one, for the gentleman was prominent in his own town, and a number of his friends from the city were present. The services were held in the church, but just as the time arrived for taking the remains to the cemetery a severe thunder-storm came up, and it was considered best not to start until the worst of the storm was over. The wait was rather an embarrassing one, but the undertaker was equal to the emergency. Standing on the chancel steps he shouted so as to be heard in the choir loft at the other end of the building: "The organist will please give us a little music to while away the time." Even the mourners smiled.

THE pay of ladies in waiting to the Queen is $3,500 a year; that of lords in waiting $5,000.

TRIALS OF A POKER PLAYER.

The evenings now are growing long,
And the husband's desire will be strong
To "pass" a great deal
Of his leisure where he'll
Hear the poker "pot" singing its song.
He'll come home with his face in a "flush"
And his mouth "full" of business gush;
After tea, he will state
He must hasten back straight
To help the boys through with the rush.
And his wife, with her innocent ways,
Her industrious (?) husband will praise;
But some day she'll find
She was going it "blind"
And her "hand" in amazement will "raise."
For her mother, if still she's on "deck,"
Her trust in her husband will wreck;
With a twist of her lip,
She will put in her "chip."
And the "pot" will boil over a spec.

The foreman of the office came in for some copy, and the editor handed him the obituary notice, and instructed the foreman to put it under the head "Necrology." The foreman read the notice, and in a sort of dazed manner exclaimed: "I say, boss, does you know who de man is wot you is writing about?" "Certainly I knew him. He was a prominent citizen of this place, and has been my friend for years." "Was he a white man?" "Yes, sir." "Well, does you think dis notice should have a head on it like Negrology?" "It is perfectly proper, sir." "All right, den, I puts it dere; but I kind o' spect dat Negrology applies to de black man."—National Weekly.

Literary Prophets.

After Hall's discovery of the two moons of Mars in 1877, it was pointed out that Swift, in "Gulliver's Travels," had prophetically made the Liliputian astronomers discover the two satellites. A still more curious circumstance is now mentioned by Dr. Sophus Tromholt, who relates that in 1851 a story was published by a Hungarian author, Maurus Jokai, in which reference was made to the star which has recently appeared in the Andromeda nebula. The star, according to the story, was revealed to a royal family by the evil spirit, who predicted death in battle to those who could not see it. Jokai's star was probably a thing of imagination only, although there are some reasons for believing that the tale was founded on a Jewish tradition, which would make it probable that the "new star" at which the world is wondering was seen by the Jews, and has reappeared to view after many centuries of invisibility. In other words, the existence of such a tradition would confirm the conclusion that the Andromeda star is a variable of long period.

THE CAROLINA CLAY-EATERS.

A Physician's Analysis Shows that the Clay Contains Arsenic.

[From the Philadelphia Times.]

It has been a matter of speculation for years as to why the "poor white trash" of Central North Carolina ate the clay that is found in that part of the country. It remained for a Philadelphia physician to solve the mystery. A short time ago Dr. Frank H. Getchell, of 1432 Spruce street, went on a gunning expedition to North Carolina. His quest for game led him into the wild country back of Salisbury, which is inhabited, for the most part, by a miserable race of beings with only just enough energy to eke out a wretched existence. These creatures are nearly all veritable living skeletons, and, with few exceptions, are addicted to the habit of clay-eating.

While shooting wild turkey and other game in this wild region, Dr. Getchell made an incidental study of this peculiar habit of vice among the inhabitants. It is a mountainous country, and in the spring little rivulets start out from the caps of snow on the mountain, and, as the days grow warmer, the little rivulets become torrents, and great wash-outs are made along the mountain-side.

The soil is of a heavy, clayey nature, but there are strata of clay that is heavier than the rest, and when the water rushes down this clay is formed into little pellets, and rolls and accumulates in heaps in the valley. These little pellets and rolls are what the clay-eaters devour with as much avidity as a toper swallows a glass of whisky.

"Among the poor people of this section," said Dr. Getchell, "the habit of eating clay is almost universal. Even little toddlers are confirmed in the habit, and the appetite seems to increase with time. While investigating the matter, I entered a cabin occupied by one of these poor families, and saw a little chap tied by the ankle to the leg of a table, on which was placed a big dish of bread and meat and potatoes within easy reach. The child was kicking and crying, and I asked his mother why she had tied him up. She replied that she wanted him to eat some food before he went out to the clay and he refused to do so. The woman confessed that she ate the clay herself, but explained that the child's health demanded that it eat some substantial food before eating any earth. Almost every one I met in this section was addicted to this habit. They were all very thin, but their flesh seemed to be pulled out. This was particularly noticeable about the eyes, which had a sort of reddish hue.

"All of the clay-eaters were excessively lazy and indolent, and all of these conditions combined led me to the conclusion that there must be some sedative or stimulating qualities, or both, in the clay, and I determined to find out whether there was or not. I consequently brought a lot of the clay home with me, and Prof. Tiernan and myself made an analysis of the stuff and discovered that, instead of clay-eaters, the inhabitants of Central North Carolina should more properly be called arsenic-eaters. All of this clay contains arsenic, but exactly in what proportion we have not yet discovered. Arsenic-eating is common in many parts of the world. It acts as a sedative and also as a stimulant. The mountaineers of Styria, Austria, are habitual arsenic-eaters. They give as their reason for eating it that they are better able to climb the mountains after eating the poison, and their explanation is a perfectly reasonable one, as arsenic acts as a sedative to the heart's action. The habit is also prevalent in the Tyrol and in the Alps.

"It is also said that the peasant girls of Switzerland and parts of Germany and in Scandinavia eat arsenic to give luster to their eyes and color to their cheeks, but this is a matter I have not investigated. It has been shown that arsenic or arsenical fumes are a sure cure for intermittent fever. The inhabitants of a section of Cornwall, England, at one time all suffered with this type of fever, but when the copper works were established there the fever disappeared. This was accounted for by the arsenical fumes created in the treatment of copper. As to whether arsenic-eating shortens life I am not yet prepared to say, but I intend investigating the matter thoroughly."

Fight with a Grizzly.

While two telegraph-repairers were carrying on their work in the Selkirk Mountains, one of them was attacked by a grizzy bear, which caught him by the calf of the leg as he was drinking from a stream. The bear endeavored to carry him into the cave, but he placed his arms around a tree and bellowed for his companion, who came close to the bear and emptied seven Winchester balls into him. Seeing the seven balls did not make him relinquish his hold, he caught the ferocious animal by the ears and tried to haul him off. This caused the animal to move a little, thus enabling the friend to pull his companion's rifle from under the bear. He then commenced pouring his friend's seven bullets into the bear's head, and had fired the last shot when the bear rolled over. The trouble then was to get the jaws open to release his hold. This was done by inserting the barrel of one of the rifles and prying it open.—Winnipeg Sun.

The Search for Wilkes Booth.

The assassination of Abraham Lincoln was a military crime. While actually in command of the national forces, he was killed in a city which was his headquarters, strongly fortified and garrisoned, with a military governor, and a provost marshal whose patrols were abroad night and day arresting all persons found violating the "rules of war." Not only was the murdered commander-in-chief, to use the words of the Constitution, "in actual service in time of war," but it was a time of "public danger," in which the assassins were constitutionally excluded from any right to a trial in the civil courts. Peace had not then been conquered; there was a powerful enemy in arms, to whom "aid and comfort" could be given; the leader of the rebellion was still at large; many loyal men were becoming disheartened by the conscriptions and by the prolonged expenditure of blood and treasure; and there are good reasons for believing that many enemies of the Union, having traversed all the stages of crime, confidently hoped by this assassination to inaugurate anarchy at the North, and thus to prepare the way for a dictator.

Before the martyr-President had ceased to live, Secretary Stanton directed a search for the recognized assassin, and an investigation into the circumstances connected with the perpetration of the bloody deed. The next day, in a letter to the Hon. Charles Francis Adams, Mr. Stanton said: "The murderer of the President has been discovered and evidence obtained that these horrible crimes were committed in execution of a conspiracy deliberately planned and set on foot by rebels, under pretense of avenging the South and aiding the rebel cause." Subsequently the Secretary of War announced, in an official bulletin, that all persons who had harbored or secreted Booth, Atzerodt, or Herold, or who had aided or assisted their escape, should be "subject to trial before a military commission, and the punishment is death." The bulletin concluded by saying: "Let the stain of innocent blood be removed from the land by the arrest and punishment of the murderers! All good citizens are exhorted to aid public justice on this occasion. Every man should consider his own innocence charged with this solemn duty, and rest neither night nor day till it is accomplished."

Secretary Stanton faithfully performed his share of this work, and he was ably seconded by the Provost Marshal of the War Department, Col. L. C. Baker. The discovery by Fouche of the celebrated French conspiracy, headed by Pichegru, for the assassination of the first Emperor Napoleon, has been regarded as the greatest triumph of detective-police skill on record; but it is eclipsed by Col. Baker's report of his operations. It was not long after the commission of the great crime before he was thoroughly conversant with the associations and habits of the chief actor's acquaintances in Washington, Baltimore, Montreal, and other cities. Some were promptly arrested, a careful espionage was established over others, confidential agents were sent out far and wide, some of them in disguise, the magnetic telegraph and the photographer's camera were called into the service for the transmission of intelligence and for the multiplication of portraits for identification, and it was not long before the proofs of a conspiracy were overwhelming.

The Megaphone.

This instrument, used on shipboard, is a machine for magnifying sound. It is constructed of two cone-shaped tubes, eight feet long and three in diameter at the large end, which diminish to an apex in the form of rubber tubes small enough to place in the ear. Between these tubes are two smaller ones, constructed in the same manner, but not more than half the diameter. By placing the rubber tubes in the ear and speaking through the smaller cones the person can hear and be heard at a long distance, and it thus aids mariners in listening for the sound of breakers or carrying on conversation with persons on shore or other vessels at a distance.

A Gentle Stimulus

Is imparted to the kidneys and bladder by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which is most useful in overcoming torpidity of these organs. Besides infusing more activity into them, this excellent tonic endows them with additional vigor, and enables them the better to undergo the wear and tear of the discharging function imposed upon them by nature. Moreover, as they are the channel for the escape of certain impurities from the blood, increases their usefulness by strengthening and healthfully stimulating them. In certain morbid conditions of these important organs they fall into a sluggish state, which is the usual precursor of disease. What, then, can be of greater service than a medicine which impels them to greater activity when slothful? No maladies are more perilous than those which affect the kidneys, and a medicine which averts the peril should be highly esteemed.

Strange Ways of the Modern Young Man.

"It seems to me that the young men nowadays have some queer ways about them," remarked old Mrs. Pipkin, as she divested herself of her wrappings after a trip down town.

"Why so, mother?" asked her son.

"Why, in the street car to-day there were two young fellows, and one said to the other: 'Where's your overcoat?' 'In soak,' replied the other one; 'Where's yours?' 'Same place,' was the answer, 'mine has been in soak all summer.' Now when I was a young woman the men used to put their overcoats in a trunk with camphor and things to keep away the moths, but I suppose the latest style is to put them in soak. I'd think it would take all the shape out of them."—Pittsburg Chronicle.

The Great German Physician.

The remarkable phase in the practice of Dr. Peter W. Schmidt (frequently called Dr. Pote) is, he never asked one to describe their disease but tells each one their trouble without asking a question. His success is phenomenal. His practice enormous. He is sought after by hundreds wherever he goes, because he cures when every other physician and remedy have failed. He has allowed his great medicines, Golden Seal Bitters and Lung Food for Consumption, to be offered to the suffering, and we assert without fear of successful contradiction that there is no disease they will not cure. Thousands of bottles have been sold. Thousands of broken-down and discouraged invalids saved. Send to Golden Seal Bitters Company, Holland City, Mich., for Facts for the Million! Free.

A Remedy for Lung Diseases.

Dr. Robert Newton, late President of the Eclectic College, of the city of New York, and formerly of Cincinnati, Ohio, used DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM very extensively in his practice, as many of his patients, now living, and restored to health by the use of this invaluable medicine, can amply testify. He always said that so good a remedy ought to be prescribed freely by every physician as a sovereign remedy in all cases of lung diseases. It cures consumption, and has no equal for all pectoral complaints.

I have been bothered with catarrh for about twenty years. I could not tell how many different remedies I have tried, and none seemed to reach my case like Ely's Cream Balm. I had lost my smell entirely for the last fifteen years, and I had almost lost my hearing. My eyes were getting so dim I had to get some one to thread my needle. Now I have my hearing as well as I ever had, and I can see to thread as fine a needle as ever I did, and my smell is partly restored, and it seems to be improving all the time. I think there is nothing like Ely's Cream Balm for Catarrh.—Mrs. E. E. Grimes, 67 Valley street, Rendrill, Perry Co., Ohio.

Around the County.

Ironton.

In reading the latest issue of the East Jordan Enterprise, we notice that it does not confine its kind words to the immediate vicinity of East Jordan, but Ironton, Boyne City and other places come in for their share of attention. Some say that the favorable discription of Boyne City's industries was actuated from a kindly desire, on the part of the editor, to console that village for its inevitable(?) disappointment in not securing that choice plum—the county seat. Meanwhile if it is the destiny of our wandering county seat to take another excursion on the lake, we would be in time in inviting it to stop in Ironton long enough to obtain the necessary repairs contingent to constant disturbances.

If it should be our duty to chronicle a happy event in the lives of two of our young friends in next week's JOURNAL, we will do it without a murmur. Mind we say, if, as this is only a shadow cast before a coming event.

A curious instance of what a simple change of comma can procure has been noticed of late. It runs as follows: Lord Palmerston then entered on his head, a white hat upon his feet, large, but well-polished boots upon his brow, a dark cloud in his hand, his faithful walking-stick in his eye, a menacing glare saying nothing.—Ex.

The following from the pen of the late J. G. Holland, says the Chicago Current, possesses the essential elements of pathos and truth: Labor is the honorable thing among men. There is not a neatly graded lawn, a pretty garden, or a well trained tree that does not tell of it. It builds magnificent cities, and creates navies, and bridges rivers, and lays railroad tracks, and infuses every part of the flying locomotive. Wherever a steamer plows the waves, or the long canal bears the nation's inland wealth: wherever the wheat fields wave and the mill wheel turns, there labor is the conqueror and the king. The newspaper, wherever it spreads its wings, bears the impress of toilers' hands. Should not the man who produces all that he can eat and wear be honored? Should not the laborer be well housed? To us there is more true poetry about the laborer's life and lot than any other man's under heaven. It matters not in what calling a man toils, if he toils manfully, honestly, and contentedly. The little tin pail should be a badge of nobility everywhere, and in the "good time coming, boys," it will be.

One of the greatest trials of the newspaper profession is that its members are compelled to see more of the sadness of the world than any other profession. Through every newspaper, day after day, go all the wickedness of the world; all the vanities that want to be puffed; all the revenges that want to be reached; all the mistakes that want to be corrected; all the dull speeches wanted to be thought eloquent; all the meanness that wants to get its wares noticed gratis in the editorial columns; in order to save the tax of the advertising columns; all the men who want to be set right and were never so; all the cracked-brained philosophers with stories long as their hair, and gloomy as their finger-nails in the morning because bereft of soap—all the bores who come to stay five minutes, talk five hours. Through the editorial and reportorial rooms all the follies and shames of the world are seen, day after day, and the temptation is to believe in neither God, man, or woman. It is no surprise to me that in this profession there are skeptical men: I only wonder that journalists believe anything. De Witt Talmage.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage, made and executed by Milo Eaton and Ellen J. Eaton, his wife, of Charlevoix, Michigan, to Mary J. McGlashan, dated February fourth, A. D. 1882, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for the county of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan, on the fourth day of February, A. D. 1882, in liber "3" of Mortgages, on page 475, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of Two Thousand Four Hundred and Fifty-eight and 33-100 Dollars, ($2,458.33), principal and interest and no suit or proceedings at law having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage or any part thereof. Now, therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and the statute in such case made and provided. Notice is hereby given that on Thursday the twenty-second day of April, A. D. 1886, at one o'clock in the afternoon, I shall sell at public auction to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in South Arm township, located in the village of South Lake, commonly called East Jordan, in said county of Charlevoix, (that being the place and building in which the Circuit Court for Charlevoix County is holden), the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with interest at ten per cent, and all legal costs, including such attorney fee provided for in said mortgage as is allowed by the statute in such case made and provided, to wit: All those certain pieces or parcels of land situate in the township of Charlevoix, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, and described as follows, to wit: Commencing at the quarter post between sections twenty six (26) and thirty-five (35), in township thirty-four (34) north of range eight (8) west; thence due south twelve (12) and 25-100 chains; thence east to the shore of Pine Lake; thence north along the shore of Pine Lake, to the section line between sections twenty-six (26) and thirty-five (35); thence west along said section line to the place of beginning, containing eight and 5-8 (8⅝) acres, more or less. Also the north half of the north east quarter of the north west quarter, all of which is contained in section thirty-five (35) in township thirty-four (34) north of range eight (8) west, containing twenty-eight and ⅝ acres, more or less, together with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage, made by Mary Blackbird to John A. Gaeot, dated October 3d, A. D. 1881, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, on the 3d day of October, A. D. 1881, in liber 8 of mortgages, on page 522, which said mortgage was on the 22d day of December, 1881, assigned by said John A. Gaeot to Frederick W. Mayne, said assignment being on record, in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 10 of mortgages on page 610, and on the 6th day of December 1883, was assigned by said Frederick W. Mayne to Hugh Miller, said assignment being recorded in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 13 of mortgages, on page 146, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of one hundred and ninety six and 15-100 dollars, as principal and interest, and no suit or proceedings at law having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof. Now, therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and the statute in such case made and provided, notice is hereby given that on Saturday, the 13th day of March, A. D. 1886, at one o'clock in the afternoon, I shall sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the town hall in the village of East Jordan, that being the place where a Circuit Court for Charlevoix County is holden, the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with ten per cent interest, and all legal costs, together with an attorney's fee of fifteen dollars, covenanted for the rein, the premises being described in said mortgage as all that parcel of land, situate in the township of Hayes, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, and known and described as follows: The south west quarter (¼) of the south west quarter (¼) of section thirty-six (36) township thirty four (34) north of range seven (7) west, containing forty acres according to the United States survey.

Dated Charlevoix, Mich., Dec. 15, 1885.

Assignee of Mortgage.

FREDERICK W. MAYNE,
Attorney for Assignee of Mortgage.

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage, made and dated the fourth day of September, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four, executed by Henning Frizzell to the Pine Lake Iron Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, and doing business in the County of Charlevoix, in the State of Michigan, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of the said County of Charlevoix, in Liber 11 of mortgages at page 11, on the 15th day of April, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-five, at one o'clock in the afternoon, and the same is now owned by the said Pine Lake Iron Company. And whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of Fifty-Five Dollars and Twenty-two cents, principal and interest, which sum is a part of the purchase price of the premises herein described, and a further sum of fifteen dollars provided by law as an attorney's fee in the foreclosure of said mortgage, which is the whole amount claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage, and no suit or proceedings at law or in chancery having been instituted to recover the debt now remaining secured by the said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in the said mortgage has become operative.

Now, Therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises herein described at public auction to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in the township of South Arm, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, which is the place of holding the circuit court for said county, on Friday, the 2d day of April next, at twelve o'clock meridian, which premises are described in the said mortgage as follows, to wit: lots twenty (20) and twenty-one (21) in block number twelve (12) in the Pine Lake Iron Co.'s plat of Ironton, town of Eveline, county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan.

Dated December 30th, A. D. 1885.

An Eloquent Appeal to Young Ladies by the Mistress of the White House.

J. G. Holland wrote in an album which belonged to Mrs. Hayes, the wife of the ex president, these words: "Women, only, can make wine drinking unfashionable and heal the nation of its curse." If this be true, what a great and awful responsibility rests upon the women of our land! But, girls, do we realize this? Where and how do we stand with regard to this terrible curse of our country which is dragging—our brothers and fathers down to ruin?

In 1882, Miss Cleveland, now mistress of the white house, at Washington, wrote as follows in the Youth's Temperance Banner:

"I wish some strong, bright angel stood before you just now, while you read, girls, to flash before you, as no words of mine can, the power you possess to help or hinder the cause of temperance, to make you feel your responsibility, because you are girls, in the matter; to shudder at its weight, and to never cease trying to fulfill it! Doubtless you have heard a great deal about the value of your smiles; but do you know the value of your frowns? I wish I could make you feel the value of knowing just what to frown upon. What a man must do by a blow a woman can do by a frown. When the time comes that the young man who now shares his time in your society and the saloon, who jokes about temperance in your presence, and takes a glass socially now and then, is made to feel that these things cannot be if you are to be his companion at a party, ride, or church; that good society cannot tolerate these things in its members; in short, that this kind of man is unfashionable and unpopular—then alcohol will tremble on its throne, and the liquor traffic will hide its cancerous face.

"When Mrs. Hayes became mistress of the white house she did an unheard-of thing. She banished wine from all her entertainments, with just one exception. Secretary Evarts made a fuss. He was mortified. He could not endure to have Lord and Lady English, Count and Countess French, Baron and Baroness German come to the white house dinners and have nothing fit for them to drink—not a drop of poison! It was utterly queer! So Mrs. Hayes made one exception in favor of those great foreign highnesses, and allowed wine upon her table in their presence. But only for once. Her conscience—high-souled woman that she is—smote her for that one little cowardly compromise with wrong. She could better endure to have Secretary Evarts and the Smiths ashamed of her than to be ashamed of herself. So she quietly and forever after prohibited wine from her table, and cheerfully endured the lifted eyebrows and shrugged shoulders of the diplomatics, British, French, Russian—all, the little short lived hiss of 'fushionable' society until that hiss turned to a cheer, and fashionable society turned around, like the spaniel it is, and trotted on behind its mistress. It became unfashionable to serve wine and offer wine in fashionable society while Mrs. Hayes was in the white house."

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the money secured by a certain mortgage, dated the thirtieth day of October, 1883, executed by Benjamin Walker and Maria Walker, his wife, of Charlevoix county, Michigan, to Josiah E. Harding, of Antrim county, Michigan, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of Charlevoix county, in liber 9 of mortgages, on page 163, on the 31st day of October, A. D. 1883, and whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of Three Hundred and Seventy-six dollars, and no suit or proceeding having been instituted at law, or in equity, to recover the debt now remaining secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof, and whereas, in and by the conditions of said mortgage it is provided that should any default be made in the payment of the interest due thereon, or any part thereof, on any day whereon the same is made payable, and should the same remain unpaid and in arrears for the space of thirty days, the principal sum together with all arrearages of interest thereon shall at the option of the said obligee or his assigns become due and payable immediately thereafter, and whereas, default has been made in the payment of the interest due on the principal sum on the day when the same became due, and whereas said interest has remained unpaid and in arrears for the space of over thirty days; the said Josiah E. Harding, has elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole amount of said mortgage, principal and interest, due and payable, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative. Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in village of East Jordan, in the county of Charlevoix, Michigan, (that being the place where the Circuit Court is holden in said county), on the 27th day of April, 1886, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of that day, which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows: The west half of the southeast quarter of section seventeen, in township thirty-four north, of range seven west, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan.

Dated January 19, 1886.

Italians in New York.

A great many hard things have been said about New York Italians as a class, but a good deal might be said in their favor. The worst thing about them is the way many of them live. The bad way of living, however, is confined to the low grade, composed of ragpickers, bone-gatherers and street sweepers. One good thing to be said for all, even the lowest, is that they are industrious and fairly honest. There are very few loafers among the Italians, and it does not appear that there are many thieves. At all events, if they steal, it is in a petty way, that does not attract attention, and hardly amounts to crime. They are willing to do any kind of work, and if they can't get $2 a day they will take $1.50 rather than be idle. We hear a good deal about laziness among the Italians at home, but they certainly don't show it here.

Another point in their favor is their habit of temperance. It is true that those of the lower order drink much stale beer, which costs them very little money, but they don't drink whisky or gin, and an Italian in the fighting drunk condition is rarely seen. While let alone, their inclination is to be peaceful, and when they get into trouble with other people, it is generally because they are not let alone. They defend themselves when attacked, but they are seldom the aggressors in any trouble. Much is said about their readiness to use the knife, but my observation is (and I have given some attention to the matter) that quite as much stabbing is done by the old-time rowdy element as by the Italians, and generally with less provocation. The police regard even the worst of them as models of peacefulness and good conduct in comparison with the ordinary gangs and corner loafers. New York has no reason to regret the growth of the Italian element. It is valuable in many ways, and it contains some of the very best material for development in the future.

One evidence of Italian progress is the position the Italians have taken in the restaurant business. They seem to have even better qualifications for this business than the French, though the latter are supposed to beat the world at it. In New York, however, they don't by any means—in fact the Italians are beating them. The table d'hote system, which has grown greatly in favor in the last ten years, is now mainly in the hands of Italians. I would not say that they manage it better than the French, but they are certainly getting control of it, and that fact is strong evidence for them anyway.

There are several excellent restaurants of this kind on Fourteenth street and on Fifth avenue and Fourth avenue, all kept by Italians, and are getting the best kind of custom. One characteristic of them is that they all grow from small beginnings. There is no flourishing at the start, but a quiet commencement in a small place where the rent is low, and then a steady expansion. Where a large business is done there is a good deal of profit in it, and some of the Italians who began with a few hundred dollars are now quite wealthy. I hear, too, the Italian chief cooks are making their way into hotels and private houses where Frenchmen formerly had had the field to themselves. In fact, the sons of sunny Italy are pushing ahead in all directions in New York, and seem pretty sure to continue doing so.

"MURDER WILL OUT."

A Clue to the Murderer of Capt. Phillip Caffrey.

Capt. Phillip Caffrey, of the schooner Fair Play, went to Milakokia early in the spring of 1883, and was never again seen alive. A reward was offered by his brother who went there in search of him, for any information that would lead to the discovery of his whereabouts. Shortly afterwards his body was found on the beach and brought here, where examination proved he had been shot and the coronor's jury rendered a verdict to that effect.

So great was the mystery concerning the murderer's identification and whereabouts, that his apprehension and capture never was seriously undertaken, and gradually the whole matter passed from the public mind.

Late last fall, soon after the Fairplay started for Florida, E. H. Green received a letter from Ben Thompson (evidently the same person mentioned below), stating that he could give information that would, if followed, lead to the arrest and conviction of the murderer. Mr. Green turned the letter over to F. W. Mayne, attorney for Capt. Caffrey's relatives. Nothing further has come to public notice here until yesterday, when our friend Weaver handed us the Door County Advocate, printed at Sturgeon Bay, Wis., and bearing date Jan. 28, from which we clip the following:

On Sunday a dispatch was received from J. L. Murphy, sheriff of Marinette county, stating that two prisoners had escaped from jail on the preceding night and asking that a watch be kept for them. Under-sheriff Scott telephoned a description of the men to Thayerport, and in the evening was notified that they had landed at that place and were held to await his coming. Mr Scott immediately started for Thayerport and, at midnight, the runaways were safely lodged in jail. The men had crossed the bay on the ice during the intense cold of Saturday night, and were so poorly clad that one of them had his feet badly frozen. They refused to give their names or the nature of the charges against them. But upon the arrival on Monday of Sheriff Murphy it was learned that their names are James Black and Ben S. Thomson, alias Geo. C. Smith. Black had been brought to Marinette from Florence, having broken jail at that place, but was recaptured and placed in the Marinette jail for safe-keeping. He is charged with having drawn a revolver on a conductor and a brakeman while on board a train on the Northwestern road several months ago, and his trial will take place at the session of the circuit court which convenes at Florence in March. Jim Black is a rather hard-looking character, and no doubt deserves to be punished on general principles. Thompson, or Smith, is charged with stealing a sum of money from John Johnson, who formerly kept a saloon in Menekaune, but who has since Thompson's confinement left for parts unknown. Thompson claims that he is the victim of a base conspiracy, and his version of the matter is here copied from the last number of the Marinette North Star:

"Ben S. Thompson, who now lies in the Marinette county jail to await trial in June for committing burglary and larceny, is innocent of the crimes charged. My real name is Geo. C. Smith. Since the 17th of June, 1885, I have been traveling in search of my father, who disappeared while on his way between Duluth, Minn., and Superior City, Wis. While in Chicago during the early part of June last year, I was informed that parties in Milwaukee, Wis., had furnished money to murder my father. Arriving at Marinette, in search for the murderers, I was arrested at the instigation of John Johnson, the Scandinavian saloon-keeper at Menekaune, who left for parts unknown some time ago. This man, Johnson, with others, put this job on me for to save themselves and get out of the country, as they not only murdered my father, but also the captain of the schooner Fairplay, of Charlevoix, Mich. They also tried to rob the Hopkins manufacturing company, of Bear Lake, Mich., and as they did not find anything there they set the building on fire and burned the building, and two children who were in the house at the time perished in the flames.

This crime has been a mystery until lately, when it was found that those same persons were in Marinette and the surrounding towns. After spending several hundred dollars in trying to capture these same persons, who have caused my arrest for something which I never committed, is a very hard thing for me to bear up under. You need not take my word for this, because proofs can be furnished to substantiate any statement made by me. Any one who will take the trouble to call on me can be furnished with addresses of persons to whom inquiries can be sent. I hope some one will go to the trouble and investigate the matter. Respectfully,

GEORGE C. SMITH.

From the above it will be seen that a pretty good clue is given concerning the murderer; and having so many crimes to settle for we have reason to hope justice may overtake him at last. The friends of the murdered man state that it is their intention to make every endeavor to capture the criminal.

Death of Mrs. Bayard.

Mrs. Bayard, wife of the secretary of state, died on Sunday morning. The immediate cause of her death was congestion of the brain, brought on by the sudden death of her daughter two weeks ago. At first she stood the strain quite well, but the effort was too great for her constitution, and she was compelled to take to her bed on Friday, from which time it was plainly seen that death was near at hand. Secretary Bayard is completely heart broken with his double bereavement. His friends think he cannot be induced to continue in his present position, but will at once resign and retire to private life. All festivities at the capital have ceased for the week, and expressions of sympathy are sent from all parts of the country.

German Officers.

The daily existence of a German officer is a very studious and fatiguing one, but there is nothing whatever in it that can not be overcome and learned; and only a very few fail to do so. The preparation of written essays is one form of professional study which knocks all desire to drone in the head. The Count von Moltke believes that book study produces practical results: he can not talk verbally to his whole army, but he can reach every officer in Germany with the assistance of printers' ink, and he does it. That "writing makes an exact man and reading makes a full one" is something which gentlemen in the American army ought not to forget. In this country, at certain and frequent times in the year, essay subjects are given out to first lieutenants, and on a certain hypothesis furnished they are expected to examine opinions critically, point out advantages and inconveniences from a tactical point of view; discuss the way in which certain combats were conducted, and draw conclusions from encounters. These literary compositions signed, they are sent to their ultimate destination. First, it is the battalion commander who examines the essays, and he is obliged to record his opinion at length on the merits of each, as well as his own views on the subject, all of which becomes a part of the document, and is "respectfully forwarded." Next, the colonel takes a whack at it. He in turn must criticise the remarks of his battalion commanders as well as the essays of their subalterns, write his own views on the matter, send the whole forward to subject himself to the same ordeal, and so on up to the general commanding an army corps, whose office is the ultimate destination of the essays.—Cor. San Francisco Chronicle.

Playing in Boston long ago the elder Booth was seized with a sudden fancy for taking long night walks, on which he made his son accompany him. One night they started out after midnight, and for three hours walked about the docks and quays. Not a soul did they meet until their return to the hotel, when they saw a dark figure following them, skulking in the shadows of the warehouse. Edwin was somewhat scared, but his father stepped forward and in a loud voice said, "Good evening, my friend." The man did not answer, but came forward into the light and showed himself, in looks at least, a thorough ruffian. With a curse he came toward them. The old man drew himself up and asked, "Who are you, my friend? Who are you?" "I'm a thief, that's what I am," said the fellow. "And I," said Booth, in a voice of wonderful sweetness, "am a pirate," and he shook the astonished ruffian warmly by the hand. The effect was electrical, Edwin Booth said, and the man troubled them no further.

Literary activity in the United States is on the increase. 1,060 more copyrights having been granted during 1885 than at a corresponding time in 1884. This increase is largely due to the great number of articles copyrighted by newspapers and magazines.

Concise Record of the Week.

FORTY-NINTH CONGRESS.

THE two political parties came to a deadlock in the House soon after the reading of the journal on Jan. 22, when Chairman Herbert, of the Naval Committee, asked the passage without debate of the Boutelle resolution calling on the Secretary of the Navy for information regarding the erasure of inscriptions and the discharge of Union soldiers at Norfolk Navy Yard. The Republicans insisted upon having an hour and a half or two hours' debate on either side. Mr. Herbert took the position that as the resolution was simply one of inquiry of the Secretary of the Navy in regard to the removal of inscriptions and discharge of Union soldiers, about which the House had no knowledge, any debate that might take place before the information was sent to the House by the Secretary of the Navy would be premature. Reed, of Maine came to the assistance of his colleague, and Hewitt, of New York, resigned the position of the Chairman, and the contest began. The Democrats did not have a quorum present, and the dilatory methods of Mr. Boutelle, intended to prevent a vote on ordering the previous question, operated also to give the Democrats time to send for absentees. Mr. Herbert also demanded a call of the House as was to waste more time, and while that was going on Democrats who had supposed that the day would be devoted to private bills, and had gone to the departments on business or to call on the President, were notified that their votes were needed, and repaired at once to the Representatives' Hall. It was nearly two hours and a half before Mr. Herbert found a sufficient number of Democrats present and not paired to move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with. Meanwhile, Riggs, of Illinois, and Sowden, of Pennsylvania, were brought to the bar by the Sergeant-at-Arms to explain their absence. After the members had some fun with the two prisoners, their excuses were accepted. The previous question was ordered by a party vote—153 to 91—and the half hour allowed for debate under such circumstances was divided equally between Mr. Bontelle, of Maine, and Mr. George Wise, of Virginia. After a sharp partisan debate, the resolution was passed, with an amendment inserted by the Democrats extending the inquiry to dismissals made at the navy-yard and light-house district at Norfolk, during the terms of the immediate predecessors of the present Secretary of the Navy. The Senate was not in session on the 23d.

THE Chair presented a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, at the session of the Senate on Jan. 25, stating that national banks hold $5,069,850 of the bonds called for payment next month; and a communication from the Secretary of the Interior asking for additional clerks for the Commissioner of Railroads. C. E. Walthall was sworn in as Senator from Mississippi. Mr. Hoar reported a bill to provide for the settlement of the debt of the Pacific railroads. Messrs. Dawes and Ingalls made some severe comments upon the misspelling of words in bills and resolutions received from the House, particularly as to a measure for the relief of the Northern Cheyenne Indians. In his opening prayer the House Chaplain feelingly referred to the death of Representative Rankin, of Wisconsin, and invoked the divine blessing and protection upon the sorrowing family. The House thereupon adjourned out of respect to the memory of the deceased.

THE Chair laid before the Senate, on the 26th of January, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury relating to the payment of salaries of Collectors of Customs not confirmed by the Senate; also, a letter stating that the information called for by a recent resolution of the Senate, relating to claims paid under French and Spanish treaties, could be most speedily furnished by the State Department. The letters were appropriately referred. Mr. Voorhees then called up his resolution expressive of the Senate's deep sense of the public loss in the death of the late Vice President Hendricks. The resolution having been read, Mr. Voorhees addressed the Senate. After hearing the speeches of Messrs. Voorhees, Hampton, Sherman, Sanlsbury, Evarts, Ransom, Spooner, Vest, and Harrison, in memory of the deceased, the Senate adopted the commemorative resolution and then adjourned. In the House Mr. Swinburne of New York introduced a bill declaring the silver dollar of 412½ grains a legal tender of equal value with gold coin. The bill also provides for the purchase of $4,000,000 worth of silver bullion per month, and the issuance monthly of $2,000,000 of silver certificates. Bills were also introduced in the House to establish life-saving stations outside San Francisco, for the relief of railway mail clerks who have been in the service twenty years, conferring the rank of commander upon Chief Engineer Melville, to authorize the payment of postal notes at any money-order office, to limit the capital of any national bank to $5,000,000, to prohibit the importation of pauper labor, to give preference to American citizens in employing laborers on public works and to limit the jurisdiction of Federal Courts in patent cases. A resolution was introduced directing the Secretary of the Treasury to report his reasons for closing the mint at Carson, Nevada.

A MEMORIAL of the Legislature of Kansas praying for the establishment of two additional military stations in that State as a protection against Indian depredations was passed in the Senate by Mr. Ingalls on the 27th ult. Mr. Plumb presented a memorial from the same body praying for an extension of the military facilities at Fort Riley, Kas. The papers were appropriately referred. Bills were introduced to appropriate $350,000 for the purchase of a postoffice site in San Francisco, and to reimburse the survivors of the Jeannette Arctic Expedition. Mr. Harrison made a speech favoring the admission of Dakota to the Union. The House of Representatives passed a bill to forfeit certain lands granted to the States of Missouri, Alabama, and Louisiana, to aid in the construction of railroads. A resolution was adopted directing the Secretary of the Interior to furnish copies of all contracts on file regarding the Southern Pacific Railway and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. The Senate resolutions touching the death of Vice President Hendricks were presented to the House, and on motion of Mr. Holman (Ind.) were laid upon the table for the present. A smile ran through the House when the chaplain, in his opening prayer, returned thanks that "Our silver and gold have been multiplied," and the silver men pretended to see in the fact that silver had been placed before gold an indication that the religious petition was in favor of a double standard.

EASTERN.

A Boston dispatch says "a notable strike ended yesterday, when it was announced at Lynn that the firm of Morgan & Dore, which operate shoe factories in Lynn, Richmond, Me., and Pittsfield, N. H., had yielded to the demands of the Knights of Labor. This strike, which has been in progress a year and a half, originated with the lasters in the Richmond factory. The firm has now decided to discharge all the men not belonging to the unions who have been hired in the place of strikers, and to adopt a scale of wages satisfactory to the Knights of Labor. This is one of the most decided victories won by the Knights in New England, and causes great rejoicing."

The workingmen of New York propose to ask special legislation at Albany, especially the passage of an arbitration law. The Commissioner of Labor Statistics has formally pronounced laycotting better than striking.

The St. Cloud Hotel and six stores on Arch street, Philadelphia, were wiped out by fire. The loss is estimated at over a quarter of a million dollars.

Peachbuds in the Hudson River Valley have been killed by the frosts, and for the third successive year there will be no crop.

The strikers in the Pennsylvania coal regions have ordered out the engineers at the water pumps. This will cause the flooding of the different mines and great destruction to property.

WESTERN.

In a bicycle contest at Minneapolis, Minn., Woodside broke all records from 67 to 175 miles.

A portion of Stockton, Cal., was flooded by an overflow of the St. Joaquin River. The Moss wheat tract, 3,000 acres, was submerged, and the breaking of a levee placed 13,000 additional acres of wheat and orchards under water, the loss being placed at $425,000.

The Mississippi River, says a St. Louis dispatch, is blockaded by a solid mass of ice from this point as far north as the mouth of the Illinois River and as far south as Ste. Genevieve, a distance of sixty-five miles. The ice is sixteen or seventeen inches in thickness, and resembles in many respects the gorge which blockaded the river in 1875, and which remained intact from Dec. 31 to March 2. This year the river closed on Jan. 13, and the ice is expected to break up about the latter part of February.

Gov. Murray, of Utah, has vetoed an act of the legislature giving absolute right of bail to all convicts except murderers in the first degree.

John G. Jones, a colored citizen of Chicago, has addressed to R. B. Hayes a letter of inquiry regarding the disposition of the John F. Slater educational fund of $1,000,000, of which the ex-President is a trustee, complaining that applications from reputable colored people have not been even respectfully considered.

After a two hours' fight with Indians, on the 11th ult., at East Nocorai, in Sonora, the American force, under Captain Crawford, was fired on by Mexican troops, American scouts returning the fire. Five of the American party were wounded, among them Captain Crawford, who died three days later, while the Mexican loss was four killed and five wounded. The Mexicans claim that they mistook the Americans for Indians, but Lieutenant Maus gives it as his opinion that the Mexicans intended to rout the Americans and appropriate their camp equipage and commissary stores.

Gen. David R. Atchison died at his home in Clinton County, Missouri, last week. He served in the National Senate for twelve years, and was Acting President of the United States for one day. Polk retired from office at noon Sunday, March 4, 1849, and Taylor could not be inaugurated till Monday. Mr. Atchison, therefore, as President of the Senate, held the reins of Government until the inauguration had taken place.

SOUTHERN.

Near the village of Manchester, Clay County, Ky., Theodore Benge, Dick Stivers, and Dan and George Gray, all young farmers, went together to the house of Kate Harvey, a woman of ill-repute. They were drinking, and grew quarrelsome, the woman being the cause of the trouble. In the end pistols were drawn and a duel fought in the house between the Gray boys, who were brothers, on one side, and Benge and Stivers on the other. The woman ran out of the house at once and obtained assistance from the village. When she came back with several men half an hour afterward George Gray, and Benge and Stivers were found lying upon the floor dead, each having several bullets in him. Dan Gray was still living, but is mortally wounded.

WASHINGTON.

The Mississippi Legislature has memorialized Congress in favor of the Eads Ship Railway.

The House Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures is busily engaged in the consideration of the silver question, the Washington correspondents inform us. At a meeting of the committee the other day—

The subject was discussed in an informal way, and, while members spoke more freely than heretofore, they did not state their views specifically but in very general terms. The discussion took a very wide range, reference being made to the French monetary system and our own paper money. The following resolution was introduced by Mr. Lanham during the session of the committee:

"Resolved, That it is the duty of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, at as early a day as practicable, to report to the House a bill looking to the free coinage of standard silver dollars."

Mr. Scott (Pa.) thereupon introduced as a substitute for the resolution the following:

"Resolved, As the sense of this committee, that the best interests of the country cannot be promoted by any bill now before the committee looking to the free coinage of silver."

Mr. Lanham then also introduced a resolution on the subject, which read as follows:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this committee that the law regulating and providing for the issue of gold and silver certificates should be so amended as to provide for the retirement of the same and for the issue of coin certificates in their stead."

No action was taken by the committee upon any of these resolutions, nor did they elicit a distinct expression of views from any of the members. It was resolved that the question should be further discussed and opinions sought from different persons interested in the question until Feb. 10, when the committee will proceed to consider the distinct propositions now before them.

The House Committee on Military Affairs has decided to report favorably a bill to erect in New York, at a cost of $750,000, a monument to Gen. Grant, one-third of this sum to be contributed by the public.

POLITICAL.

Civil-Service Commissioner Dorman B. Eaton has sent his resignation to the President, to take effect March 9.

President Cleveland gives it as his opinion that the Senate has no right to request the information upon which he had suspended officials.

Washington telegram: "The Cabinet had a long session over the Senate's demand on Attorney General Garland for information about the United States Attorney's office in Southern Alabama. It is understood that all the President's advisers looked upon the resolution as simply a clever device to get by circumlocution facts which could not be obtained by direct methods, and, although no definite conclusion was reached, it was agreed that Attorney General Garland should draft a reply, which will be submitted at another meeting, and which will be a refusal to give the desired information."

The caucus committees of the Ohio Senate held a conference Wednesday, the 27th ult., to effect a settlement of the existing troubles, and when the Senate met at 4 p. m. adjournment was voted until morning, at the request of the conferees. Previously the Republican Senate held a session, the only business transacted being the approval of the journal. The Democrats held an indignation meeting in the evening.

Chicago dispatch: "The attorneys for the prosecution in the Mayoralty contest yesterday asked Judge Prendergast to enter an order dismissing the case, and taxing the costs to the prosecution. The order was made as requested."

FOREIGN.

The British Ministry has been defeated by a vote of 329 to 250, on the question of allotments.

A formal motion for the abolition of the office of Viceroy of Ireland has been made in the British House of Lords. A dispatch from Rome says that the Monitor expresses disgust at the opposition displayed in the Queen's speech to the sundering of the legislative union between Great Britain and Ireland. It longs for the time when Protestantism shall be entirely extirpated from Ireland and Catholicism recognized.

In reply to a second note from the European Powers, Greece states that she holds to her original position, and refuses to disarm.

The British Government has made the issue of coercion practically a test one, and the Parnellites have accepted the gage of parliamentary battle. They hope, with the aid of the Liberals, to drive the Salisbury administration from power. The severance of the implied union of the eighty-six Nationalists with the Tories is now complete.

The defeat of the Salisbury Government has left all the political parties in the British House of Commons in a state of chaos, and may result in a dissolution of Parliament and an appeal to the country. The crisis excites but little interest among the general public. Everything is quiet and the commercial and financial markets are but slightly weaker. The Economist's Journal, of Dublin, is jubilant over the defeat of the Government and says: "The action of the leaders of the National League in defeating the Government emphasizes the fact that there is a new force in politics which Parliament has to consider." The Dublin Irish Times says: "The Parnellites rely for help on Mr. Gladstone alone. They believe that he will make them an offer looking to the settlement of the Irish question."

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

Columbus (Ohio) dispatches of the 29th ult. reported all quiet. The Senate met and immediately adjourned, pending the conference between the joint committee which had been appointed with a view to learn if some plan could not be agreed upon. The committee was in session all day. The proceedings were had in executive session. In the meantime the representative sides were preparing their programmes of procedure in case a compromise was not reached.

The New York Sun has effected a complete change of front on the coinage question. It now declares that bimetallism is a practical impossibility and monometallism the only safe and wise course to pursue, with silver as the favored metal.

At the Cabinet meeting on the 28th ult. the President expressed his determination not to comply with the requests by the Senate for information regarding suspensions from office. His views on the subject were sustained by all the members of the Cabinet, and letters of refusal were formulated in reply to demands for papers bearing on several nominations now pending.

MR. SHERMAN introduced in the Senate on the 28th ult. a bill which repeals the first section of the coinage act of Feb. 28, 1878, and authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to buy silver bullion in bars, not less than 3 fine, to the amount of not less than 2,000,000 ounces troy a month and not greater than 4,000,000 ounces. The Secretary is authorized to pay for the bullion in coin certificates, receivable for customs, taxes, and all public dues, and when so received to be reissued. The bullion thus bought is to be retained in the Treasury as security for the payment of the certificates, and the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to redeem in coin the certificates on presentation at the Sub-Treasury in New York in sums not less than $1. The bill provides further that any holder of standard silver dollars, coin, or bullion may deposit the same with the Treasurer in sums of not less than $10 and receive coin certificates therefor. Mr. Morrill offered a resolution setting apart sites in Washington for statues of Columbus and Lafayette. A resolution was adopted directing the Secretary of the Treasury to give the origin and amount of the Conscience Fund. A bill was introduced to grant right of way through Indian Territory to the Kansas City, Fort Scott, and Gulf Railway. Mr. Ingalls presented a petition by Frederick Douglass and other colored citizens of Washington, complaining of discriminations at theaters and other public places. Mr. Dawes made a favorable report on a bill for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians, and to extend the protection of the laws over the red man. The bill providing for the admission of Dakota came up in the Senate. The debate lasted for some time, Mr. Butler speaking in opposition and Mr. Wilson in favor of the measure. In the House of Representatives Mr. Weaver introduced a bill for the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma, and to allot homesteads to Indians. A bill authorizing the President to restore officers to the army in certain cases, intended to apply specific to Fitz John Porter, was reported favorably by Mr. Wheeler. Eulogies on the career of the late Representative Benben Ellwood, of Illinois, closed the proceedings.

EXTOLLING THE DEAD.

Speeches Made in Praise of the Late Vice President in the United States Senate.

Remarkable Maiden Effort of Mr. Spooner in Lauding the Memory of the Deceased.

There was an unusually large attendance in the Senate of the United States on Tuesday, Jan. 26, and an unusual number of fine speeches, the well-marked characteristics of the late Vice President furnishing themes for memorial orations that some of the best orators utilized. The most marked speeches of the day were those of Voorhees, Harrison, Evarts, and Spooner. It was the first time the latter has spoken in the Senate and he fully justified the reputation that followed him from his State, where his oratorical gifts have long been recognized and admitted. Aside from being a scholarly and eloquent production, it has the merit of originality, which is rarely found in funeral orations, and Mr. Spooner's treatment of the life and record of Mr. Hendricks created quite a sensation. Proceedings were opened by Mr. Voorhees, of Indiana, who called up his resolution expressive of the Senate's deep sense of the public loss in the death of the late Vice President Hendricks. The resolution having been read, Mr. Voorhees addressed the Senate:

"For the eminent citizen of the Republic," he said, "who lately fell from his place, and who now sleeps in honor in the bosom of the State he loved so well and served so faithfully, we can do no more than has already been done by tongue, and by every method which human affection can inspire. The heavy drapery of woe has darkened alike the public building, the stately palace and the humble home. The proud colors of the Union have drooped at half-mast throughout the United States and every civilized land beneath the sun. Eloquence in the forum and on the sacred desk has paid its richest tribute to his exalted abilities and to his stainless character. The tolling bell, the mournful dirge, the booming solemn minute-gun, the night's multitude of mourners, have all attended the funeral of Thomas A. Hendricks, and borne witness to the deep love and grief with which he was lowered into his last resting place. All the honors due to the most illustrious dead have been paid by the Chief Magistrate of the Government, by the authority of the States, and by the unrestrained affection of the people. In the senate, however, we may not be silent, even though the cup of honor to his memory is full and overflowing. In this exalted theater of action here, on this brilliantly lighted stage—he fulfilled his last official engagement and closed his long and commanding public career."

In conclusion Mr. Voorhees said: "As long as American History treasures up pure lives and faithful public services as long as just and private virtue, stainless and without blemish, is revered, so long will the name of Thomas A. Hendricks be cherished by the American people as an example worthy of emulation. Magnificent bronze and marble will lift their heads to bespeak honor of his name, but a monument more precious to his memory and more valuable to the world has already been erected in the hearts of the people whom he served so long, faithfully, and with such signal ability. In the busy harvest of the life of the year 1885 was gathered into eternity, and under [illegible] the people [illegible]."

Mr. Sherman, of Ohio, bore testimony to the personal ability with which Mr. Hendricks had always maintained his opinions. He had been polite and courteous in debate—never wild in manner or sentiment. He was a man of easy approach, affable and kind to all—the best type of an American citizen.

Mr. Evarts, of New York, referred to his long acquaintance with Mr. Hendricks, and said that many years ago he was pointed out to him in court as a man who, it was natural to expect, would be a future and probably successful aspirant to the Presidency of the United States. The speaker thought that of all those who took part in the debates at the time of the impeachment of President Johnson no man appeared to better advantage in composure of spirit, calmness of judgment, and circumspection of deliberation than Mr. Hendricks. He could avoid extravagance and could skillfully draw the line between fidelity to the Constitution and adhesion to the supremacy of party.

Mr. Ransom, of North Carolina, said that Mr. Hendricks had always proved himself a lover of his whole country and its liberties. The Southern States in this emergency felt deep, sincere, and overflowing sympathy and sorrow at the bereavement of the Northern sisters. "Thank Almighty God," said Mr. Ransom, "that the everlasting covenant of our union is established in the hearts of all our people, and that, through the clouds of this sorrow, we can behold the peace that is never to be broken."

Mr. Vest, of Missouri, said that Mr. Hendricks was nearer to the hearts of the masses than any other man of his time. He was a partisan in the highest and best sense of the term, because he believed that devotion to party was necessary to the best interests of his country. Asking and giving no quarter, he did not sprinkle rose-water on the enemies of his party or give savory morsels to the wolves ready to spring at his throat.

Mr. Harrison, of Indiana, said he did not think that Mr. Hendricks' popularity had culminated at the time of his death. He seemed to have been never more loved or esteemed by his political friends than just before his death. He was a man of great political courage, and, while not aggressive as a leader, always met assault with force and skill. He had never made his leadership offensive by too open an assertion or display of it. His oratory was persuasive, his style clear and lucid, and, if he did not win his adversary over, always left him kindly disposed. The speaker paid a high compliment to Mr. Hendricks' legal ability. In his private life he was a man above reproach, strong in human sympathy, and to fine the charms of home. He had been blessed in his married life. The wife whom he wooed and won in his young manhood walked with him in love and affection to the end.

The resolutions in memoriam were agreed to, and the Senate adjourned out of respect for the memory of the dead.

SILVER COINAGE.

Speech of Hon. James L. Pugh, of Alabama,

Delivered in the Senate of the United States, Jan. 11, 1886.

The Senate having under consideration the resolution submitted by Mr. Beck, Dec. 18, 1885, relative to the payment of customs dues in coin and the execution of the laws relating thereto, Mr. Pugh said:

In the examination and discussion of the troublesome questions of finance the opinions, arguments, and conclusions of others should be weighed according to their real merit; and to ascertain how much they are worth we should scrutinize the motives, capacity, experience, practical knowledge, integrity, and disinterestedness of the authors. Is it a fact that those who take part in the discussion of financial questions and make arguments and express opinions to influence legislation belong to the creditor or the debtor class, or are they producers or capitalists? The people understand that those who supply money and those who use it are widely separated in interest. Capitalists and creditors own United States bonds and national banks, and these banks issue paper money on these bonds and aid in making the volume of our circulating medium. Capitalists and creditors mostly own the deposits and use the checks on banks and clearing houses. Farmers, laborers, mechanics, artisans, and manufacturers own commodities made up of cotton, wool, and other raw material, and wheat, corn, meat, animals, muscle, and brain.

These commodities and human agencies bring money, and the amount depends upon the supply and the demand for them and very largely upon the quantity of money in circulation. If there is a sufficient supply of money, the demand for commodities will be greater and the price higher. Too little money will always buy more commodities, whether the supply be great or small. It is manifestly to the interest of those who have idle money, or money to invest, to make its purchasing power as great as possible. The smallest volume of money will buy more labor, productions, and property than a larger volume. Hence money-holders generally favor contraction of the currency, and commodity-holders favor a volume of circulation that comes up to the point where equality is found between the supply of money and commodities. "The quantity of necessary, useful, or gratifying products is the measure of wealth, and money is the first measure of commerce and exchange and the standard by which contracts are fulfilled."

And what has become of Gresham's law that the cheaper would drive out the better dollar, that silver would supplant all the paper currency and occupy the whole field of circulation, when the fact reported by the Treasury officials is that the people do not want silver, will not take it, and the Treasury is overloaded with unused and idle silver dollars?

But how gratifying the admission in the last Treasury report that the $215,000,000 of silver, the fruit of the Bland bill, that was to spread poison in every direction and produce such dire consequences, can be made as good as gold and absorbed by the people in our circulating medium if we will be so good as to suspend further coinage. What a grim satire upon the financial sagacity of our present instructors in the science of political economy! Is it not a great triumph of the Bland bill that its enemies are compelled to admit that our silver currency has been increased $215,000,000 without driving out a dollar of gold or depreciating Federal bonds, and that all this silver can be utilized in circulation if we will be wise enough to stop the silver mint. As these financiers have shown themselves mistaken seven years ago, it is not impossible that they are now mistaken in their opinions and predictions. One request I make, and that is for the Federal Treasury and national banks to stand aside and allow Gresham's law to have full and free operation on silver currency.

There is a most important difference between gold and silver coin and paper currency that is hoarded by individuals or lying in the vaults of banks, and gold and silver and paper currency that is in actual active circulation among the people. It is very material that we approximate as near as practicable what amount of coin and paper is required by our people for active use among themselves to make our trade and commerce prosperous on a reasonably permanent basis. We should never lose sight of the important fact that our entire volume of currency, whether gold, silver, or paper, circulates only among ourselves in the United States. Not a dollar of our gold, silver, or paper circulates or has any purchasing power as money in any other country in the world. All our gold and silver coin is nothing but bullion when it leaves this country, and is marketable by the pound, just as beef and iron. Remember, then, when we talk about gold and silver and paper as money we only mean, and must necessarily mean, that which is made money by a law of Congress and the stamp of the Government. Where is the necessity for legislation?

President Cleveland and Secretary Manning have communicated to Congress the information that our volume of circulation is made up of an incongruous, conflicting, and irreconcilable mass of paper and coin—national-bank notes, legal-tender greenbacks, gold and silver coin. These high officials, in discharging their solemn duty according to their honest convictions, have recommended to Congress in substance that the legal-tender greenbacks be redeemed and retired from circulation, that no more coin certificates be issued, and that the coinage of silver be suspended. The same information and the same recommendations were made by President Arthur and his Secretary of the Treasury in two annual messages to Congress, and I remember no Republican in either house who was bold enough to introduce a bill to carry out either of these recommendations.

* * * * * * *

Mr. President, I have thus presented to the Senate and the country the controlling influence of banks and bankers in deciding the most intricate and far-reaching question of modern times. The new factors of checks and clearings as substitutes for money had their origin in the war on silver in Europe and America, and these funk implements are and have been the most formidable and destructive with which the friends of silver have had to contend. Checks and clearing-houses have concentrated in banks and bankers irresistible power in interstate and international trade and commerce, and their unlimited influence and agencies in all industrial pursuits connect them necessarily and inseparably with any financial system in any country and make them potential in deciding the volume, character, and regulation of all currency.

See what mighty power banks and bankers possess in determining what amount of money the people shall have in their trade and commerce; when and to what extent the volume of circulation shall be expanded or contracted; whether coin or paper money shall circulate, and in what proportion. Look at the facts and figures I have furnished to prove how this vast power has been exercised. It is useless to tell the people that the banks and bankers will not use their power to promote their own interest. The people fully understand that checks and clearing-houses dispense with the use of money by banks and bankers in their dealings with each other, and make the volume of coin or paper currency in actual circulation a matter of comparatively indifferent interest to them. But it is not so with the people in their trade and commerce with each other. The people have no clearing-houses and but few deposits, and with them checks are a useless substitute for money.

President Cleveland and Secretary Manning and those who urge Congress to repeal and amend our coinage and currency laws have failed to state a single fact or a single cause originating, existing, and operating anywhere in the United States that has produced or can produce any inconvenience or disarrangement in our currency, or justify any change in our financial legislation in accordance with their recommendations. Every fact and every cause upon which they base their predictions of trouble and express the opinion that serious disorder in our currency and ruinous effects upon our trade and industrial pursuits are impending and threatening are foreign in their origin and existence. Congress is confronted with the highest official announcement that the United States have reached a crisis in their marvelous development and in their industrial growth and commercial relations that can be met and relieved only by concurrent action between our Government and the governments of England, France, and Germany, resulting in an agreement by which there shall be but one standard of value in each and all these countries, and that when such an international standard is thus established our entire home currency must be made to conform to it in equivalency and convertibility.

What are the foreign facts stated by Secretary Manning as being so potential and disastrous in their effects upon American conditions and welfare?

1. That, except for petty domestic uses, silver coinage has been suspended and silver disused as a legal-tender currency in England, Germany, and all the nations composing the Latin Union, and gold made the only standard of value.

2. That such suspension and disuse of silver as money of account and contract by leading European nations with whom we carry on nearly all our foreign commerce "has made that metal of unstable and falling value," and reduced the price of silver in our standard dollar from 100 cents to 80 cents in the bullion market of London.

From the existence of these two facts in Europe the conclusion is drawn that their necessary and unavoidable effect on American currency and commerce will be destructive morally, politically, materially, and generally.

It is not stated with any confidence by the President, the Secretary, or any who agree with them that there is any ground for hope that the Government of the United States will be joined or aided by any leading Government in Europe in preserving silver as an equal with gold in the monetary unit of value to be employed by the parties to such union in their trade and commerce with each other.

It is, therefore, useless to blink the issue. The question for Congress to decide is whether the silver-coinage act of 1878 shall be repealed and the coinage of silver thereby forever terminated in the United States. It is a reflection on the common sense of the people and those who represent them in Congress in opposing such repeal to attempt to delude them by the use of terms. Suspension of silver coinage means and is intended deliberately to have the effect of putting an end to silver except for pocket change and petty home uses on the same basis it occupies in Europe.

Is this Senate ready for such action, involving as it does the most momentous consequences? As it does the most momentous consequences? It may be presumption in me to say it, but I am too full of the conviction to retain it, that if the coinage of silver is suspended it will be a step that never can be retrieved, and will lead directly and speedily to the consummation of a thoroughly organized conspiracy of the capitalists who own Federal bonds and national banks and two-thirds of the gold in this country to secure absolute control of all the currency in use by the people, as a measure of value, the regulation of its volume, and its consequent purchasing power over labor, property, and all commodities. To the capitalists who are parties to this conspiracy no such prize ever enlisted the energies of man. No wonder those who stand in the track of their endeavor are denounced as fools, fanatics, demagogues, unworthy of public attention and confidence. "The bankers, bondholders, and business classes," we are told, possess all the ability, learning, and experience on money questions, and they alone are qualified to decide what shall be money, how much of it the people need, and what shall be the price of labor, productions, and property.

Secretary Manning informs us that what he has recommended as "currency reform" "is much more than the deliberate judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury." * * * It is attested to him from the centers of trade in all parts of the country, as much from the South as the North, as much from the West as the East. * * * Not alone our able statesmen and instructed economists and financiers advise the stopping of the silver coinage now, but wherever our fellow-citizens are concentrated in commercial cities and towns the business classes engaged in the trade, the enterprises, and manufactures of those centers, and the still larger classes of workingmen employed by them urge the stopping of the silver coinage now." The Secretary further "respectfully submits that there is no compensation for the risk of a continued coinage of silver, and that a judgment so accordant of the great business classes who carry on the exchanges of the country must be accepted as a final estimate of that risk."

Who are "the great business classes who carry on the exchanges of the country?" The report of the Comptroller of the Treasury, from which I have quoted, proves that they are the bankers and bondholders who carry on the exchanges of 97 per cent. of the entire trade and commerce of this country, and that three-fifths of the whole passes through the banks and clearing houses of New York. The Comptroller's report further shows that most of the banks in the United States, numbering 2,727 national banks and over 4,000 other banks, and most of the other "great business classes who carry on exchanges" in all the great business centers in Northern, Southern, Eastern, and Western cities and towns, are bound to New York and her banks and clearing house with hooks of steel. These are the great business classes who are the final arbiters and whose decision of the question whether the coinage of silver shall be suspended "must be accepted as final" without appeal or question.

There is but one fact the enemies of silver parade conspicuously to the front, and, like Day & Martin's blacking, it is always on hand, and that is, that the 412½ grains of silver that the Government makes a legal tender for a dollar is worth only 80 cents; that as American coin in American markets it is made a compulsory dollar, and in the London market England uses the same amount of silver is really worth only 80 cents or less. Banks and bankers, their directors and stockholders, and their subsidized press and other representatives, all able and experienced financiers (?), are greatly distressed that the poor farmer has to sell the fruits of his toil for 100 cents in a dollar's worth, and is compelled to accept only 80 cents in payment, and that the brown-listed laborer and weeping widow and needy orphan have to take for their hard earnings and small incomes 80 cents when their employers and debtors honestly owe them 100 cents.

I undertake to say that the poor farmers and laborers and widows and orphans never had any idea how they were being robbed or how much they had been wronged by the use of this vile thing called silver until they read a description of their sufferings by their guardians in the official reports and the New York and Boston newspapers or other newspapers established, edited, and supported by the officials and stockholders in national banks or by capitalists interested in destroying silver as a part of our coin currency.

The President and Secretary admit that the fate of silver, beyond its use by our own people as pocket change to the extent of its present amount in this country, depends entirely upon the action of foreign governments. The Secretary says "Bimetallism is essentially an international affair;" that "international bimetallism does not exist since it was upset by Germany; and the international agreement, twice attempted, has failed."

Then the sole question for Congress to decide is: Are we to have no more silver than the present supply (say $215,000,000), and is that amount to be accepted as the limit of the silver coin employed by our own people in their trade and commerce among themselves? And shall we now decide that it is now settled that no more of our silver coin will be exported to any abroad? Are we ready to decide these questions on speculative theories and solemn predictions of what may or will happen, against authoritative and indisputable facts found in Treasury records, and against what we know is true, and in favor of what we know to be false?

Are we to accept the mere dictum of the President in his message that the coinage of silver has already gone "beyond" the amount needed for a circulating medium?" Where are the facts to support that assertion? The President himself states them, and what are they? He says:

"The necessity for such a demonstration is compelled by the silver-coinage act is negatived by the fact that up to the present time only about fifty millions of the silver dollars so coined have actually found their way into circulation, leaving more than one hundred and sixty-five millions in possession of the Government. Against this amount there are outstanding silver certificates amounting to about $93,000,000."

Was ever a conclusion more unsatisfactory? After stating that only about $50,000,000 had found their way into actual circulation among the people, the admission follows that $93,000,000 had found their way among the people, who had deposited them where they had the legal right and obtained silver certificates for their convenience. Do these facts discredit silver with the people and prove that no more is wanted or needed by them in our circulation? What other reason for his opinion that the people do not want silver even to the extent of its present amount is given by the President? He says:

"A special effort has been made by the Secretary of the Treasury to increase the amount of our silver coin in circulation; but the fact that a large share of the limited amount thus put out has been returned to the public Treasury in payment of duties leads to the belief that the people do not now desire to keep it in hand; and this, with the evident disposition to hoard gold, gives rise to the suspicion that there already exists a lack of confidence among the people touching our financial processes."

Poor silver! What can be done to get a little fair play from its enemies? When its friends pass a compulsory law that it shall be received in payment of duties, as soon as it is done the fact is paraded to show that the people are enemies of the money the law gave them the right to pay for duties. But who paid those duties in silver, and where were they paid? More than three-fifths of these duties on imports were paid in New York, and a large part in Boston and Philadelphia. Who made these payments? Were any payments made by importers through national banks and the clearing-house? Did the "great business classes who carry on exchanges" have anything to do with making those payments? If so, the explanation is easy, where and how the President got the information and hard it as a fact supposed to be prejudicial to silver.

But the President and Secretary and all the subordinates in the Treasury unite in the statement that "if silver coinage is continued long enough it will result in the substitution of silver for all the gold the Government owns applicable to its general purposes." How does the President say this result is to be produced? He answers:

"Every month two millions of gold in the public Treasury are paid out for two millions or more of silver dollars, to be added to the idle mass already accumulated."

What public law, duty, policy, or obligation requires that silver bullion shall be paid for in gold? Have bullion owners refused to accept silver? Has silver been offered in payment? Has the Secretary allowed the owners of silver bullion to refuse silver dollars when silver dollars are a legal tender in payment? Is it not singular that silver bullion owners would thus discredit the coin from their own mines? If the owners of silver bullion refuse silver dollars and demand gold, then amend the law with a proviso that the Secretary shall not make the monthly purchase unless silver dollars are received when offered in payment. But I apprehend the payment made in gold for silver bullion has been the voluntary act of the Secretary. If so, then the ruinous drain of gold from the Treasury in payment for silver bullion can be easily avoided.

Again, the President says:

"We have now on hand all the silver dollars necessary to supply the present needs of the people, and to satisfy those who from sentiment wish to see them in circulation."

It is the sentiment of a large majority of the American people that the interest accruing on Federal bonds and the principal of called bonds should be paid in silver dollars, as authorized by express law and the contract recited in the face of the bonds themselves. Why is "the idle mass of silver dollars already accumulated in the Treasury" permitted to remain there by the voluntary act of the Secretary of the Treasury in failing to offer or tender payment in silver dollars in accordance with the positive law of the contract by which the debt was created and on which the bonds were issued? The following is the law and the contract:

"This bond is issued in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress entitled 'An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt, approved July 14, 1870, and under by an act approved Jan. 20, 1871,' and is redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after the 1st day of May, 1881, in coin of the standard value of the United States on said July 14, 1870, with interest in such coin from the day of the date hereof at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, payable quarterly, etc. The principal and interest are exempt from the payment of all taxes and duties of the United States as well as from taxation in any form by any State or municipality."

In the teeth of this solemn act of Congress, passed by a two-thirds vote of the representatives of the people, who have repeatedly indorsed such law by their re-election, and the election of others who have permitted it to remain unrepealed and unamended to this day, the Comptroller of the Treasury has the temerity to use the following language in his report, page 15:

"The credit and standing of the country is deservedly high, and it is not believed that the people desire either that the principal or interest on the bonded debt of this country be paid in anything but gold coin or its equivalent. This matter was discussed at the time the bonds were issued, etc., and the conviction is general that the faith and credit of this Government is pledged for the payment of its securities in gold coin or its equivalent."

The law and the contract which govern in every form in Christendom and the obligation of the Government and the rights of the bondholders expressly declare that the gold and silver coin now lying idle in the public Treasury are equivalents in value and a legal tender in payment of the principal and interest of the bonds through all coming time and under all circumstances and conditions. And yet the Comptroller declares that "if we continue to add these silver dollars to our circulating medium, and they continue to accumulate in the Treasury, the Government must of necessity pay some portion of its obligations in that coin; and if the Government should pay its interest and other obligations and redeem its bonds in standard dollars the business of the country would immediately go to a silver basis." The President follows in the same strain. He says:

"The condition in which our Treasury may be placed by a persistence in our present course is a matter of concern to every patriotic citizen who does not desire his Government to pay in silver such of its obligations as should be paid in gold. Nor should our condition be such as to oblige us, in a prudent management of our affairs, to discontinue the calling in and payment of interest-bearing obligations which we have the right now to discharge, and thus avoid the payment of further interest thereon. The so-called debtor class, for whose benefit the continued compulsory coinage of silver is insisted upon, are not dishonest because they are in debt, and they should not be suspected of a desire to jeopardize the financial safety of the country in order that they may cancel their present debts by paying the same in depreciated dollars."

The foregoing is a burlesque upon Congressional enactments, which define the obligations of the Government as recited in its bonds, and especially is it promising at the faithful execution by the executive officers of the Treasury of the law contained in section 3691 of the Revised Statutes, requiring that

"The coin paid for duties on imported goods shall be set apart as a special fund, and shall be applied as follows: First, to the payment, in coin, of the interest on the bonds and notes of the United States; second, to the purchase or payment of 1 per cent. of the entire debt of the United States, to be made within each fiscal year, which is to be set apart as a sinking fund, and the interest of which shall in like manner be applied to the purchase or payment of the public debt, as the Secretary of the Treasury shall from time to time direct; third, the residue to be paid into the Treasury."

Why have the foregoing laws of Congress now on the statute-books been persistently treated as a dead letter every hour of their existence by every President and Treasury official? Can any other reason be assigned than that the wisdom of these laws has been condemned by the "accordant judgment of the great business classes who carry on the exchanges of the country, and whose judgment must be accepted as a final estimate of the risk of obeying the laws of Congress?" Shall Congress abdicate and surrender the financial government of the country to this new tribunal, self-constituted, with no responsibility to the people, and from whose decisions there is to be no appeal?

What other powerful motive of self-interest do we find for this life-long, persistent, and unfair warfare upon silver and national banks as a part of our sound currency?

Silver is the only money that circulates among the people that is beyond the control of national banks. Silver is the only lion in the track of the absolute dominion of national banks over the volume of currency that circulates among the people. We have $346,000,000 of greenbacks that cannot be diminished or increased under existing law. Stop the coinage of silver, and nothing in the future is more certain than that it is a mere question of time when the national banks will become not only the money-kings, but the absolute "monarchs of all they survey." In the language of General Hamilton, "the general state of debtor and creditor, all the relations and consequences of price, the essential interests of trade and industry, the value of all property, the whole income, both of the state and of individuals" will become subject "to the judicious or injudicious regulation" of the currency by national banks.

If silver is demonetized how can there be any increase in the amount of our coin or paper money except at the will and dictation of national banks? Is Congress prepared to delegate this stupendous power over the price of labor, property, and productions in this country to these private corporations? Everybody agrees that the price of everything depends largely upon the quantity of money in circulation. Does the amount of money in circulation be diminished if silver were dropped out of our currency?

These crusaders against silver come and tell us "our returns show how small an amount of money enters into our transactions, and how much its use has been superseded by our machinery of banking, with its modern system of checks, bills of exchange, and clearing-houses. The coinage of silver has increased the currency of the country to the extent of $215,000,000, without any necessity or demand for it whatever. Silver certificates are an inexpedient addition to the paper currency. They are made a legal tender, and yet have for their basis only about eighty cents in the dollar. There need be no apprehension of a too limited paper circulation. The national banks are ready to issue their notes in such quantity as they think the laws of trade demand. The embarrassments which are certain to follow the endeavor to maintain several standards of value out of high gold and low silver, and high gold certificates and low silver certificates, are too obvious to need discussion. And then the greenbacks are in our way and fill a place in our circulation that we could supply, and they ought to be redeemed and retired. Let silver and silver certificates go, have no more gold certificates, and sweep away the greenbacks, and the Congress that secures these results will have a monument erected to its wisdom and statesmanship." Then the gold image will rise in full view of an admiring world. Then, indeed, we shall have but one god to worship. What a millennium! Gold the only god and the national banks the only kings! One standard, of no use but to worship, and one currency, all paper, issued alone by the king and in such quantities as he may decree.

Mr. President, silver is invincible because it has the confidence of the people. If its enemies will turn it loose among its friends there will be no depreciation, no degradation. Let gold stay where it has always been, and where it will always be found and nursed and kept free from hard usage, in the vaults of the national banks and the money chests of the rich; but give the people—the friends of silver—a show at it and it will have a hearty welcome and find a warm place in their hearts.

When silver has the same treatment as gold from the Government and from banks and bankers and clearing-houses, and a fair trial with gold on the natural laws of supply and demand, and the same chance with gold to get into circulation, and the same recognition as gold under the existing laws of Congress, then if silver fails the failure will be unavoidable and irremediable. When that trial is thus made and the results verify the predictions of its enemies, I will meet the emergency as best I can with the lights then before me. Until that time comes I shall "let well enough alone" on the double coinage of gold and silver. I have no fear of a loss of our gold so long as the balance of trade is in our favor, and the danger of our imports exceeding our exports is a contingency not likely to happen. Such a result is too improbable to require the perilous experiment of the suspension of silver coinage to remedy. And if we were to suspend silver coinage and the balance of trade were to turn against us how would that balance be paid? Should there be a balance how would our gold be any safer on a single than on a double standard?

PROF. F. B. DEXTER, of Yale, has written a paper on "Town Names in Connecticut," and says that of 100 names given by public authority before the Declaration of Independence at least fifty-seven were taken direct from British sources, seventeen came from peculiarities of location, eight from the Bible, and only three from names of prominent early settlers and founders. He calls attention to the fact that, while Massachusetts has towns like Hull, Reading, and Manchester, named to commemorate the victories of the Parliament in England, Connecticut has none such. This omission was studied, he thinks, and indicated a different attitude of the State toward England from that of Massachusetts.

—William Harris has purchased a tract of land near Chase, upon which there is sufficient cedar to make 10,000,000 shingles. He intends putting in a shingle-mill.

—The people in the vicinity of Chase are greatly excited over the discovery of a deposit of pottery and fire clay on the Pere Marquette River, five miles from that place.

—Professor Cheever, of Ann Arbor, recently sent to Central America, in the interest of a Chicago iron company, has returned and resumed his work in metallurgy.

—At Ishpeming, a miner named James Curnow was instantly killed by the breaking of a plank on which he and another man were working, one hundred feet from the ground.

—Hastings is to have a new and neat opera house this spring, adjoining the new Newton House, the contract for both buildings having been let. They will be of brick, with all the modern improvements.

—At a large meeting in Waldron, the people in that vicinity agreed to raise $2,000 for the proposed Jackson and Ohio Railway. Pittsford and Pioneer are making strenuous efforts to secure the road.

—The Secretary of State is having manufactured a set of books providing for a uniform system of records and accounts for the use of superintendents of the poor and keepers of poor-houses throughout Michigan.

—At Coldwater, B. T. Russell, of the grocery firm of White & Co., and D. A. Sperry, of Stevens & Sperry, manufacturers, have each commenced suit against their partners by filing a bill and swearing out writs of injunction.

—C. E. Hershey, the ex-Cashier of the First National Bank of Owosso, who absconded, has returned home. He is quite sick. It is claimed that under the strain of business difficulties his mind was affected, and that now all debts will be paid.

—A snow-shoe club was organized at Marquette Saturday afternoon. Snow-shoes and moccasins have been ordered from Montreal, and tramps will be taken every Thursday. The exercise is an invigorating one, and the club promises to secure a large number of members.

—Mlle. Emma Nevada was married Oct. 1, in Paris, to Dr. Raymond Palmer, of Birmingham, England. The civil service occurred at the English Embassy and the religious ceremonies at the Church of the Passionist Fathers. The girlish prima donna is the daughter of Dr. Wixom, of Michigan.

—The Athletic Association of the Michigan University has secured the refusal of the roller rink for the use of a gymnasium. The boys will close the contract provided sufficient money can be raised which, added to that already on hand, will be enough to properly equip the place.

—The trial of T. B. Barry for conspiracy in leading the strike in the Saginaw Valley last summer has ended at East Saginaw, the jury bringing in a verdict of "not guilty," after being out twenty-three hours. The trial was made under the conspiracy law, Barry being charged with inciting riot.

—The Coroner's inquest over the remains of Frank Knoch, his wife, and their two children, whose charred bodies were found in the ruins of their home at Detroit, ended with a verdict that the parents came to their death by shooting with a revolver in the hands of unknown persons, and the children came to their death by unknown means.

—A notable example of the utilization of smoke is afforded in the case of a charcoal furnace at Elk Rapids. In this furnace are manufactured fifty tons of charcoal per day. There are twenty-five charcoal pits, constructed of brick, each pit being filled with one hundred cords of hard wood, and then fired. The vast amount of smoke thus produced is made to yield acetate of lime, alcohol, tar, and gas.

The Record of John Sherman.

The following timely remarks appeared in the Grand Rapids Leader of Jan. 16:

"We ask workingmen to glance over the record of this man Sherman, whose re-election so highly pleases the republican organs of Michigan. See him in 1875 as author of the resumption act, pushing a measure for the destruction of the greenback and the extension of bank circulation; a measure which became a law, and under which over thirty million dollars in greenbacks were destroyed, when under the pressure of public sentiment that infamous law of Sherman's was repealed. See him as secretary of the treasury under Hayes recommending time and again all the schemes of the bankers and bondholders for a gold basis, the supremacy of the banks and the demonetization of the greenback. See him invariably eating in and paying bonds exclusively in gold. This is the man the republicans of Michigan are rejoicing over; the enemy of the silver dollar, the enemy of the greenback, the friend of the bondholders and the senatorial agent of the money power. And yet the republicans, who are so happy over his election, profess to favor the cause of the working people!"

This powerful arraignment of "honest John" and his obsequious flatterers in this state clearly exposes the utter hollowness of the republican talk—flattery indulged in by that immaculate body of political purists, the Michigan club—as to the solicitude of that party for the wage workers! It is all a sham and pretense. The republican party never fails to send a monopolist to Washington when it has the chance to elect a United States senator. It sent millionaire Tom Palmer from this state, Spooner, a wealthy railroad attorney, from Wisconsin, Stanford, the Central Pacific railroad magnate, from California, and only last week it resorted to the grossest form of outrage to return John Sherman to his old place in the senate! What a pretty list of disinterested champions of the people's interests! In the light of such a record who will deny that there is a startling discrepancy between the promises and the performances of our republican friends, and that they are not to be trusted in matters involving the rights of the masses on one hand and the selfish interests of the corporations on the other?—Lansing Journal.

The Question of Foreign Labor as Handled by Congressman Tarsney.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—In a conversation with Representative Tarsney, of the eighth district, this evening in relation to the status of the convict and alien labor bills which is intended to prohibit the employment of the labor of both, he said:

"We do not mean to close the doors to foreign immigration, but rather to invite it and to require all those who come to this country and expect employment upon government works to Americanize themselves; in other words, to become a part of ourselves. I believe it is wrong to expend money upon public buildings and improvements where in many cases the principal cost is the labor that goes into the work, and permit the contractor to place the American workingman in competition with the world. With all our talk about the protective policy of the government and its benefit to American labor, the fact is that American labor has never been protected. The only two things that are essential to our existence that flow across the national boundary lines and through the customs houses free of duty, are the air we breathe, and the labor that performs our work. The manufacturers have been protected. We propose, if we can, to protect American labor, and this, too, without deviating one iota from the principles underlying our system, which has always invited foreigners to come to us. We still invite them, but we propose in the interest of Americanization to require all those that come to us to become one of us.

"Let me illustrate: You have $1,000,000 appropriated for public buildings in Detroit. Efforts are being made to increase that appropriation to $1,500,000. Suppose the contract is let for the erection of that building. The contractor will hire his labor as cheap as he can, caring not from whence it comes, or where it goes when he is done with it. Within eyesight, as it were, the Detroit river only separates Detroit from Canada. The Canadian laborer and artisan would be placed in free competition with our people, who have come to Detroit and Michigan to make it their home. I do not want to witness the spectacle of people coming from a foreign land and taking our money back to their country and leaving our workmen out of employment because of their presence. Let the employees of the government and the employees of contractors (for we intend to make this condition a clause of every contract) that the persons employed on all public works shall be: First, not convicts; second, that no material the product of convict labor shall be used in the construction of any public work; third, that no person shall be employed on any such work unless he be an actual resident within the limits of the United States, and he has declared his intention to become a citizen thereof. This will prevent the marauding Canadian, the impossible American Chinese and all other classes of people not in sympathy and harmony with American ideas coming in competition with honest American labor. But to these we would say, 'Come, but Americanize yourselves.'"

The Democratic Senators.

Next in importance to the approaching discussion of the silver question, will be the debates, which, we are told the republican senators will direct against President Cleveland's nominations.

The fact that the white house is now inhabited by a democrat has made no change in the feelings of those gentlemen as to their responsibilities under the constitution. They must still advise the president upon certain questions just as though he were a pure blooded republican, and give their consent to his proceedings as they think fit.

But what is expected to make a peculiar stir among the republicans while debating the new candidates for office, and to produce an energetic and solemn exhibition of eloquence, will be their conclusion that they are the special keepers of the civil service law and the appointed promoters of its spirit and extension. It was invented and sustained by their party, and they must look after its interests; and the way to do this will be to keep the republicans in and prevent the representatives of the democrats from taking their places.

It will devolve upon democratic senators in the event of such an attempt to resist it with the greatest vigor and indignation. Besides sustaining the action of the president by the following course, they will be battling for one of the most fundamental principles of democracy. This is that the people have the right, through their proper representatives, to choose their own agents of government, and that the expressed wishes of a popular majority must be fairly and faithfully observed. It was the intention of the democratic majority in 1881 to take the control of the government from the republicans into their own hands, and this desire must be respected now, and furthered by every justifiable exertion possible on the part of the democratic representatives. The fact that Mr. Cleveland regards himself as in some way the chosen magistrate of the whole people, and in consequence as not holding precisely the same relations to the democracy as democrats elected by narrower constituences, should not lessen a whit the intensity of that party's senators in their devotion to its principles, or weaken their determination to stand immovable for their party's rights against the assaults of its enemies. They must fight for the democracy and against the brazen pretensions of the republicans at every opportunity that is afforded.

In such a contest they will have the people at their back. New York Sun.

The Ohio Revolution.

The republican conspiracy to steal the control of the Ohio state senate has been carried out, as far as was possible, with the audacity and lawlessness that characterized the conception of the scheme. The lieutenant-governor has, in defiance of the rules of the senate and of the most obvious considerations of justice, ruled that the cases of all four of the sitting members from Cincinnati shall be considered at once, and that those members are consequently debarred from voting. This simply means that the presiding officer of the senate usurps the authority to disfranchise a sufficient number of democratic senators to reverse the majority in that body, which majority is constitutionally empowered to settle the very question at issue.

This is revolution, and there are but two ways of meeting it. One is by force and the other is that adopted the refusal of all the democratic senators to participate in any further meetings of the body, thus leaving it without a legal quorum. The lieutenant-governor will, however, rule that the minority is a quorum, and the revolutionary scheme will probably be carried through. There has come a brief halt, however, as the republican rump has adjourned to consider the matter. There is talk about violence, but since the originator of the lawless proceeding still lives, we presume that there is no likelihood of such aggression by the democrats as could alone cause violence or prevent the consummation of the scheme. —N. Y. Star.

The wage workers are gaining in strength by organizing, and just so long as their organizations steer clear of the socialists and other lawless concerns, and make their fight from principle, just so long they will continue to gain strength, and have popular sentiment with them. Their peaceful fight now waging for eight hours a day is a just fight, and will win in the end, unless bad leadership should cause them to take a wrong course. That the democratic administration is in sympathy with the movement, every few days furnishes evidence. Only last week President Cleveland was asked his opinion concerning the new law limiting government laborers and workmen to eight hours a day, and he replied: "I believe the law is a good and sound one, and that it should be enforced to the letter. It ill becomes a government to evade the spirit and letter of its own enactments. If any instances of non-enforcement are presented to me I shall see that the abuse is remedied. My understanding of the law is that a full day's wages are to be paid for eight hours' work."—Big Rapids Herald.

Congressman Tarsney wants to know why some of the $450,000,000 lying idle in the treasury cannot be used in the payment of the public debt, and has offered a resolution to that effect. The inquiry is legitimate and ought to be answered. Let us have light on this subject. No good business man would let the principal of a debt run on from year to year with the right to pay and the means to do it just for the fun of paying interest. We hope the resolution will pass the house and the information sought will be forthcoming.—Elk Rapids Progress.

Mr. Tilden's Life at Greystone.

About a mile and a half above this town is "Greystone," the palatial residence of Samuel J. Tilden, and near by are the beautiful country residences of the Fields, the Colgates, James J. McCoomb, Jay Gould, John Jay, Alexander Hamilton, Chauncey M. Depew, ex-Collector Robertson, Washington Irving and many others distinguished in the history of a great city. Having never married, Mr. Tilden lives at "Greystone" the most of his time, his companion being a first-class comptroller Green, who resides with him. Mr. Tilden's house is constructed of greystone. His park is laid out in beautiful drives and walks, and is free to the public. Mr. Tilden himself is rarely seen by visitors, being guarded in his luxurious mansion by his over-working secretaries and Mr. Green, his business manager. A day or so ago I went to see the "Sage of Greystone," and to my surprise Mr. Tilden himself opened the door to answer my ring. In spite of all that is said about the failure of his health—which is not all true—Mr. Tilden carries the weight of his seventy-one years and memory well. He has not a very vigorous physique, and his spare frame is now slightly bent, and his thin hair is whitened with the frosts of many winters. His eyes droop a little, and, whatever may be the cause, he is unable to use his right arm and hand at the table or in dressing. It is said he has had a stroke of paralysis, which has been succeeded by a sort of palsy, so that his right hand is never in repose, but trembles constantly. In ordinary conversation Mr. Tilden's voice is low, sinking at times almost to a whisper. That he is just as bright and as quick-witted as ever, I have no doubt. He is indeed as sharp as a needle in all his transactions. He walks slowly and with difficulty, due to partial paralysis. At home he is hospitable and kindly. His collection of engravings is marvelous. Some of his treasures are invaluable. His autograph copies are numerous, and the man who could be bored or enamed if left for hours alone in Mr. Tilden's library would be just the sort of a man that I should imagine would go to a masquerade ball in a baby's frock. At the present time Mr. Tilden is greatly interested in the construction of his immense conservatory and in the propagation of the stock. His new conservatory when finished will be perhaps the largest and most complete in this country. It is several hundred feet long, and will be heated by steam. In each section the pipes will be so arranged that the temperature can be fixed independently of the adjoining sections. By this means fruits and grapes can be kept in different stages of development, so that, as the products of one section have been exhausted, those of the adjoining one will be ready for use. In most of the sections a trough of water will run through the full length of the conservatory, thus serving the double purpose of moistening the atmosphere and of supply the attendants with water for the plants. When finished, the beautiful grounds and conservatory of "Greystone," which can be seen from the fine road leading to Tarrytown, will be thrown open freely to all visitors, under the supervision of Mr. Tilden's manager.—Yonkers (N. Y.) Cor. Baltimore Am.

Miss Gilder, who writes New York letters to the Boston Herald, says that all the statements attributing the authorship of the "Saxe Holme" stories to the late Mrs. Helen Hunt Jackson are made without any authority, and are as unauthorized as the same statements made during Mrs. Jackson's life.

My Fall and Winter Stock of Clothing, Furnishing Goods, Hats and Caps, Trunks and Valises, just received, and a finer line you wont often find. I keep adding to my stock all the time. I am bound to make it an object to call and see me. Good Goods and lots of them is bound to bring the trade, and my price I will guarantee to be satisfactory.

Rev. J. T. Iddings will preach at Ironton next Sunday afternoon at 2:30, standard time.

The organ recently purchased by the school board has arrived and is giving good satisfaction.

Mrs. Chas. Kelly started for Portland on Tuesday to visit her parents, her mother being quite sick. Mrs. K. will be absent about a month.

Rev. A. M. Parmenter will deliver the address at the union temperance meeting next Sunday evening.

Ben Weaver, late with Upright Bros., may now be found on file at the county clerks office at East Jordan.

Communion service at the school house, Ironton, next Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock. All are welcome.

Chas. Swallow and Frank Lamphear started on Wednesday for Chicago, where they expect to labor until spring.

W. H. Phelps arrived home from the east Thursday. He reports less snow but more cold weather in New York than there is here.

"H." in the last Statesman, demonstrates by figures that Boyne is the exact geographical center of all the land in Charlevoix county.

Our ready priat rested in a snowbank somewhere about two days this week, of course adding nothing to punctuality on publication day.

The treasurer of Norwood says taxes are paid up this year much closer, and apparently with less effort than last year. This is surely an indication of better times.

Mr. B. H. Krebs, of Muskegon, arrived in Charlevoix on Tuesday, and on Wednesday morning went to work in the Rifenburg mill. He will be employed as engineer, at which business he has had an experience of over twenty years, the past eight of which were in the employ of Mr. Rifenburg.

Subject at the Congregational church next Sunday morning: "Prospects." All are invited and a special invitation to all the members.

J. E. Wood received quite a shaking up last week Wednesday, by falling down cellar at Dr. Cronter's. He says he broke his neck, his back, and one of his legs.

Rev. C. F. Van Auken arrived home from Reed City last Thursday night, and was greeted by an unusually large audience at the Congregational church Sunday morning.

No mail from the south on Tuesday. On the same day the Petoskey stage was delayed until 3 o'clock, having shoveled through the big drift just out of the village.

Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Peck are at East Jordan this week, organizing a company to play "True to the Heart" for the benefit of Stevens Post G. A. R. at that place, next Friday and Saturday nights.

O. W. Smith has invented a runner for use on baby carriages in winter, by which wheels may be changed to runners in three minutes, and vice versa. It can be applied to every style of carriage made.

The firm of Curtis, Wachtel & Co., bankers, of Petoskey, has been dissolved. Mr. Wachtel having disposed of his interest to Wm. L. Curtis and James R. Wylie, who will conduct the business hereafter.

If convenient, hear the sermon at the M. E. church next Sunday morning, on "Future Recognition." Young people's meeting at 6 o'clock. On account of the union temperance meeting at the Congregational church, at 7 o'clock, there will be no sermon at the M. E. church in the evening.

The Detroit Weekly Free Press has reached the enormous mail circulation of 122,000 papers per week, to illustrate which they send out a handsome lithograph, showing mail wagon with packages numbered, showing circulation by states. The Free Press is truly the people's paper.

The entertainment of Cynthia, the Gypsy Queen, at the opera house last Thursday night, was well attended, considering the amount of advertising done. The playing was fairly well done for amateurs, but the plot is not one to draw out the full appreciation of our people. Miss Myrtie Petrie, as Bess, the fortune teller, seemed to have the best conception of her character, and evidently gave the best support to Mr. and Mrs. Peck, the principal characters of the play.

It is expected now that the Rifenburg mill will be completed, and begin making fine flour in the early part of next week, probably on Monday. It is the purpose of the Hutchinson Manufacturing Company, by whom it is built, to make the first day a test of its perfection. They will give it a ten hour run under their own supervision and management. We expect to be there at the opening, and next week give our readers a description of the mill and its workings.

C. G. Lewis, of East Jordan, and Miss Grace Watson, of this place, were joined in matrimony at the residence of the bride's parents yesterday, Rev. W. Watson, the father of the bride, officiating. Mr. Lewis is well known throughout this section, having been in business at Boyne City for about four years. Mrs. Lewis is a most estimable young lady, whose friends are countless. We wish the happy couple an abundance of good luck and prosperity.—Boyne Statesman. The JOURNAL desires to add its congratulations to those above.

Mrs. Reuben T. Nicholls, of Torch Lake, died on Saturday, Jan. 30th, and was buried on the following Monday. Mrs. Nicholls was a pioneer in this region, having settled with her husband near the present site of Boyne City in 1855, and afterwards, in 1860, at Brownstown, Antrim county. In 1864 they settled on section 36, Torch Lake, where they have ever since resided. Mrs. Nicholls was a member of the Mormon church on Beaver Island, and bore with patience all the sufferings of those times, living and dying a devoted adherent to the faith of her early choice. She leaves a husband and one son, besides many friends, to mourn her death. The funeral services were conducted by W. Watson, of Boyne.

Dr. E. E. Thompson, the specialist, from Romeo, Mich., arrived on the Tuesday stage and meets her patients yesterday and to-day at T. D. Smith's. She reports an increased acceptance of Dr. Brinkerhoff's methods of treating rectal complaints, and the train of evils which follow, such as fistula, ulcer, cancer, stricture and consumption. We dislike to speak the name "doctor," just as we dislike to complain or hear complaints of the various aches and pains flesh is heir to; yet the diseases exist, and next to the healer of souls, there is no person who stands in position to be a greater blessing to the community in which he resides, than the learned, sympathetic, and virtuous physician. For the sake of the afflicted we overcome our natural sensitiveness and advise them at least, to examine this new system, based upon recent discoveries, and judge for themselves as to its merits.

The Historical Society.

The historical society and its friends to the number of about sixty persons, met at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Brown, for the purpose of devoting one entire evening to the study of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow.

The literary part of the program was as follows:

The Vienna March, a piano duet, by Miss Cochran and W. A. Brown.

The Skeleton in Armor, recited in a very impressive manner by H. L. Iddings.

Vocal solo, Daybreak, by Dr. Carlstein, accompanied by Mrs. Kane.

Intermission.

Vocal solo, Living Poems, by Mrs. Mayne.

Biographical paper, Henry W. Longfellow, by Mrs. E. M. Clark.

Vocal solo, The Day is Done, W. A. Smith. Accompanied by Miss Cochran.

Quotations from the poet of the evening were recited by nearly every person present. They varied in character from sublime and beautiful sentiments to bits of humor and nursery rhymes; and contributed largely to the interest of the program.

Mrs. Clark's essay on Longfellow, deserves special mention, both on account of its completeness as a biography, and the finished style of its composition. In the course of its delivery, the writer read several appropriate selections from various poems.

The music was all so well rendered that no one selection could be praised above others.

The executive committee deserves great credit for the successful planning of the whole program.

The society now numbers forty-seven members in good standing, and we think all who were present at its last meeting, whether members or not, will vouch for its prosperous condition.

All former members of the society will please to understand that they are still entitled to membership on condition of paying their dues for this year, $1.00, and signing the new constitution, without being voted upon, as are new members.

The society will meet on Friday evening, Feb. 5th, with Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Clark. Prof. Enos will read the biographical paper on Oliver Cromwell.

Rev. C. F. Van Auken's Work at Reed City.

We find the following in the Reed City News, which together with the fact that so many were converted, compensates our people for their sacrifice in allowing their pastor to be absent so long:

Rev. C. F. Van Auken of Charlevoix, who has preached with great acceptability at the Congregational church, each evening for the past ten days, Saturday excepted, closed his labors here Wednesday evening, and left for his home, accompanied by his wife, on the two o'clock train Thursday afternoon. At a meeting of the church Thursday evening the following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, Rev. C. F. Van Auken, of Charlevoix, has preached with great clearness and power the gospel of Christ in this church for the past ten days, thereby proving his efficiency as a master workman in "winning souls" and leading believers to a higher plane of Christian living, Therefore,

Resolved, That we recognize in him one especially adapted to rescuing the perishing, by presenting Christ as an all sufficient Saviour; that we will review his work in our midst with delight, and ever pray that the blessing of Almighty God will rest upon him and his work wher ever he may go.

Resolved, That we send greeting to the church with which he is connected, thanking them for their kindness in giving the services of their pastor, and praying that God will abundantly bless and reward them.

Firemen's Meeting.

Firemen are hereby notified that, in accordance with a resolution passed Feb. 7th, 1885, making the first Saturday of February of each year, the time for the annual election of officers, a meeting for that purpose will be held on Saturday night next at the engine rooms.

B. F. BISBEE, Secretary.

BEWARE.

Coughs, colds, and slight throat diseases often develop into bronchitis, seated cough, consumption, etc., and should have immediate attention and be removed in the first stages. Not only public speakers, but all, are liable to throat troubles and to obtain relief should use HAMILTON'S COUGH TROCHES, which relieve coughs, and hoarseness, making the articulation clear. Warranted to give satisfaction. Price 25 cents per box.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

WHEN A CURE IS GUARANTEED

Why will you refuse to be relieved of that cough which is liable to become seated on your lungs and to cause you many a suffering day and sleepless night? Your children are liable to be taken with croup and die before a doctor can be summoned. Be wise and obtain a remedy that will not fail to give relief from coughs, colds, whooping cough, croup, and all other lung difficulties. HAMILTON'S COUGH BALSAM will do this and costs but a trifle. Price 25 and 50 cents per bottle.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Boschee's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 152

SECURE ADMIRATION.

Who can help admiring a lovely face, a clear, smoothe, beautiful complexion? These can be easily obtained by the use of HAMILTON'S ORIENTAL BALM. It will surely remove freckles, tan, pimples, and blemishes of every sort and is in no way injurious to the skin, but is the most harmless and elegant preparation of its kind. Price 50 cents per bottle.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

TOOTHACHE.

Money is a great cure for aching hearts, but a twenty dollar gold piece placed on an aching tooth don't seem to have the least effect. In fact, nothing is sure cure but HAMILTON'S TOOTHACHE DROPS, which are warranted to cure in one minute. Price 25cts.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

Hard Times.

While money is close, wages and prices low. Expenses should be cut down in every household, economy the watch word for Mothers, heed on Doctors bills, by always keeping in the house, a bottle of Dr. Bosanko's Cough and Lung Syrup Stops a Cough instantly, relieves Consumption, cures Croup and pain in the Chest in one night. It is just the remedy for hard times. Price 50 cts. and $1.00. Samples free. Sold by Geo. W Crouter.

THE REST OF DEATH.

BY JOAQUIN MILLER.

What is the rest of death, sweet friend?
When is the rising up? and where?
I say death is a lengthened prayer;
A longer night, a larger end.

Hear me the lesson I once learned:
I died; I sailed a million miles
Through dreamful, flowery, restful isles—
She was not there, and I returned.

I say, the shores of death and sleep
Are one; that when we wearied come
To Lethe's waters, and lie dumb,
'Tis death, not sleep, holds us to keep.

Yea, we lie dead for need of rest;
And so the soul drifts out and o'er
The vast still waters to the shore
Beyond, in pleasant, tranquil quest;

It sails straight on, forgetting pain,
By isles of peace, to perfect rest—
Now were it best abide or best
Return and take up life again?

And that is all of death there is,
Believe me. If you find your love
In that fair land, then like the dove
Abide and turn not back to this.

Yet if you find your love not there,
Or if your feet feel sure and you
Have still allotted work to do,
Why, then return to life and care.

Death is no mystery. 'Tis plain
If death be mystery, then sleep
Is mystery, thrice madly deep,
For, oh, this coming back again!

Ah, somber ferryman of souls!
I see the gleam of solid shores!
I hear thy stroke of steady oars
Above the wildest wave that rolls.

O Charon! Hail thy somber ships!
We come with neither myrrh, nor balm,
Nor silver pieces in open palm,
But large, lone silence on our lips.

A TALE OF THE RED PIKE.

"I thought I should find you with the girls, Mr. Godwin. You should have been with us. We've had such a scramble over the Honister Crag, and brought back no end of flowers for Gertrude. But one thing I must say, that fellow Losford is a jolly muff, though he doesn't look it. Just a funk, girls, and nothing else. Will you give me some tea, Mrs. Godwin?"

"What nonsense you talk, Bob!" cried his sister, conscious by some feminine instinct that her friend's face was hotter than a moment before; "you are a perfect mauvais enfant bursting in like that. I wish Mr. Losford would teach you manners."

"I'd like to see him try. It would take a plucky man than he is. Why, he wouldn't come within yards of the edge, Mrs. Godwin!"

"He showed his usual good sense, Master Robert," was that lady's tart reply. She had her reasons for looking favorably upon Walter Losford, of Losford Court, Monmouthshire, by no means least honored guest at Mr. Godwin's lake villa. And they were a very cheery and pleasant party, the pleasantest set, Gertrude thought, that her mother had ever got together, and Gertrude was a young lady of decided tastes and somewhat difficult to please. Even Bob Marston, when he was not talking nonsense and appearing where he was not wanted at inopportune moments, was as amusing as any other Eton boy. Nevertheless, at this moment two people at least were ardently longing to make his ears tingle.

"And what is the programme for to-morrow, Mr. Godwin?" resumed the young gentleman, not a whit daunted by the unfavorable reception of his last remark. "Can we picnic on the Red Pike? It would be jolly fun."

The host hummed and hawed; he rather preferred an open-air entertainment at a place accessible in an open carriage. But if you have a house among the mountains, up them you must go. The climbing disease is infectious, and there is no evading it until by a permanent residence you become proof against its attacks. Mr. Godwin would have to succumb sooner or later.

"Yes, Bob," said Gertrude, suddenly laying down the fan with which she was playing, "we will go to the Red Pike to-morrow."

And Bob, who thought he had rather put his foot in it, as he would say, was comforted, for he knew that to the Red Pike he would go.

Gertrude's face, as she went up to dress for dinner, was thoughtful. "He showed his usual good sense," Mrs. Godwin had said, and the words kept ringing in her daughter's ears until her lip began to curl with scorn. If there was one thing which Gertrude admired it was courage. Was she beginning to like a man who could be called a coward even by a boy? And the insinuation chimed in with other things. Walter Losford was hardly one to please a romantic girl at first sight. Cold, sensible, and wanting in enthusiasm even in his ambition, trying nearly everything by the arguments of reason, he would have made a just and not too merciful judge. And yet when Gertrude met him at dinner the hauteur she assumed melted away, and she blushed and smiled at his glance; for what is so fascinating as the homage of one who seems utterly careless of all besides?

The Red Pike was red indeed in the evening sunlight, every cliff that buttressed its rugged top burnished to ruddiness, and yet the party lingered, reluctant to abandon the view of the sea and land from Forth to Windermere that held them entranced. It was Bob only who was on the move, skirmishing about untiringly.

"I say, Gertrude, here's a specimen for you! It is a blue gentian growing on this cliff, and a rare good climb it will be to get it."

The party hastened to the edge of the cliff. In a cranny of the rock about twelve feet down grew the flower Gertrude had been longing to find. A slight opening in the wall of the cliff made it just feasible, if somewhat dangerous, to reach it.

"Robert, don't go too near!" cried Mrs. Godwin.

Gertrude turned, with her face a little flushed, to Losford.

"Can you get it for me Mr. Losford?" she said, gently.

"Not without a rope," he answered, calmly: "We will bring one to-morrow."

"To-morrow!" cried Gertrude, with sudden heat. "I want it now. Bob would get it for me in a moment, if I asked him, Mr. Losford."

"Bob's head is steadier than mine, perhaps," the other said.

He was in no way discomposed until, as he finished, his eyes met the girl's full of contempt and anger. Stung by the look he made a hasty step toward the edge of the cliff and bent down to make the attempt. For a moment he remained in that position, then, with a quick shudder, he recoiled, white to the lips.

"I can't get it for you," he said, hoarsely, falling back, while the others looked at one another in astonishment.

"And quite right, too, Mr. Losford; don't try it, I beg," cried Mrs. Godwin, loudly. Loudly, but not so that he failed to hear the word "Coward!" or to distinguish the tone of contempt in which it fell from her daughter's lips. The next instant he was his old calm self again, but he knew that he had his dismissal.

As for the bit of blue gentian, Bob brought it up in a twinkling, and chattered on in such a way as to earn every one's gratitude. Yet it was a dull party that wended its way down the hill, the little blue gentian nestling in Gertrude's fair hair, much to her mother's disgust.

If it was only an awkward hour at dinner that Mrs. Goodwin feared, fate was to save her hospitality from—to do her justice—an unwonted slur.

"Where is Robert?" she asked pettishly, after helping the soup. "Do you know, Violet?"

Miss Marston did not. Bob was not wont to be punctual, and she was about to say so, when the butler entered hastily and whispered something in his master's ear.

Mr. Godwin rose quickly, saying:

"My dear, this is bad news. There has been a fall at the lead works."

"How unfortunate; I am thankful the men were not at work! Or, even worse, we might have been viewing them, as Robert has been plagning us to do, and been all crushed together, like any common laborers. But where can Robert be?"

Here the butler spoke:

"I fear, ma'am, that Master Robert—leastwise he went that way when he came back—is in there, and John has gone to the village for help."

The gentlemen rose and hurried from the room; but almost as soon as they reached the scene the women were there too. The boy's sister could not be restrained, and Mrs. Godwin signed to Gertrude to let her go. Anything was better than inaction.

Mr. Godwin's wad-hole and works were hardly a quarter of a mile from the house, though hidden by a shoulder of the hill. He guessed at once that the boy had taken the key that he might exhibit to the ladies the wonders of the wad-hole, and probably had gone to make his preparations. A servant seeking him when dinner was ready had discovered the accident and alarmed the village.

"Is there any hope?" asked Gertrude, in a trembling voice.

"No," replied her father, with a groan. "The props at this end are gone, and the men say the hill is coming down. We must wait for help from Keswick."

Gertrude was turning to the group indignantly, but one was before her.

"Now, men, I can handle a pick, though I am a Londoner. Ten pounds to every man who joins me. Don't let them say that the Cumberland men left their master's guest to perish because they were all cowards."

The cobl, impassive face was aglow with energy and excitement. Was it Gertrude's fancy, or was it that that word, in his voice, struck her like a whip?

"The hill is on the move, master, and he be dead, too," said the foremost man.

"Hush, his sister be there!" put in a woman, in a low voice.

There was an instant's hesitation while the whole crowd watched the big miner.

"We be with you, master!" cried he, seizing the tool at his feet like a giant aroused.

The spell was broken, and who then so reckless as the Cumberland men? Losford soon had to check them, and assist the foreman to underpin and take other precautions as they worked. In time more men flocked from neighboring pits to the spot, and the work was carried on in gangs. Notwithstanding Mr. and Mrs. Godwin's entreaties Violet would not leave, and hour after hour, while the countless loads of earth were being wheeled away, she walked to and fro with Gertrude's hand in hers. How each workman was gazed at as he came from the darkness into the blaze of the fire and deposited his load. Whoever worked by spells, the figure Gertrude knew best did not appear. But, when the faint, lingering hope was dying out, one of the men staying in the house came quickly up to Violet.

"Miss Marston, do not be too sanguine. There is hope yet, however. The fall is only partial, and he may be in the main workings. The men fancy they heard him knocking."

Violet made no reply. She was sobbing on Gertrude's shoulder.

"Is any one hurt?" asked the latter, eagerly.

"Hardly. Only a few cuts from stones."

Another hour passed, while the crowd thickened, and listened breathlessly to the dull sound of the tools and the creaking of the barrows. A fresh gang was at work, and they came out more quickly. The sky was growing gray, and the hill-tops came out in cold majesty.

Suddenly the work ceased; a barrow on its way out stopped inside the entrance. The crowd outside drew close and breathed more quickly, and women hid their faces as the sound of voices came from the pit. Then a crowd of men pressed out, and in their midst Walter Losford, stained and ragged, with the boy in his arms. He laid him on the wraps by the women. The blood was trickling from a cut in his own forehead, and his face, where it was not lead-grimed, was pallid with fatigue.

"He has only fainted," he said to the doctor.

"Just so; he only wanted a glass of whisky," said the latter, cheerily.

Gertrude rose from the boy to thank his bearer, but he had turned away.

"The worst time was just before they broke in, Gerty. I thought the earth must fall again, or something happen to prevent them reaching me," Bob said to her, when she visited him in his room next day. "But that Losford is no end of a trump. He's been up to say good-by, and I told him what an ass I'd made myself about him. I heard his voice first, and Mrs. Godwin says they would not have got me out but for him."

The likelihood of this alternative appeared to give him unmixed satisfaction.

"I don't think they would," said Gertrude, presenting him with a large bunch of grapes: "I'll get you some more, Bob."

"You bet your boots they wouldn't. It's a pity he can't climb. Fancy a fellow like that with what the doctor calls 'constitutional vertigo!' I can't make it out."

And Bob fell into a brown study which passed into a doze; and thus refreshed, he was enabled to chatter all dinner time.

Gertrude stole out of the room, and, running down stairs, found him in the hall. He had mislaid a favorite stick.

"Mr. Losford," she began, standing before him in she knew not what attitude of pretty humility, "I said something yesterday the memory of which is burning me with shame. I cannot forgive myself, but will you say that you do? Bob has made amends. Let me do so. What a foolish girl said cannot have hurt you!" she pleaded, as he made no answer.

"Rather should not have hurt me," he replied, gravely; "yet it did, cruelly, Miss Godwin. But for the chance occurrence of last night, you would be thinking so still. It was ungenerous as well as thoughtless."

Gertrude winced under each almost contemptuous word. She had not bargained for this. Too much hurt for tears, she murmured as she turned to leave him:

"I am sorry."

"A moment, please. From any other woman I should have accepted the apology without a word. I have scolded you that you might know what it was like before I asked you to give me the right to do it. Gertrude, will you be my wife?"

And Gertrude said:

"I will."

When she had fully satisfied him upon this point, she asked:

"And you have quite forgiven me, Walter?"

"I shall have when you have done the penance I order. It is that you wear the bit of blue gentian at dinner this evening."

There was a twinkle of fun in his eyes that a stranger would not have believed could harbor there.

The sight of the harmless specimen caused Bob to blush, the only blush he was guilty of in his schooldays.

HOME AMUSEMENTS.

Some Interesting Parlor Games and Pastimes.

CLUMPS.—One of the most agreeable and funny games for the parlor is that by the name of "Clumps." It can be played by any number. Sides are chosen the same as in a spelling match, and one chosen from each side to go out and select some article, substance or thing from either the animal, vegetable or mineral kingdom for both sides to guess, and the side that succeeds in finding it first gains one member from the other side. The rapidity and eagerness with which the questions are asked by both sides in order to win is very amusing and quite exciting, to say the least.

BLOWING THE FEATHER.—The players sit in a circle, each taking hold of the edge of a sheet with both hands and holding it up to the chin. A feather is placed on the sheet, and the players are to keep it in motion by blowing it, while one of the company is outside the circle trying to catch it by reaching out his hands. The quickness with which the position and direction of the feather can be changed by blowing sharply, will make the efforts of the catcher futile for some time. When he catches the feather, the person in front of whom it is caught must exchange places with him.

GAME OF BEAN BAGS.—A very pretty and amusing game for old and young: Take a board three feet long, eighteen inches wide; cut a hole six inches square; have the top of hole nine inches from the top of board and six inches from each side; arrange legs underneath, either stationary or with hinges, so that the board will slant to bring the bottom of the hole just one foot from the floor; cover with some pretty material—cretonne preferred.

Make six bags six inches square, of ticking, and one bag (called jumbo) six inches wide by twelve inches long. Put a scant half-pint of beans into the small bags and double the quantity into jumbo.

To play the game—Choose sides, then toss the bags the length of the room, about fifteen feet, through the hole.

Each small bag going through counts ten points.

The large jumbo going through counts twenty points.

If it lodges on the board the small bags count five; the large one ten.

The small bags going off the board, the player loses ten; jumbo twenty.

Game 100 points.

It seems an easy matter to pitch the bags through the hole, but experience will prove to the contrary.

THE FRUIT-SELLER.—This is a simple little game that very young children may understand, and yet older ones, by choosing foreign fruits that are not commonly seen, may make it quite puzzling. I got it up for a little class of boys and girls, who thereby learned much about the growth of fruit.

One child is chosen for the seller, and he or she selects a kind of fruit and does not tell the rest, who are to guess what it is after asking one question which may be answered by "yes" or "no." Any one asking a question that cannot be answered thus loses a chance to guess, and the one who guesses right becomes the seller, the previous seller becoming a buyer.

EXAMPLE.

Seller—I have a fruit to sell.
First Buyer—Does it grow on a tree?
S.—No.
First B.—Strawberries?
S.—No.
Repeats to second buyer.
Second B.—Does it "keep" through the winter?
S.—Yes.
Second B.—Quinces?
S.—No.
Repeats to third buyer.
Third B.—Does it grow in this country?
S.—No.
Third B.—Figs?
S.—No.
Repeats to fourth buyer.
Fourth B.—Is it solid, fresh, or dried?
Loses his chance to guess.
Repeats to fifth buyer.
Fifth B.—Is the fruit dried before being sent from the country where it grows?
S.—Yes.
Fifth B.—Raisins?
S.—Yes.

HE that blows the coals in quarrels he has nothing to do with has no right to complain if the sparks fly in his face.—Franklin.

They Do Not Like Our Food.

Not a few articles of food that are popular among civilized peoples, some of them being even regarded as great dainties, are rejected by many savage tribes as utterly unfit to be eaten. Some preparations of food, too, that we enjoy are not relished by uncivilized people, because in their experience they have met with nothing like them. The natives of New Guinea, for instance, cook a few cereals in their own fashion, but they made very wry faces when they attempted to eat some fresh baked biscuits that the missionaries gave them. They finally wrapped their biscuits up in paper, intending to keep them as curiosities. On some of the islands of the Malay Archipelago there are hundreds of natives whose only industry is to collect the edible birds' nests that are esteemed a great dainty by the Chinese. They wouldn't dream of eating them themselves, and they think the Chinese must be very peculiar people to use that sort of food.

The Esquimaux near Littleton Island once discovered a supply of bread and salt pork that Dr. Kane had cached, and they proceeded to enjoy a feast at the white men's expense. They liked the salt pork, and did not leave a morsel of it. This was probably the first chance they had ever had to vary the monotony of their meat diet. They nibbled the bread a little, promptly pronounced it a failure, and told Dr. Kane afterward that they would as soon swallow so much sand. The Esquimaux generally dislike all the preparations of vegetables that the explorers bring among them. They think it is a perverted appetite that craves anything but meat.

A tribe living not far from Port Moresky, New Guinea, that think boiled snakes are to be preferred to roast pig, draw the line at sugar. When they saw Dr. Chalmers, their first white visitor, sweetening his tea one morning they asked him for some of his salt. Dr. Chalmers told them it was not salt, but they were incredulous, and so he gave some sugar to one of the natives. "He began eating it," says Dr. Chalmers, "and the look of disgust on his face was worth seeing; he rose up, went out, spat out that he had in his mouth, and threw the remainder away." Then he told the crowd what horrible stuff it was, and they were satisfied to take his word for it without trying it themselves.

Many savage tribes think eggs are wholly unfit for food. They keep fowls that are very much like our own, and sometimes chickens are almost their sole animal food, but they never dreamed that anybody could get hungry enough to eat eggs until they saw the missionaries eat them. The spectacle of their white friends making eggs a part of their breakfast still troubles a number of tribes in Africa. Mr. Wallace says that among some of the Pacific Islanders hens' eggs are saved to sell to ships, but are never eaten by the natives.

There are a number of tribes in Africa whose chief riches are their herds of cattle, but who never drank a drop of cow's milk in their lives. They think the milk of their herds is for calves and not for human beings, and they are disgusted at the idea that anybody should consider it a proper article of food. A few tribes near the great lakes think it is a spectacle worth seeing to look at the missionaries milking cows and drinking the milk. Among many tribes, however, milk is an important article of food. They estimate a man's wealth by the number of cattle he owns, and thinks he is squandering his capital if he kills one of them for food. They use their cattle to buy wives and other commodities, and eat them only when they die in natural course.

Strawberries and raspberries are found in some tropical regions, but they are never eaten, and, in fact, are hardly worth picking, as they are poor, almost tasteless things. The wild fruits of tropical regions are generally far inferior in quality and abundance to those of the temperate zone.

These same tribes that are astounded at some of the articles white men put into their stomachs very likely eat grasshoppers, ants, monkeys, elephants, and many other things that have not been introduced into our cuisine. The pure white salt of commerce is the one article in the nature of food that they are all glad to get. Earth strongly impregnated with saline matter has a wide sale in one part of Central Africa, and along the Angola coast natives collect the impure deposits of the salt marshes to season their food. If salt were not so heavy, explorers would find it more useful than almost any other commodity in paying their way through savage lands.

A Coincidence.

A stranger who arrived at Sioux City was met at the depot by a rattling big fellow, half drunk and in fighting humor, who stopped him and said:

"Stranger, are you from Omaha?"

"Yes, sir."

"Then prepare."

"For what?"

"To take the biggest licking a white man ever got. I took a solemn oath an hour ago to lick the first chap who arrived here from Omaha?"

The stranger "peeled" without another word and sailed in, and in three minutes he had taken the sand out of the big fellow.

"Stranger, why didn't you tell me?" asked the victim, as he wiped his bloody nose on the rim of his hat.

"Tell you what?"

"That you was a hitter."

"Oh, there was no use in that. As soon as the train entered the suburbs I made up my mind to lick the first man I met after leaving the car, and you happened to be the one."—New York Star.

SIR JOHN LUBBOCK says that ants have a means of recognizing each other not easily explained. "The recognition is immediate and complete, even after an absence of a year from the nest." The recognition in human families is not quite so immediate. For instance: when an aunt—a poor aunt—from the country visits a city nest occupied by rich relatives, after an absence of only six months, she is not recognized so suddenly and impulsively as to make her feel other than an unwelcome stranger.—Norristown Herald.

WASHINGTON IRVING once said to a lady friend: "Don't teach your daughters so many things; teach them one thing; teach them to be easily pleased." Judging from the specimens of husbands acquired by numerous young ladies, too many mothers have followed Irving's advice.

"OH, GAWGE!" "Yes, darling." "I fear, oh, I fear that my parents will oppose our marriage." "What makes you think so?" "Why, you know, Gawge, ma thinks you're a flirt. She saw you poking the fire in the grate last night, and she said you did it too well. She said no young man had that twist of the wrist who didn't sit up with a good many girls regularly. Oh, Gawge, are you deceiving me?" "Deceiving you? Naw! I got that twist when I went into the restaurant business—opening oysters. I am all yours, Angelina." "Oh, Gawge!"—Chicago Black Diamond.

A TOO COMMON FOOL.

There is a man in our town
Who wasn't very wise;
For twenty long and weary years
Did he economize.

For twenty years he wore old clothes
And toiled with might and main,
And starved and walked on bitter frozo,
And suffered many a pain.

For twenty years did he deny
Himself the joys of life,
And all his self-inflicted woes
Were shared by his good wife.

In twenty years his wife and he Had saved enough to spend
Their few remaining days in peace
With plenty to attend.

And he of this man, like other fools,
To Wall street went so gay
With what he'd saved for twenty years
And lost it in a day.
—H. C. Deady.

"YOU are going into the lecture field, they tell me?" "Yes, I think some of doing so." "Have you ever had any experience in public speaking?" "No, I never tried to address an audience in my life." "But, my good sir, how can you hope to succeed if you know nothing about the lecture business?" "Oh, I'm posted on the lecture business. You can depend on that." "But how does that come?" "Come? Why, great Scott, man, I've been married twenty-two years!"—Chicago Ledger.

The Sex of the Locomotive.

"Why," asked the fat passenger, "does an engineer always call his engine 'she?'" There was a moment of embarrassing silence, when the man on the wood box said something about "her headlight," which was followed by a hollow groan all along the line. "Because," ventured the tall, thin passenger, "the more you throttle her the faster she goes." But this was barred out under the rules. The man with the sample case suggested "because she runs the mail," but everybody said "ah, there!" so sarcastically that he apologized. The cross passenger said "because there was so much bustle and bang about her," and he was fined cigars for the crowd on the spot. The bashful passenger said maybe it was because she "pulled the smoker," and he was hissed off the stage. And longer had they sung, but the woman who talks bass closed the lodge by croaking: "Because we couldn't get along without her."—Burdette, in Pathfinder Guide.

That Sausage.

A clergyman in a Southern State was on his way to preach a funeral sermon. As he was passing the house of a widow lady, a member of his congregation, she ran out and stopped him, saying, as they had just slaughtered their hogs, she had put up a few pounds of sausage as a present, adding that, as she had put it in double paper pockets, she thought it would not soil his clothes. He thanked her earnestly for her kindness, and rode on, having put the parcel in his pocket.

All the time he was officiating at the grave a large, half-starved hound kept snuffing around him, sometimes approaching alarmingly near, attracted by the scent of the fresh meat. As the deceased was a man of some prominence, there was a considerable crowd collected, and great mourning and lamentation came from the family group; so no one paid any attention to the movements of the animal, but all noticed with concern—for he was beloved by his congregation—the great pallor of the clergyman, and the beads of perspiration standing upon his brow, and they began to whisper to each other that Mr. H—— must be ill.

After the interment they all proceeded to the church, where the funeral sermon was to be preached. Just before entering, Mr. H—— turned round to ascertain the whereabouts of his tormentor, when lo! there he was, not far from him, but the crowd prevented him from approaching too closely, Just at this moment some one gave the poor creature a cruel kick, which sent him off howling. When the minister reached his pulpit—one of those old-fashioned affairs ascended by a short, steep flight of steps—he breathed more freely. He was just about to commence his duties when the sexton, a good old man, came noiselessly up the steps with a slip of paper in his hand, which he wished to give to the minister, but who was unnoticed by that gentleman, though seen by all the congregation. He gently twitched his coat to attract his attention. A thrill of horror passed over the unhappy preacher at the dreadful thought that the dog had entered unseen in the crowd, and was now about to take forcible possession of the sausage before the whole assembly; so, hoping to drive him away, he kicked back cautiously but vigorously, and struck the old man in the breast, who rolled down the steps.

Seeing the look of surprise and alarm on the faces of the audience, he stammered out, with crimson face: "I must explain to you, my brethren, what must seem my intemperate conduct. A friend came out to me, as I was passing her house, with a small package of sausage for me to carry home in my pocket; but ever since I dismounted from my horse this old dog"—pointing behind to the prostrate sexton, but without looking round—"has been following me, and at length came into the pulpit, and has been tugging at my coat, determined to get the sausage from my pocket."

At this moment the sexton, a little stunned and a little hurt, arose from the floor, and the minister at a glance took it all in, stared wildly at him, took a drink of water, turned very pale, and sat down, overwhelmed with consternation.—Editor's Drawer, in Harper's Magazine.

"If I Only Had Capital."

In all sections of all lands we find a class of people, mostly young men, who are good talkers, but very poor workers. They are constantly bemoaning their lot in life, and grieve because they were not born with a silver spoon in their month. They stand on the street corners or loaf in the billiard and pool rooms, and, like Micawber, are constantly waiting for something to turn up, never themselves putting forth the first effort to turn anything up. "Oh, if I had capital, I'd show you how to make money. I would invest in this enterprise or that industry, and soon it would be bringing me in handsome returns, and then I would be living, and not dragging out a mere existence; but this getting along without money is what I never could do, and I never expect to know how." Such is the soliloquy of many young men who reside not a thousand miles from Portsmouth.

To all such, should they peruse these lines, we would say: "You are the architect of your own fortune," and you are and can be just exactly what you want to be, and what you are willing to work to attain unto. Money is not all the capital that is necessary as a stepping-stone to success. Any young man who has his bodily and mental health, and a mind of at least some culture, has capital that many of the moneyed men never possessed, and if he will only utilize this God-given capital with vim, force, and push, he will thereby be enabled, under ordinary circumstances, to lay up for himself some of that other kind of capital which is so essential to one's happiness and comfort in everyday life. What our young men of to-day need is not so much money as it is the push and energy to earn it. Then when it comes in the reward of their own labors, they will appreciate its value more and know how to save it, and by assiduous toil perhaps some day they may have the capital the lack of which they so much bemoan at the present day.

Then, young man, go to work, cease loafing on the street corners and public saloons, and use the God-given capital you have at your command, and this may be a means to a desirable end. At any rate, don't forever stand crying, "If I had capital," when all the talents you have are depreciating in value for the want of proper exercise.—Portsmouth (Va.) Times.

A DOSE of Red Star Cough Cure will prevent you disturbing the congregation and put you in a right frame of mind to enjoy the services. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

Life at Rome in St. Paul's Day.

The condition of the lower classes rendered them more hopeful subjects for the ennobling influences of the faith of Christ. It is true that they also lived in the midst of abominations. But to them vice stood forth in all its bare and revolting hideousness, and there was no wealth to gild its anguishing reactions. Life and its temptations wore a very different aspect to the master who could lord it over the souls and bodies of a thousand helpless minions, and to the wretched slave who was the victim of his caprice and tyranny. As in every city where the slaves far outnumbered the free population, they had to be kept in subjection by laws of terrible severity. It is no wonder that in writing to a church of which so many members were in this sad condition, St. Paul thought it necessary to warn them of the duty of obedience and honor toward the powers that be. The house of a wealthy Roman contained slaves of every rank, of every nation, and of every accomplishment, who could be numbered, not by scores, but by hundreds. The master might kill or torture his slaves with impunity; but if one of them, goaded to passionate revenge by intolerable wrong, ventured to raise a hand against his owner, the whole family, with their wives and children, however innocent, were put to death. The Roman lady looked lovely at the banquet, but the slave girl who arranged a curl wrong had already been branded with a hot iron. The triclinia of a banquet might gleam with jeweled and myrrhine cups, but if a slave did but drop by accident one crystal vase he might be flung, then and there, to feed the lampreys in his master's fish pond. The senator and the knight might loll upon cushions in the amphitheater, and look on luxuriously at the mad struggles of the gladiators; but to the gladiator this meant the endurance of all the detestable savagery of the lanista, and the taking of a horrible oath that, "like a genuine gladiator," he would allow himself to be bound, burned, beaten, or killed at his owner's will. There were, doubtless, many kind masters at Rome; but the system of slavery was in itself irredeemably degrading, and we cannot wonder, but can only rejoice, that, from Cæsar's household downward, there were many in this condition who found in Christian teaching a light and peace from heaven. However low their earthly lot, they thus attained to a faith so sure and so consolatory that in the very catacombs they surrounded the grim memorials of death with emblems of peace and beauty, and made the ill-spelt jargon of their quaint illiterate epitaphs the expression of a radiant happiness and an illimitable hope.—Anon.

A Mystery.

How the human system ever recovers from the bad effects of the nauseous medicines often literally poured into it for the suppositive relief of dyspepsia, liver complaint, constipation, rheumatism, and other ailments, is a mystery. The mischief done by bad medicine is scarcely less than that caused by disease. If they who are weak, bilious, dyspeptic, constipated, or rheumatic would, of course be guided by the experience of invalids who have thoroughly tested Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, they would in every instance obtain the speediest aid derivable from rational medication. This medicine is a searching and at the same time a thoroughly safe remedy, derived from vegetable sources, and possessing, in consequence of its basis of pure spirits, properties as a medicinal stimulant not to be found in the fiery local bitters and stimulants often resorted to by the debilitated, dyspeptic, and languid.

Cuvier on Tight Lacing.

The great naturalist, Cuvier, was walking one day with a young lady, who was a victim of tight lacing, in a public garden in Paris. A lovely blossom upon an elegant plant drew from her an expression of admiration. Looking at her pale, thin face, Cuvier said: "You were like this flower once; to-morrow it will be as you are now." Next day he led her to the same spot and the beautiful flower was dying. She asked the cause. "This plant," replied Cuvier, "is an image of yourself. I will show you what is the matter with it." He pointed to a cord bound tightly around the stem and said: "You are fading away exactly in the same manner under the compression of your corset, and you are losing by degrees all your youthful charms, just because you have not the courage to resist this dangerous fashion."

An electric spark in a dusty atmosphere causes the dust to settle, and if the air be smoky, clears it up. This is probably one reason why the air seems so clear when sniffed after a thunderstorm, even though there has been but little rain.—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

"Gentle as the Breeze of Evening."

This line of an old hymn is quite appropriate when applied to "Pleasant Purgative Pellets." "I don't like to take pills if I can avoid it," we often hear people say, "because they constipate me so." Now the "Pellets" never do this. They are so gentle and mild that their effect is almost precisely similar to a natural movement of the bowels, and no unpleasant effects are left behind.

The Great German Physician.

The remarkable phase in the practice of Dr. Peter W. Schmidt (frequently called Dr. Pete) is, he never asked one to describe their disease but tells each one their trouble without asking a question. His success is phenomenal. His practice enormous. He is sought after by hundreds wherever he goes, because he cures when every other physician and remedy have failed. He has allowed his great medicines, Golden Seal Bitters and Lung Food for Consumption, to be offered to the suffering, and we assert without fear of successful contradiction that there is no disease they will not cure. Thousands of bottles have been sold. Thousands of broken-down and discouraged invalids saved. Send to Golden Seal Bitters Company, Holland City, Mich., for Facts for the Million! Free.

A Distressed General.

What General causes more distress, is more prevalent, and spreads more dismay? General Want. If it was from the want of sound lungs Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein would out-general it.

FOR DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, depression of spirits, and general debility in their various forms; also, as a preventive against fever and ague, and other intermittent fevers, the "Ferro-Phosphorated Elixir of Calisaya," made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., of New York, and sold by all druggists, is the best tonic; and for patients recovering from fever or other sickness it has no equal.

An Undoubted Blessing.

About thirty years ago a prominent physician by the name of Dr. William Hall discovered, or produced after long experimental research, a remedy for diseases of the throat, chest and lungs, which was of such wonderful efficacy that it soon gained a wide reputation in this country. The daughter of Leon Otashqnabona (Indian) died Friday night. The ladies aided the family in arrangements for the funeral, the expense of which was borne by the G. A. R., Leon having been a sharpshooter during the war, and is a member of the post just established.

Rev. C. F. VanAuken preached at 3 p. m. Sunday, in the M. E. church. As usual, a good audience. Mr. Van Auken appointed Wednesday evening the 3d to give a preparatory lecture when all who are to unite with the Congregational church will be accepted and the Sunday following the the sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be administered. Services in the school house at 3 o'clock, instead of at the church in the evening, as was announced last Sunday. This arrangement has been made to accomodate parties who wish to be baptised and unite with the church, who cannot well attend in the evening.

G. C. Sweet informed your reporter Monday night, that he had thus far this winter cut and banked 14,000 cedar ties and posts.

Allen & Hastings, the South Arm machinists, are busily engaged overhauling and repairing the North Star's machinery.

"True to the heart," will be produced by A. E. Peck, under the auspices of Stover's post G. A. R., in this place, Feb. 5th, and 6th.

When the Wilson Hoop Co. and the railroad company have completed their docks in South Arm, they will be about one fourth of a mile in length.

A Shakesperian club has been organized and met for the first time at Mrs. Jas. A. Read's, last Saturday. A large attendance and a good time is reported.

D. R. Miller, who has been employed in the register's office for some months past, is now being instructed in the mysteries of the printing art in this office.

County Clerk Thatcher has received a circuit court calender for Michigan, giving time and date of each session of circuit court in every county of the state.

The Pine Lake Lumber Co. start their small mill for the season's run about the 5th of February, the larger one going into operation about a month later.

Cook & Porter, we understand start their mill next Monday morning. Their yard now is as full as it was last winter and teams hauling at a rapid rate yet.

The appearance of things in South Arm indicate a lively business. This is what we like to see. The streets on Monday last presented quite a metropolitian air.

D. R. Jerome has lately added several fine horses to his livery outfit. Dan thus far has shown to the public that he pulls the reins over no horse that has not got a "git thar" gait.

The Vance saw mill, located about four and one-half miles south and east of this place is cutting considerable hardwood lumber now, which is being hauled to this place for shipment in the spring.

Some dirty, mean, low lived whelp poisoned Philip L. Conway's large Newfoundland dog last Monday night. This dog was an especial favorite among the children in South Arm, he being strong, kind, and very playful.

The band boys are spreading themselves now a days preparing for their concert. We hope when the boys announce the date, that every citizen of East Jordan will secure at least one ticket. They deserve it and it will be a rare treat.

On Tuesday, of last week, Gustave Knopp drew 1,738 feet of hardwood logs, which was followed by Sam Richardson, with a load scaling 1,618 feet. Mr. Richardson drew 5,300 feet in four loads. Considerable rivalry is apparent as to who will draw the biggest load.

Notes and News.

Cadillac has the promise of superintendent S. E. Watson, for direct telephonic communication with Grand Rapids as soon as the weather moderates sufficient to put up the wire.

A German boy of Reed City, by the name of Randolph Batin, was getting shavings at the shaving pile near Horner's mill, when the pile caved in, crushing and burying him. He was missed after about four hours and in two hours more his body was discovered and returned to his stricken parents.

Judge Fallass was in Lowell last week, summoned thither by the death of his father.

Tuesday was the first day of the February term of the circuit court in Emmet county.

There was an interesting group of long faces, Tuesday, at the Petoskey station until the Harbor Springs train hove in sight.

Petoskey had a $2,500 fire last Tuesday. Fell Hill & Co.'s shingle mill caught from a stove in the drying room and was entirely consumed. The company will rebuild and have a new mill running in 30 days.

Temperance Column.

Conducted by a Committee of the W. C. T. U.

Dakota and the Brewers.

The national brewers' association is using its influence with members of congress to prevent the admission of Dakota as a state. The reason for their opposition is not far to seek.

When the constitution of the proposed state was submitted to the people, several provisions were submitted separately. One of these, article 24, prohibits forever the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. It was adopted by a small majority of 233. But it must be remembered that while 36,000 votes were cast, there were 30,000 citizens engaged in threshing and plowing at a distance from the polls, who did not cast their votes. The larger towns cast their full votes, so that we may say that a very full vote against prohibition was cast, while the vote for prohibition was small. Prohibitory legislation can be enforced in Dakota, as it contains not a city of ten thousand inhabitants, and Minnehaha county, which contains the largest city (Sioux Falls), voted for prohibition.

The enemies of Dakota are doing their best to convey the impression that the people of the proposed state are not agreed among themselves in desire for a state government. This is certainly not the case. The vote stood 30,000 in favor of the state constitution, to 6,000 against it. It was by a practically unanimous vote of the legislature of the whole territory, a year ago, that permission was given for the people of the district south of the 46th parallel to hold a constitutional convention and form a state government. Under these conditions the provisional legislature has elected its senators, and, having thus formed a state, the people ask congress, in the language of the United States constitution, to "admit" the state thus formed. The object of the brewers' association is to defeat the admission of Dakota, because it puts a new limit upon their traffic. They now oppose the division of the territory, hoping that prohibition might be defeated upon a vote by the two sections combined. But we may be sure that the people south of the 46th parallel will not consent to the admission as a whole. John A. Owen, Esq., who was chairman of the committee on prohibition in the Dakota constitutional convention, and drafted the article on the subject, writes us:

"If we must wage war against the money of the organized liquor-interest of the United States in our efforts to enter the union with prohibition in our constitution, is there not occasion for friends of good morals throughout the union to help us through press and pulpit? Our battle is your battle. There is many a doubtful congressional district in which the people will, at their next election, change their member of the house, if they realize that in obedience to the dictates of the brewers' association he voted to keep Dakota, with her prohibition constitution, out of the union.

"In view of our wealth, our character as a people, our educational institutions, our area, and our 263,000 population, as appears by the official census of June, 1885, shall we not have the active support of the religious press of the east?"

A Munificent Gift.

General A. W. Riley, of Rochester, N. Y., who for fifty years has been a temperance worker, rising early and speaking whether men would hear or whether they would forbear, crowns his noble life by giving eight acres of land a mile east of Rochester to the W. C. T. U. of that city. The property is valued at $10,000. Gen. Riley is in his ninety second year, a veteran of the war of 1812, as well as a veteran in temperance work. His heart is still warm and his mind so clear that he chooses to be his own executor and while living places this property where he believes it will do the most good to the cause to which his life has been devoted. This is one of our "backsets;" we can stand a great many such and we believe we shall have them. The streams have set this way and we have firm faith that they will continue to flow, till their tide becomes mighty enough to float our temperance hospital and training school.—Union Signal.

Three sisters of presidents are W. C. T. U. women. Mrs. Rev. Dr. Cramer, whose husband was recently appointed dean of the theological department of Boston University, is the youngest sister of General Grant and a devoted Christian. She now lives at Auburndale, the home of the Gordons, and takes an active part in the local W. C. T. U. work there, besides being state superintendent of evangelistic work for Massachusetts. Mrs. R. M. Caw, sister of President Arthur, is one of our workers in Albany, and Miss Cleveland, to-day the most conspicuous temperance woman in America, has been associated with the state W. C. T. U. of New York for years.—Union Signal.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the money secured by a certain mortgage, dated the thirtieth day of October, 1883, executed by Benjamin Walker and Maria Walker, his wife, of Charlevoix county, Michigan, to Josiah E. Harding, of Allegan county, Michigan, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of Charlevoix county, in liber 9 of mortgages, on page 168, on the 31st day of October, A. D. 1883, and whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of three hundred and forty-six dollars, and no suit or proceeding having been instituted at law, or in equity, to recover the debt now remaining secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof, and whereas, in and by the conditions of said mortgage it is provided that should any default be made in the payment of the interest due thereon, or any part thereof, on any day whereon the same is made payable, and should the same remain unpaid and be arrears for the space of thirty days, the principal sum together with all arrearages of interest thereon shall at the option of the said mortgagee or his assigns become due and payable immediately thereafter, and whereas, default has been made in the payment of the interest due on the principal sum on the day when the same became due, and whereas said interest has remained unpaid and in arrears for the space of over thirty days; the said Josiah E. Harding, has elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole amount of said mortgage, principal and interest, due and payable, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative. Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in village of East Jordan, in the county of Charlevoix, Michigan, (that being the place where the Circuit Court is holden in said county), on the 27th day of April, 1886, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of that day, which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows: The west half of the southeast quarter of section seventeen, in township thirty-four north, of range seven west, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan.

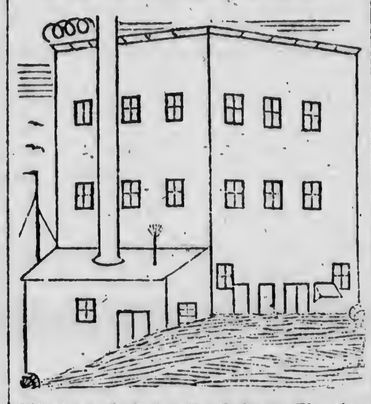
COMPLETED.



Rifenburg & Co.'s "North Star" Flouring Mill in Successful Operation.

For more than five years Charlevoix has been clamoring for a grist-mill. A number of projects have been instituted with reasonably safe guarantee of success,—yet all have failed to materialize and develop to completion. Not until the Charlevoix Improvement Association turned its attention in that direction last spring, when W. H. Harris of Muskegon, first came to look over the situation and prospects, did the matter take on an appearance backed by such active operations as would give our citizens a full confidence of success. The history of these negotiations are still fresh in the minds of the members of the association, and to some extent, of the people of the surrounding country. A number of excellent sites were examined, and the question of raising the necessary means to secure them failed to receive that hearty response necessary to success. Finally the committee approached Mr. and Mrs. John S. Dixon in regard to their vacant lot on the north side of the channel, near the bridge, and nearly opposite the Fountain City House,—a site that has no superior for the purpose anywhere in Charlevoix. After some negotiations, they generously agreed to convey the property for a grist mill for a nominal figure.

Pending these negotiations, other members of the committee drove Messrs. Rifenburg and Harris over the principal portions of the western half of the county, and so well pleased were they with the prospects, that they accepted the offer of the site, and contracted to build a mill of sufficient capacity to grind all the grain that could be raised in the country tributary to Charlevoix in the next ten years. As soon as the necessary arrangements were completed, these gentlemen returned to their homes, completed their plans and specifications, ordered their machinery, and prepared to remove their families to their new home in Charlevoix.

Early in August Mr. Rifenburg arrived here with his family, and proceeded at once to get out the timber for the frame of the mill, and as fast as the material could be got together he employed mechanics to fit it ready for erection. Since that time, every portion of the work has been crowded as fast as it could be consistent with perfect work Nothing has been slighted, and nothing omitted which could in any manner add to its completeness or convenience. And today it stands as a monument to the efforts of the Improvement Association, to the determination of the owners and builders to do nothing by halves, and to the skill of the mechanics who have so successfully adjusted the delicate machinery.

THE SITE AND BUILDING.

The location of the mill, just between the street and the channel, on the west side of Bridge street, facilitates access both by land and water. Farmers can drive their loads of grain on a level (without climbing either a natural or an artificial hill) along side the mill, and empty sacks into a spout leading to the weighing hopper, while at the same time a vessle may be unloading grain or receiving flour on the other side.

The building was set by compass, "square with the world," and is 48 ft east and west by 40 ft north and south, four stories high, including basement, sided with corrugated sheet iron. The roof is of the same material and has a gentle slope to the south.

Besides this main building there is an annex for the boiler and engine, 20x40, one story high; covered the same as the main building. The whole is lighted by 35 large windows, and two sash doors, arranged not only for inside convenience, but also for outward neatness and symetry. The color of the paint used is so dark a red as to approach a beautiful brown.

Passing to the inside, and first to the basement, which is on a level with the engine room, besides the paved and cemented floor, we are first struck with the massive appearance of the timbers which support the great weight of machinery and capacious bins of grain and flour in stock. We are assured that these numerous and immense pillars can not settle as their foundations are deeply and substantially laid. On the first floor proper we notice this same appearance of strength in the beams and posts. But here, beside "the beauty of strength," paint and varnish, and the black walnut trimmings upon the spouting, (noticed some weeks since in the JOURNAL.) give the room a very tasteful appearance. Here, too, is the office, which shall, when complete, contain more of ornamentation than any other part of the structure. The remaining floors (13 feet between joists) while planned entirely for convenience, have a neatness of finish that is worthy of mention.

Besides machinery on the third floor, are found the immense storage bins with a capacity of about 10,000 bushels, which are now nearly full of grain awaiting the completion of the mill. This grain was in part bought last fall from farmers in this vicinity, Dr. Lewis being the first to come with 75 bushels, (and by the way the first man to bring a grist which is in the weighing hopper to-day); and part shipped from various points in Wisconsin.

The construction of the building was under the direct and constant superintendence of Mr. Rifenburg. The best workmen of Charlevoix and vicinity were employed.

THE MACHINERY.

The contract for putting in the machinery and spouting, was awarded to the John Hutchison Manufacturing Company, of Jackson, Mich., who sent Mr. Wm. F. Morse, milling engineer, with a corps of skilled mill wrights, as assistants, many of whom have been in the employ of the firm for several years, who have pushed the work from first to last, as fast as was consistent with the perfection aimed at.

The largest and most expensive piece of machinery is, of course, the engine and its accompanying boiler. These, although furnished by the Hutchison M'f'g. Co., are made at the Atlas Engine and Boiler Works, at Indianapolis, Ind., the largest works of the kind in the United States, their shipments reaching 1,200 carloads in one year. The engine here is the latest finish of automatic cut-off; with 12 inch cylinder and 24 inch stroke, rated at 60 horse power; having direct attachment with the 6 inch shaft, upon which is hung the 8 foot driving pulley, used only as a balance wheel. This same 6 in shaft upon which the drive pully is hung, has direct attachment with a 4 inch shaft which extends nearly the whole length of the basement, and upon it are the roller pulleys The boiler is 14 feet long by 52 inches in diameter, containing 62 return flues, and substantially laid in brick over a spacious, furnace; and from it arises to the height of 60 feet, the 26 inch smoke stack, securely wired from all sides. It is supplied with water by an improved Desmond injector. The weight of engine and boiler is 18,600 lbs. In case of a fire, a No. 8 Blake steam pump, (also in the annex) can be put in motion and five streams started at once. Protruding through the roof of the engine room, can be seen the vocal organ of the mill, by which we can "talk back" to the Iron Co., of Ironton, and if the wind is right perhaps be heard at the county seat (or geographical center of the county) after the 5th day of April next.

In the basement is one of the John Hutchison Manufacturing Company's Improved Rolling Screens, which removes all impurities which vary in size from the wheat kernel; and a Richmond Horizontal, Adjustable Brush Smut Machine, which removes the fuzz and dust which adheres to the grain.

On the first floor are: 1st. A Barnard & Lea wheat separator, which by wind, screen, and sieve combined, removes straws, sticks, oats, weed seed and the like. This machine, together with the two mentioned as located in the basement, constitute the grain cleaning machinery, which fits the wheat for the clean wheat bin.

2d. Six pair or double stand of Nordyke & Mermon Co.'s Roller Mills, five pair of which are corrugated, and all of which rotate with differential motion. These are the grain crushers or grinders.

3d. One Eureka Flour Packer, adjustable to sacks or barrels. An exceedingly ingenius and handy machine.

4th. A beautiful Buffalo mill scale capable of weighing 60 bushels of wheat to a draught, and so graded that one may read off both bushels and pounds.

5th. In the northeast corner is fitted up a snug and cozy business office which, besides a desk and chairs, will contain a large Detroit Safe Co's safe, and a telephone. This office is heated by steam from the boiler below, the radiator for that purpose being put in by Washburn & Ackert, of this village.

6th. In the corner of the first floor opposite the office is a little room over the door of which we read the inscription, "Corn Cracker's Office." In here we find a buhr stone for grinding feed and corn meal. This, like all the rest, is the best of its kind, and suffices to remind the miller that he has not absolutely graduated from the picking business.

Here too, in stately phalanx, are the 18 elevators, made from clear lumber, all tongued and grooved, put up with round-headed blued screws, all shellaced and varnished. They, (with the exception of one), are provided with 34 in. doors, inlaid and finished in black walnut, with glass fronts. All the spouting is of the same material, and finished the same, as the elevators.

Proceeding to the second floor we find Centrifugal Reels, the cloth of which makes 20 revolutions to the minute and the beaters 200. They are the product of American genius and have given distinctive character and a name to the milling process as practiced in this country. Rollers have been used in Hungary for 40 years, but these reels are of recent date, and by them the system is known abroad as American.

Digressing at this point for a little history, we would say that the great mills of Minneapolis which exploded in 1875 with terrific violence and complete destruction, led to the introduction of the roller process in this country. The new mills put rolls in the place of stones; and the experiment made by Gov. Washburne, at an outlay of $100,000, proved so successful as to lead to all the modern improvements in the process, and completely revolutionize our American practice.

But to return to the second floor of the mill, besides the centrifugals, there are two purifiers which cleanse the opened berry, and two grading reels whose purpose is indicated by their name. On this floor also are the clean wheat bins and feed bins.

The upper floor contains five scalping reels, a bran duster, and a purifier, besides being the termini of the numerous elevators. Here also is the great storage bin now containing nearly 10,000 bushels of wheat, purchased in Sheboygan, Milwaukee and from the farmers of our vicinity.

THE WHEELS IN MOTION.

To illustrate the practical working of this machinery we will suppose it possible for our readers to fasten their eyes upon a particular quantum of wheat and follow it through from the vessel that brings the grain from Milwaukee to the vessel that takes the flour to Buffalo. The line is hauled in, the vessel secured, the hatches opened, the spout put down into the vessel's bin, the belt put on, the pulley and the cups begin carrying up the grain and deposit it into the weighing hopper. The little berries are not at all terrified at the prospect before them for they have already experienced the savage handling of the twine binder and the threshing machine. When the hopper is full, the valve is closed, the beam stay turned, and the balance made, the weights read off and recorded; then the rod is pulled and the little grains seem to be tumbling down cellar, but soon find themselves in a neat bin, from which they are caught up and carried to the upper story and deposited in the storage bin.

The monotony of this existence is broken to the little grains at the miller's choice, and they go down the big toboggan slide to the hopper and are weighed again, and again elevated. This time instead of going to the bin, they take a side route and pass through the Barnard & Lea's separator where by a thorough blowing and shaking up they are made to part company with bad companions, such as oats, cockle, chess, straw, sticks, and thistle heads. Rejoicing in their purer society they descend to the basement, and pass through the Hutchison Improved Rolling Screen, which removes substances too heavy to be blown out by the separator, and whatever may have passed the separator's screen. Being in a purer society they have a keener sense of their personal untidiness, and are perfectly willing to go to the Richmond Brush Smutmachine, from which they emerge with all dust and smut brushed and scrubbed away. Then they ascend in another set of cups to the second story, and rest awhile, "just to take breath," in the clean wheat bin. Again, at the call of the miller, they find themselves in motion, going down another toboggan slide to the first break. This break is a coarsely corrugated one with considerable differential motion, but it is the tightest place the little kernels ever got into. They all have to split open along the seam in order to get through. Being thus open they find they were not exactly clean in this seam and there is a sort of fuzz on the end that attached them to the stalk they grew upon. Resolving, first of all, to be clean, they skip along to the 5-ft scalper which removes the seam impurities, which are carried away at the very first so they can't get mixed with the good flour. After this cleansing the broken berries return to the first floor and pass through the second break. These rolls are the same size of the first (12 in. long by 6 in. diameter) but with finer corrugations and with slightly increased differential motion, then up to a second scalper, then down to another break until the whole five corrugated breaks have been passed, each of which has been more finely corrugated, and increased in differential motion. The scalping reels have each been of finer wire than the preceding.

It is needless to state that the little kernels no longer recognize themselves.

The little granules of starch and fragments of wheat gluten have passed through the wire cloth, and are now known as "wheat meal." All that remains from the fifth and last corrugated break is bran and adhering flour. Formerly, by the old-fashioned bolts, all this adhering flour went into the bran for stock feed; but by this new process it passes to the bran duster where it is dressed and all that is left is the clean pericarp of the kernel, which as a finished article, goes to the bran bin for the market.

The wheat meal from the several scalping reels is now concentrated and passes to a 10 ft grading reel, where it is separated into three elements, the finer of which is known as "bakers' stock," which, after passing another centrifugal, is called "bakers' flour." The next coarser element is "middlings" which goes to one of the three purifiers, and is purified, emerging as "coarse middlings." The coarse material from the centrifugal that dressed the bakers' stock is known as "fine middlings."

The purified middlings from the three purifiers are then concentrated and descend to the first floor through tin spouts, and are ground or crushed by passing three of the remaining rolls, set a little closer and moving with less differential motion than the breaks, which were corrugated, while the rolls are smooth. From these rolls comes the so-called "patent stock," which is then concentrated, and passes upward to another centrifugal and is dressed to "patent flour." All the best is now out, but there is more that is worth saving. The coarser materials from the purifiers and from the patent stock now descend to the remaining three smooth rolls and are concentrated to "low-grade stock," and thence upward again to the low-grade centrifugal, where the seam impurities have previously gone, from which comes forth the "low-grade flour." But let none be mis-led by this term. It is low-grade only in comparison with the two higher grades. It is excellent flour if made from good wheat, and compares with the best old process flour.

And here let us note the advantage of these centrifugals over the old style reels. By the old process all this which now passes for "straight," would have to go as exceedingly low grade.

The little kernels have now become bran in the bran bin, two grades of middlings in bins, and three grades of flour, which may be collected in bins or descend in its turn to the packer, and thence to sacks, upon which (if the patent flour descends alone) we may read "Rifenburg Milling Co.'s Iron Duke, Full Roller Patent." But the mill is so constructed that the bakers' flour may descend with the patent flour in which case the sacks will read "North Star, Full Roller Straight." Now when the vessel arrives, the numerous sack trucks and loading appliances will enable her soon to weigh anchor for Cleveland or Buffalo.

Or perchance, if you happen in the mill office, you may hear a wired voice, if not a wierd voice, apparently from the wall, carrying on the following dialogue with the miller:

"Hello, North Star?"

"Hello, Ironton. Is that you Adams?"

"Yes. Send us, by first boat, 50 sacks of your Iron Duke."

"All right."

FEBRUARY 11, 1886.

In the afternoon, as we go to press, the 21,600 screws have been driven into the 1,800 feet of elevator piping, and 1,000 feet of spouting is finished; the 75 pulleys have been adjusted to 100 feet of polished shafting, and 3,000 feet of the best leather belting, encircle and intricately connect them, and 1,200 elevator cups begin the work of carrying the first wheat through this circuit, from hopper to packer, in the presence of a crowd of citizens, eager to see the first patent flour made in Charlevoix. Many and curious were the reflections of the spectators. Some, we may suppose, were amazed at the flight of belts and the whirl of wheels; others stood in wonderment at the mighty triumphs of the human intellect, in view of the fact that, not only each intricate machine there in motion, but the whole acting in unison and perfect harmony, have been grasped and held by the mind of an individual man, the designer of the mill, before the ground was broken. Still others, we may suppose, of a historical turn of mind thought of the ancients with their hollow stone to hold the grain and a stone to pound with, which developed into the handmill turned by women among the Hebrews, and the mortar and pestle operated by captive slaves among the Romans, which was not much improved in the time of good King Ethelbert (560-616 A. D.) who imposed a fine of 12 shillings "upon any man who should corrupt the king's grinding maid." Then, no doubt, the various successive improvements of wind and water mills came to those historical minds, leading them to the buhr stones of yesterday and the rollers of to day.

But all, whether historically inclined or not, could but reflect upon the future of Charlevoix, as affected by this enterprise. The fields of waving grain will mean more to the farmer than formerly, and the laboring man will find that better bread costs him less money; and indeed there is not an interest in the village that is not enhanced in value by its establishment here. Moreover one could read in the countenances of all present a conscious pride in the new institution, that seemed to say: Success to the Improvement Association through whose endeavors the project was undertaken. Success to Mr. Rifenburg, who has invested his money here and made his home among us. Success to the John Hutchison Mfg. Co. who have taken pride in making every part of their work perfect, and success to every individual workman, through whose painstaking habits the whole is complete to-day.

Space and time, we are told, are infinite. If we were in full possession of the whole of each, we would enlarge upon this article; but ours being limited to here and now we cannot, further than to say that it will do the farmers good to call and see this mill and learn Mr. Rifenburg's system of exchange, by which no man is required to wait for a grist, but can weigh out his wheat and weigh back his flour, bran and middlings, and proceed to other business at once.

The Republican Desperadoes in the Ohio Senate.

The high-handed action of Lieutenant Governor Kennedy of Ohio in seeing himself above the democratic majority in the state senate and making arbitary rulings that have no justification either in reason or parliamentary practice, fitly illustrates the audacious recklessness of the republican party in its efforts to obtain possession of place and power. The question at issue is not whether the three democratic members from Cincinnati were elected by fraud. The real question involved is whether they can be thrown out before any steps have been taken to legally ascertain if they are holding their seats by fraud. The supreme court of Ohio has decided that the Cincinnati senators have a prima facie right to their seats, and until it is fairly determined by lawful and proper methods that their election was secured by the grossest form of outrage on popular suffrage there is not only no decent pretext for removing them but there is absolutely no legal power to do so. The utterly indefensible course of Lieut. Gov. Kennedy is undoubtedly due to the republican fear of the results of an investigation into the Cincinnati elections. Republicans well know that the elective franchise has never been so debauched as in that city by republican money and bludgeons. For the last 15 years they have carried the election there only by terrorism and the open purchase of votes. Lot Wright and his murderous deputies have uniformly been depended on to secure the republican majorities. These facts can be established by the most positive kind of evidence, and it is because they do not want to see them paraded before the country by an investigating committee that the republicans have resorted to methods in the Ohio senate that should stamp them as political desperadoes of the most infamous character.—Lansing Journal.

Capt. Joseph J. Bennett has sold the schooner Fleet Wing to Capts. J. J. Stevens and John H. Wilson.

Carpenter, Bartholomew & Co. have planked the extension to their dock, and have it already nearly filled with ties.

Mr. McNally, of Hayes, had the misfortune recently to fall a tree across his team, killing both animals instantly.

The workmen are putting in the furnace in E. H. Green's new block. It is a good one from the Detroit Stove Works.

The question has been asked where the "proceedings of the justice court" with reference to that feed dealer were to be found?

Dar Meech has been home from East Jordan, and is confined to his bed. He is improving now and hopes soon to be at work again.

Wm. Holland, of Ironton, who was severely injured by a falling tree some time ago, has partially recovered and was in town this week.

Mrs. C. Peaslie suffered another serious attack of her old enemy, rheumatism, last Friday night, and is still in a critical condition, though ap parently improving.

Orvis D. Wood, of Charlevoix, pays taxes on 5,000 acres of land. On his farm near Norwood he has 50 head of cattle, 25 horses and 160 sheep.—Kalamazoo Telegraph.

The engine on the Harbor Springs road collided with the snow plow and was disabled so she had to go to the shop for repairs. It was an accident no one was to blame for.—Petoskey Democrat.

On Monday last we noticed our village marshal leading five lawyers in the direction of the calaboose. He took them without indictment because they got into his net, and could not extricate themselves.

Before buying fine boots or shoes call at Fox & Miller's and look at their screw-fastened goods. They out wear any sewed or wood-pegged shoe made. Besides it is quite a comfort to have one's feet always dry.

The boys' band opened the rink for a benefit last Saturday night. Those who attended reported a good time and the boys got something of a boost toward the meeting of current expenses which are large just at present.

Elmer Mayne and George Wakefield have both made mis-clips with the axe this week, resulting in bad cuts in their feet. George Linn caught his axe on a limb, which caused him in some way to fall upon it, cutting his hand badly.

Miss L. Spaulding gives the ladies of Charlevoix a big offer this week. One third off on all goods except yarns and crewels. And any lady who purchases $3 worth of goods at one time gets a valuable present. See her advertisement in this issue for particulars.

In last week's issue of the JOURNAL, we gave the school board credit for purchasing the new organ that the scholars are so well pleased with. We learn since, that although well pleased with the new instrument, and although ready and glad to acknowledge that it supplies a long-felt and imperative want, the school board does not claim for itself, nor deserve, any of the credit of procuring it. Prof. Enos, by his own untiring energy, in entertaining the people with a very successful school exhibition for a part, and becoming financially responsible for the remainder, procured the instrument. He alone deserves the praise. May the time soon come when the people will have another chance to second his endeavors by a rousing attendance upon another entertainment under his direction.

The citizens of St. James, Manitou county, are kicking, and with good cause. For weeks they have been deprived of all mails, though the lake is frozen solid and intercourse with the mainland can readily be had; but the letter and paper mails addressed to St. James have been allowed to accumulate at Cross Village, Emmet county, for a long time and the department seems to make no effort to remedy the evil.—Detroit Evening Journal.

A letter from Geo. V. Davis of Grand Rapids, to parties in Traverse City, bearing date Jan. 2d, informs the public that if a man driving a delivery wagon for a grocery or other firm, solicits an order for tobacco or cigars, he is liable therefor as a peddler of those articles for not paying the government fees. But if a customer of such grocery gives the order without solicitation the articles may be delivered as other goods without liability.

The success of our public library is becoming widely known. Among the various papers which have given us notices is the Evening News, from which we clip the following: "Benton Harbor has 5,000 inhabitants; yet during the month of December only 40 books were drawn from the public library. This fact moves Buchanan to say that with only half as many people within her walls she furnished 840 library patrons, while Charlevoix puts in an oar with 1,500 people and 540 books. Both tell Benton Harbor to brace up."

The people of Ironton ought to consider themselves very fortunate in having so mammoth a store in their midst. One large store supplying everything, is worth a half a dozen small ones, each incomplete and a duplicate of the other. Moreover one large store can furnish goods cheaper than any number of small ones, for the reason that buying in large quantities it gets lower wholesale prices, and shipping in large quantities it gets lower freights, and selling in larger quantities by one set of clerks, in one store with its one outfit of lamps stoves and other furniture, can certainly sell at a lower per cent of profit,—all of which is a saving to the consumer.

A girl who has enjoyed the exhilerating sport of the toboggan slide gives this description of the costume: "You first get a long and wide roll of flannel, and, having divested your self of the majority of your clothing, you hold one end of this to the back of your neck, get your maid to hold the other, and then turn yourself slowly arouud until you have enveloped yourself from head to foot. Over this you put a Bloomer costume of heavy flannel, and over this again a jacket and skirt made out of a blanket. Draw long woolen stockings over your legs, put your feet in moccasins and your head in a small woolen sack. You will then look like an attenuated football, and you feel like one. That's what they call a toboggan suit."

The Historical Society.

The meeting of the historical society at Mrs. E. M. Clark's was eminently successful. The evening was propitious, and the attendance reasonably large. The literary part of the program was as follows:

Select reading, Oiling the Waves, by C. J. Grier. This paper gives the result of the various experiments made for the purpose of "stilling the tempest" by oils of various kinds. It was followed by a duet, (the title of which we did not get,) by Miss Cochran and Mrs. Kane.

After intermission, a beautiful translation of the famous German poem, Die Loreli, set to very appropriate music, was rendered by Mrs. E. M. Clark and Mr. and Mrs. Kane.

Then came the paper of the evening by Prof. Enos on Oliver Cromwell. This paper was a complete surprise to nearly all present: for since the panegeric by Thomas Carlyle, we have been wont to look upon Cromwell as a "hero without a blemish." Prof. Enos took a very discriminating view, and showed that Carlyle's praises could ap ly only to the true and genuine motives which gave the Lord Protector his start in a long and brilliant career; and then pointed out the influences that changed the hero to the despicable tyrant, and destroyed the foundation for liberty he himself had laid. The paper was received with hearty applause.

The closing music was a solo by Mr. Kane, entitled, A Bird in the Hand. It was rendered successfully, both subjectively and objectively(!) and brought as an encore, Abide Ye Yet, which caused the young people all to smile "out loud."

Our report of the meeting would be incomplete if we failed to mention the cheeriness given to Mrs. Clark's parlors by the arrangement and thriftiness of her house plants. So many, too, were in bloom; one calla especially seemed like an attentive, angelic listener to all that was transpiring.

The next meeting is with Mr. and Mrs. Amos Fox. Subject of the paper, Peter the Great, by Sadie Miller.

East Jordan.

From the Enterprise.

Dar. F. Meech, of the register's office, went home to Charlevoix, Monday, sick.

The thermometer attained a maximum of 38 degrees below zero this morning, Feb. 4.

Mr. J. J. Goss, and daughter, Ada, from Charlevoix, were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Hodkins last week.

J. R. Dixon, of Charlevoix, was in town Tuesday, having been called here to survey a piece of land for Glenn & Porter. He informs us that Charlevoix bay has been frozen over for three days.

Ben Smith, and J. Evans, who have been cutting logs on Glenn & Porter's land, three miles west of town, were brought here Monday night, in charge of Deputy Sheriff Rogers. We understand the charge against them is trespass, they continuing to cut logs on a portion of the land upon which they had been recently notified to suspend operations.

M. E. Church.

At the M. E. church next Sunday morning, sermon by the pastor. Subject—Our Heavenly Home. The young people's meeting at 6 o'clock. Rev. C. J. Strang will preach at 7 o'clock.

Come to the Sunday school at the close of the public service. It is full of interest.

Do not overlook the prayer meeting on Thursday evening, it will do you good to come.

Preaching at Black's school house at 2:30 Sunday afternoon.

Fire Department.

All members, and other persons who wish to be onrolled as firemen for the coming year, are requested to be present at the engine room Monday night, Feb. 15.

By order of the company.

B. F. BISBEE, Secretary.

Recently the dwellers on an island in Lake Champlain obtained permission of a surveyor to look through his telescope. He adjusted the glass so as to cover a particular farm house about three miles off that was pointed out. The islanders wore unusually long faces. The one who was peering through the glass became deeply agitated. The other islanders took their handkerchiefs from their pockets. The observer called out: "There they are getting through the services; now they have put him in the hearse." With every new announcement the little group of friends got up a new wail. There was no pause till the procession had disappeared behind a hill. The telescope was then returned with as much gravity as it had been borrowed and used.

The census in Massachusetts shows that out of about 650 towns 150 lose in population. The gains are in manufacturing centers, the marked losses in the agricultural districts, and certain compensatory gains in towns which would be expected to lose are due to their being convenient homes for those whose business is in the cities. Nantucket threatens to become depopulated in time. The population of the island has fallen from 8,064 in 1855 to 3,143 in 1885.

Experiments made in Paris show that the crocadile can bring its jaws together with the force of over three hundred pounds.

PHENOMENA OF TORNADOES.

Scientific Study of the Phenomena of Tornadoes in the United States.

The phenomena of tornadoes, to the scientific study of which Lieut. John P. Finley, of the signal corps, has devoted about eight years, are now so well understood as to warrant the belief that trustworthy warnings may soon be sent out to the inhabitants of localities which may be threatened with disastrous visitations. Daily predictions are in fact, being made at present, having begun last year and continued during the tornado season, and resumed recently upon the return of Lieut. Finley from an inspection tour in the west. The percentage of verification is already gratifying, though the predictions are as yet largely experimental, and are embodied in the daily published bulletins of the signal office only when the conditions favorable to the creation of tornadoes are very pronounced. In such cases "severe local storms" are noted as probable.

To a reporter Lieut. Finley recently described the known phenomena of tornadoes and the ends toward which present researches are directed. These storms have distinctly marked characteristics, and are by no means to be confounded with hurricanes, "blizzards," cyclones, or northeasters. Their tracks are never more than a few hundred yards wide, and their forces are generally exhausted by the time they have traveled a course of forty or fifty miles, though in this latter respect they are quite variable, some having been traced by their lines of devastation more than 180 miles.

Their rotary motion which is greatest toward the center, sometimes reaches the enormous rate of two thousand miles an hour, while their forward movement, always from southwest to northeast, ordinarily does not exceed forty or fifty miles. They are usually unaccompanied by electrical disturbances, and are believed to be uninfluenced by electrical conditions, though violent thunder storms sometimes follow them a few miles away. There is a distinct and curious relationship between the tornado and the general storm center, which is always apparent in their uniform relative positions; the tornado always occurring southeastwardly from the center of the low barometric pressure, and at a distance of from one to six hundred miles. The shape of the general storm center, the direction in which its longest diameter lies, and the appearance of the upper and lower clouds enter as minor elements into the problem out of which the weather experts hope to work a complete system of tornado warnings. The visits of the tornado are commonly between the hours of 2 and 6 o'clock in the afternoon.

Its home is an area which includes the whole of Iowa, all of Missouri, except the southeastern corner, the northwestern corner of Arkansas, the northeastern part of Indian Territory, eastern Kansas, eastern Nebraska, southern Minnesota, southern Wisconsin, and western Illinois. Here its season extends from April to August, inclusive. It is a frequent visitor to two or three regions. One is a strip along the gulf and south Atlantic which takes in the central portions of Alabama, Georgia, and South Carolina, with termini in Mississippi and North Carolina, over which its devastations are confined to the months of January, February, and March. The other includes a portion of southern and central Ohio, a large part of Pennsylvania, a small area in Maryland, a strip across New York, and a corner each of Massachusetts and Connecticut, where it is seasonable only during the months of August and September.

Lieut. Finley further said, while a host of interesting scientific questions respecting the origin of tornadoes, the laws which govern them, and their relationship to other meteorological phenomena remain to be answered, the more practical questions as to when and where they are likely to appear seem to be advancing rapidly toward solution. The interests which are subject to disaster from tornadoes are alive to the importance of the work in progress. Intending purchasers of farms apply to the signal office for information respecting the liability of their selected locality to disaster. To such are sent the records of the past as far as they are known. Whenever Lieut. Finley travels in pursuit of his studies farmers and villagers press for information. To these he says that nothing raised by the hand of man above the surface of the earth can withstand the shock of the tornado. He advises them to seek their dug-outs upon the appearance of the portentous signs of disaster, and there await the passage of the storm. For their property he advises insurance, so that the losses of the individual may be shared by his more fortunate neighbors. The insurance companies which last year "wrote" $40,000,000 in tornado policies are eagerly awaiting the completion of a map now in the process of making which will, it is expected, greatly narrow the so-called tornado regions, and perhaps show that large portions of them have never experienced a destructive storm. Upon this map Lieut. Finley proposes to show from the complete records of several years and dates as far as obtained for many previous years the average number of tornadoes for each locality per annum.

Gen. Robert Avery, U. S. A., who has but one leg, is inclined to doubt the reliability of a special dispatch from a Nebraska town which lately appeared in the New York Tribune. "The Nebraska liar," says the General, "professes to have discovered the soul of man by examination of one-limbed people through the microscope. Now I have but one leg. I will admit that when I lost it sensations appeared to be transmitted to the brain from apparently the same places where the knee, toes, or other parts of the leg should be, but after a time the cords healed up at the stump and gradually a change came. To-day I have no sensations from an imaginary foot or leg, but all come from the tip of the stump in such a way that I can accurately locate them."

Grant's Freedom From Anxiety.

From "Reminiscences of General Grant," by General James Harrison Wilson, in the October Century, we quote the following: "I was with General Sherman the night before he began his march to the sea, in camp near Gaylesville, in the north-eastern corner of Alabama, to which point he had followed Hood from Atlanta in his counter movement towards Tennessee. I had recently arrived from the Valley of Virginia, whence I had been sent by General Grant to reorganize and command the Western cavalry. After disposing of the business of the day we spent the evening, indeed most of the night, in front of a comfortable campfire, chatting about the incidents of the recent campaigns and considering the details of those yet to come. One by one the staff-officers had withdrawn to their tents, for Sherman was 'an owl' always ready to make a night of it, and they saw that he was well under way towards it upon that occasion. A dark and solemn forest surrounded us, and a dead silence had fallen upon the sleeping army; not a sound except that of the measured tread of the sentinel in front of the general's tent disturbed the quiet of the night. Twelve o'clock had come and gone, and one o'clock was at hand, when there came a pause in the conversation; then a moment of reflection on the part of Sherman, whose deeply lined face and brilliant, sleepless eyes I see now as plainly as I did then, turned towards and lighted up by the red glare of the blazing logs, and bright with intelligent and energetic life. Then came a quick, nervous upward glance at me, and then the following remark: 'Wilson, I am a great deal smarter man than Grant; I see things more quickly than he does. I know more about law, and history, and war, and nearly everything else than he does; but I'll tell you where he beats me and where he beats the world. He don't care a d—— for what he can't see the enemy doing, and it scares me like h——!' And this vigorous and graphic speech is the best description of the fundamental characteristics and differences of the two men I have ever heard. It shows not only a profound self-knowledge on the part of Sherman, but a profound, comprehensive, and discriminating estimate of the personal peculiarities of General Grant; for it is true that the latter was never scared by what the enemy might be doing beyond his sight. He gave his best attention to learning the position, strength, and probable plans of his adversary, and then made his own plans as best he might to foil or overthrow him, modifying or changing them only after it became clearly necessary to do so, but never lying awake of nights trying to make plans for the enemy as well as for himself; never countermanding his orders, never countermarching his troops, and never annoying or harassing his subordinate commanders by orders evolved from his imagination. He never worried over what he could not help, but was always cool, level-headed, and reasonable, never in the least excitable or imaginative. He always had the nerve to play his game through calmly and without any external exhibition of uneasiness or anxiety; and this was constitutional with him, not the result of training nor altogether of reflection. It was his nature, and he could not help it. The sanguine and nervous elements were so happily modified, blended, and held in check by the lymphatic element of his temperament that he could do nothing in a hurry or a heat, and, above all, it was impossible for him to borrow trouble from what he did not know to be certain, or could not change."

Danger in Raw Oysters.

Now that the oyster season is fairly opened it is in order for us to advise housewives how they should order their oysters opened, for while there may not appear to be any danger in so innocent looking a thing as an oyster, there is nevertheless great danger of its killing us if by chance we should swallow a ragged piece of oyster shell when eating oysters. There is just one way to prevent this danger, and that is by refusing all oysters that have been opened by the process known as "smashing." This operation spoils the appearance of the oyster and its shell, and small particles of the shell are hammered into the body of the oyster, which, when introduced into the stomach, become a terror as deadly as the mistakes of druggists. Insist on it that your oysters are opened by the stabbing process and you avert this danger. Children should not be allowed to eat oysters—raw or cooked—unless they have been thoroughly and carefully examined for minute particles of shells. I am very serious about this oyster opening business, for having lost a very dear friend through his having carelessly swallowed a piece of oyster shell which clung to the oyster I feel that I can not be too emphatic on this subject.—From the Cook.

A piece of amber weighing eight pounds is at present being exhibited in the Mark Museum, at Dantzic, for which the owner has refused $1,500. It is probably the largest piece in the world without blemish.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

"The-Public-be-D——d" Policy Denounced.

A railroad charging reasonable rates is one of the greatest blessings to the country it passes through that can be imagined; and indeed it may be said, that the time has come when a town must always make a sort of crippled growth until it has a railroad. We do not hesitate to say that the population and wealth of Charlevoix would double in two years if we had direct connections with the G. R. & I. or the Michigan Central, and through them with the principal cities of Michigan, Ohio, and Illinois. The price of our products would be increased by all that is saved in transportation; and the articles of home consumption would be lessened in price for the same reason,—besides the facilities to business by quicker freights, and cheaper and quicker passenger travel. So long as a railroad thus hastens or cheapens travel and traffic it is a blessing. But when it ceases to bring about these results—and just so far as it hinders the bringing about of these results—it is a curse.

The Michigan Central in getting a monopoly of storage and dockage in Detroit, and by charging exorbitant freight rates to the east, is just now proving itself a nuisance. The company is perfectly aware that this extortion comes principally from the producers of the grain. It also knows that the farmer has power to punish the company at the polls, but it insults the newspaper men of the state by saying that the farmers will remain entirely ignorant of their loss, through the influence of the passes annually issued to the country editors. We assure that company that its statement is not only a gross insult, but it is a lie. We take pride in our road, the G. R. & I., because we believe in it; we believe it deals fair with its patrons generally. But when it exchanges its policy and practice for the extortion policy of the Central, we shall say: Keep your pass, and time table too; we can publish something else in the space occupied that will bring us the money to buy what tickets we need to use. The Detroit Evening Journal is doing a glorious work in bringing the policy of the Central before the people.

From Washington.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 1, 1886.

Special Correspondence.

The principal topic of discussion, outside of legislative halls, has been for several days the publications of the N. Y. World regarding the Pan Electric Telephone Company and its stock-holders, (who are shown to include several U. S. senators and high government officials,) and the demand made by the senate committees for information relative to President Cleveland's reasons for the removal of certain republican office-holders, and the refusal of the president to furnish the same.

By the advice of the secretary of the interior suit has been commenced by the government against the Bell Telephone Company, to test the validity of the Bell patent. The success of this suit is of the utmost importance to the Pan Electric Co., and some sharp criticism is indulged in, especially regarding the attitude of Attorney General Garland, who owns a large amount of the Pan Electric stock, many people believing that he should dispose of this stock or send in his resignation as attorney general at once.

The attempt of republican senators to compel the president to make public his reasons for the removal of republican office-holders is looked upon as simply an effort to manufacture cheap campaign thunder for their canvass of 1888. That the attempt will result in a disastrous failure to them there can be little doubt.

The president's public reception Friday night was one of the most successful affairs of the kind for many years. It was attended by over six thousand people. The rooms in the white house were beautifully decorated. The two large mantels in the east room were banked with fragrant flowers, and foliage plants filled every available space. The marine band enlivened the occasion with music and the president was assisted in his duties by Miss Cleveland, Secretary and Mrs. Manning, Mrs. Whitney and Mrs. Vilas.

Grave fears have been entertained recently of a repetition of the disastrous floods of '81, and steamers and tug-boats have been kept busy for several days clearing the river of ice to prevent such a catastrophe. They have been so far successful in their efforts that the danger is believed to have passed, for the present at least.

Michigan's well-known and popular poet, Will Carleton, delivered his interesting lecture, "The Chain of Success," to a large and appreciative audience Friday evening. The lecture receives flattering comments from those who heard it.

A strange superstition prevails to a great extent among the negroes, regarding what they term "slaps" or "night doctors;" and many of them can not be prevailed upon to leave the house after dark. They believe that these dangerous characters roam about the country in search of colored victims for dissecting tables and pounce upon any of their race regard less of age or sex, who may be so unfortunate as to be caught out after dark. What inspires them with greater horror of these myths of the night is the manner in which they overcome and make away with their victims. A large plaster is clapped over the unfortunate's mouth and nose and he is hurried away to the dissecting table where he is carved up scientifically before the blood fairly ceases to circulate through his veins. An old colored man who claims to have been chased by these ghouls of darkness, upon being asked if he believed there were such men, replied promptly: "Deed I duz. Ob cose dar am slap doctahs, plenty ob dem. Dar am bofe cullud and white, and dey go in droves, mosly fo' in a row. Ef dey kotch yo' its good bye. I'se skeered mos' deff kum dahk. Dey gets twenty or twenty-five dollahs fo' ebery wun dey kotch. I doan blame de white folks so much of its dar bizness, but I'd jest like ter kill dem ob my own culler. But den, yo' kant kahm 'em, kas dey's sheeted from head to toe. Shooten 'em is no good, and dey turn de age ob a razor jest like a stone wall."

This seems to be an exception to the rule that "ignorance is bliss."

Science and Alcohol.

Ten years ago, at the request of the Edinburgh society of Arts, Dr. B. W. Richardson, F. R. S., delivered before that body six lectures on alcohol, presenting the result of a protracted scientific investigation of the subject. Among the facts thus scientifically established were the following:

1. Alcohol, instead of raising, lowers the temperature of the body. After a drunken stupor it has sometimes taken three days to restore the natural warmth, under the most favorable circumstances. Even moderate drinkers are peculiarly exposed to dangerous "colds."

2. Alcohol is not, in any proper sense, a food. The development of fat from its use is simply due to structural degeneration of the vital organs.

3. Alcohol accelerates the action of the heart from one hundred thousand beats a day to, say, one hundred and twenty-five thousand, followed by a proportionate weakening that necessitates, successively, additional draughts. Hence the heart becomes enlarged and its valves disordered; and the brain, by the increased flow of blood to it, is rendered for the time more active, and is succeeded by greater feebleness, which demands the repetition of the stimulus.

4. The whole internal cavity of the body, all its organs, every bone and joint, the brain and spinal cord, are wrapped in membranes, through which as filters, everything has to pass for the sustenance of the respective parts. These membranes must be just porous enough, and be kept perfectly supple. Now, alcohol causes them to thicken and shrink, and thus effects a general deterioration of the organic structures.

5. Among the effects of this deterioration, in those who drink moderately, are various neuralgic pains, the worst form of indigestion, and wakefulness.

6. At a later stage of drunkenness, not a single organ of the body escapes disorganization of its vital structure, though heredity or other conditions may cause a seeming concentration of disease on some particular organ—the liver, the kidneys, the lungs, the heart, the brain, or the spinal cord.

7. If this agent do really for the moment cheer the weary and impart a flush of transient pleasure to the unwearied who crave for mirth, its influence—doubtful even in these modest and moderate degrees—is an infinitesimal advantage, by the side of an infinity of evil for which there is no compensation and no human cure.

The above are the teachings of science. We will add, the teachings of actual observation. Sir Andrew Clark, one of the most eminent medical authorities in Great Britain, says that in seven out of ten of his hospital patients the disease was caused by drink, and in the three others was aggravated by it. He had sometimes thought of giving up his practice and going about the country in a crusade against intoxicating drinks.—Youth's Companion.

The Texas Advocate says: "Merchants at Bedias and Iola say they would not have whiskey sold again in these towns for $1,000 a year. Fourteen thousand dollars' worth was sold per year, it is said, at Iola. Now men pay their debts and have something left, who did but little more than pay their whiskey bill."

A large number of saloonists at Ishpeming cannot get bondsmen and will have to go out of business. This state of affairs has been brought about by the heavy damages recently given a married woman on charges preferred by her against certain saloon-keepers for selling her husband liquor.

The Japanese say: "A man takes a drink, then the drink takes a drink, and next the drink takes the man."

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. The Chicago Daily News

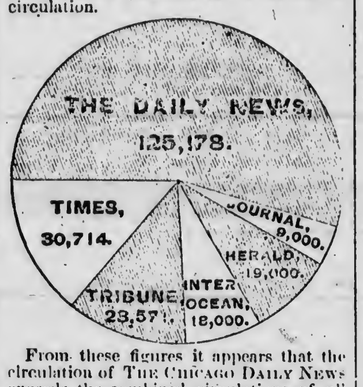
Has the Largest Daily Circulation in America.

Its issue for the year 1884 averaged 125,178 copies daily, and it is now regularly printing over 130,000 papers a day.

The magnitude of this unequaled circulation is best appreciated when it is said that it exceeds the circulations of all other Chicago dailies combined. Taking from the three standard newspaper directories—Ayer & Son's Annual, Rowell's Directory and Hubbard's Directory—the quotations which most nearly represent the actual circulations of the Chicago press, the following diagram correctly illustrates their relative positions as to extent of circulation.



From these figures it appears that the circulation of THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS exceeds the combined circulations of all the other Chicago dailies by 19,873 copies daily. The reasons for this phenomenal success are obvious:

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS

is a complete newspaper in all that constitutes the best type of American journalism.

It is a member of the Associated Press and is the only 2-cent paper in the West that possesses this first essential to a complete news service. In addition, it has its own private wire (by lease from the Western Union Telegraph Co.) connecting its Chicago office with New York and Washington, at both of which points it has its own news bureaus. THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS prints ALL the news.

It is an independent paper. It recognizes the utility of political parties as means for the accomplishment of proper ends, but it declines to regard any mere party as a fit subject for unquestioning adoration. It solicits the patronage of intelligent, thoughtful, honest people, who love country more than party.

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS

is a "short and to the point" paper. It believes that newspaper reading is but an incident of the day, not its chief business. It accordingly leaves to the "blanket-sheets" the monopoly of tiresome and worthless amplification. It seeks to say all that the reader should care to read, and to say it in the shortest possible manner. It is a daily paper for busy people.

It is a clean paper, fit for the family circle. It is a cheap paper—2 cents per day, 12 cents per week, 50 cents per month, $6 01 per year. Sold by all news dealers throughout the Northwest. Mailed to any address, post-paid, upon receipt of price.

Where the facilities of a daily mail are not enjoyed THE CHICAGO WEEKLY NEWS is recommended as "the next best." It is a large 8 page, 64 column paper, carefully made up to meet all the varying needs of the family circle. It is the largest "dollar weekly" in America. It is equal to the best.

The telephone announced the death of Gen. W. S. Hancock last Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

Rev. C. F. VanAuken will preach a sermon to the young men next Sunday evening. All are welcome.

Messrs. R. R. Tyler, H. L. Jones, and E. H. Beebe, mill-wrights on the new mill, will leave us soon for other fields of labor.

A new millinery firm went into operation Tuesday,—Mrs. Ella Smith and Anna Cooper, proprietors. Their rooms are in the Ingleside.

A few tax-payers not being able to meet the demands of the collector, the time for payment in this township has been extended to Feb. 27th.

We desire that every subscriber to the JOURNAL in Charlevoix buy at least one copy of this issue of the paper, and send to friends at a distance. Order early.

On Wednesday, W. A. Atchison hauled out with his small team the champion log on the job at Oyster Bay. It was an elm, 14 feet long, and scaled 1134 feet.

The new life-saving station at Frankfort was burned Saturday evening. The loss was $4,000, and insurance $3,500. The cause is not known. —Traverse Journal.

On Monday last, while the young people of Charlevoix were enjoying fine sport coasting on the Allen hill, news came that a young daughter of Mr. Plamondon, of Petoskey, had been run over and killed by a big coasting sled, just a few minutes before the news was sent. A later account stated that the child, although badly hurt was still alive and would probably recover.

The members of the G. A. R. post are making arrangements to give a coffee and hard tack entertainment at their next regular meeting, the second Monday in March.

Mr. W. A. Reynolds, of the Hutchinson Mfg. Co., of Jackson, Mich., is in town this week, looking after the completion and delivery of Rifenburg & Co.'s North Star Roller Mills.

The G. R. & I. coach shops and lumber sheds located at Grand Rapids were burned last Friday night. Six beautiful coaches including the sleeper, Petoskey, were also consumed. The loss is $67,000.

Six below zero yesterday morning, which is the coldest record yet for this village.  Last night was a stinger— twenty-eight below zero. To-day the air is cool and crisp, in fact nice snug winter weather.—Leelanau Enterprise.

The ladies' society of the Baptist church, will give an oyster supper at the Congregational church next Tuesday evening, February 16th. They extend a cordial invitation to all the people of Charlevoix. Supper served from 6 to 9 o'clock.

A very fine collection of oil paintings were shown us a few days since by Mrs. A. M. Parmenter, the product of her own genius and skill. She is thinking of organizing a class soon, here in the village. "'Tis a consummation devontly to be wished."

A large number of papers having taken up the fight against the St. Andrews Bay, Fla., colony, and denounced it as an unmitigated swindle, we should like to hear from Mr. Wm. Glover on the subject. He has been there long enough to enlighten us.

"There is quite a colony of Charlevoix, Mich., groves in the DunLawton hammock near Port Orange belonging to Messrs. E. Carpenter, M. J. Stockman, Ackert Bros., L. D. Bartholomew, B. W. Miller and Harrison Bedford, all of that place. These groves are on excellent land originally in wild trees and are doing finely."—Halifax Journal.

"A pleasant party of visitors took us by surprise Saturday. We hadn't on our best clothes, and were washing the forms, but put a bold front on it and faced the music. The party was composed of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Carpenter, of Appleton, Wis.; Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Stockman, and Mr. and Mrs. E. Carpenter and daughter Lillian, Charlevoix, Mich. They are all comfortably settled for the winter at Port Orange."—Halifax Journal.

The Charlevoix Improvement Association had a special meeting last Monday evening, to consider matters which the executive committee wished to bring before the whole association. The matters were referred to special committees, to report at the next regular meeting, which occurs next Monday evening. The Improvement Association, gratified by the success of the Rifenburg Mill enterprise, is putting forth great efforts on other schemes that promise equally gratifying results.

At the close of the preparatory lecture delivered by Rev. Mr. VanAuken at the M. E. church, Ironton, Wednesday evening, Feb. 3d, a business meeting of the Congregational church was called after prayer by the pastor. The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved. Fifteen names were then submitted for membership and by vote of acclamation were received into the church. Officers were then elected and the meeting dismissed with the benediction. As previously announced the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered Sunday, Feb. 7th. This was the first communion service of the church just organized with a membership of thirty nine uniting by letter and twenty-one on confession of their faith. At the close of the service Rev. Mr. VanAuken announced communion for the second Sunday in April, when an opportunity will be given for any wishing to identify themselves with the church.

Burgess.

[We beg the pardon of our correspondent from Burgess, for mislaying his items intended for last issue. We print the greater part of them this week.—Ed.]

The church social held in district No. 6, was a grand success.

The time for the next church social has not been appointed yet.

The tax gatherer reports collections slow, and the town board have been asked to extend the time of collection to the first of March. Think they have granted the time asked for.

Moses Cooper has contracted to furnish some parties with 5,000 ties to be delivered at Oyster Bay.

E. M. Clark will have the logs nearly all off from the Sam Olney place by the last of the week.

The item last week about Mr. Wm. Sager should have been Mr. Wm. B. Sayers, who was formerly clerk of the Cushman House in Petoskey.

A prominent young man of Hayes, who has been baching it for a long time; being too constitutionally tired to get a house keeper in a legitimate manner, was supplied thusly: Last fall he got a man and his wife to come and keep house. About a week or so ago he fired the man out, but not the wife. Better look a "leedle oud" young man. There are shooting stars and no hanging for murder in Michigan.

Republican Love Feast.

Great preparations are being made for the banquet to be given by the Michigan club at Detroit on February 22. The Detroit Tribune says that it will be the biggest political blow-out since the presidential election. A special train will run from Washington on Feb. 20 to convey Senators Palmer, Evarts, Mandelson, and other notables to the "city of the straits." The Tribune condescends to inform rural republicans that the dinner "will not be a formal event, and dress suits will be in bad taste." However, as none but "members of the Michigan club will be invited to the feast," and as the matter is in charge of millionaires Palmer and Alger, it is not probable that the plebeian contingent of the g. o. p. will be very largely represented.—Lansing Journal.

Fire Department Election.

The Charlevoix Fire Co. met last Monday evening, and elected the following officers for the ensuing year:

MAKING MONEY.

It does not need to be asserted that money making is a topic of universal interest and acceptance with all classes of people from the self-assertive rich to the humblest poor. Money is a god universally worshiped. Its altars are on every hilltop and valley; at every hamlet and fireside. Money is the epinuism or synonym of all human comfort, luxury or advantage; the possession of it stamps its holder as a man of power in the community, and has become an essential in the organization of business. It is a topic always discussed; never laid aside, ever present and of enlarged interest day by day, in the factory and field, in the church and forum. It has ever been so since the dawn of civilization and must ever remain so as long as civilization lasts.

Money is the solvent of trouble, the charm for the hungry, the solace of him that is ready to die; for the troubled soul feels that with money he could remove disquietude; the hungry knows he could buy food; the man just going into the unknown feels that his grave will be paid for, and not in the Potter's field. And as long as "earth has its price for what it gives up," and "the beggar must pay for a corner to die in," we may expect no change in this apparent law of action. In earlier days, when money, or the medium of exchange, was less plentiful than now, and the labor of man was held at a rate surprising for its smallness—when it required a huge quantity of work or merchandise to purchase a piece of gold now valued at a dollar, there was small opportunity for one to amass a large sum.

The law of supply and demand ruled then with all its severity, and as land, cattle and ordinary property were a drug in the market, while gold and silver were rare metals, the record shows a general condition of what now would be called poverty. A herdsman with a thousand cattle or sheep was not worth more than an owner of a small farm now; perhaps a market gardener with his two or three acres could buy him out as to values in the market. Nor is this condition of lowness in values so very remote; nor does the present generation lack demonstration of its applicability now; for when a surplus of a useful article is piled upon the market how rapidly prices decline.

Nor does the recent discovery of the richest mines of gold and silver ever known change this great fact. And how few of all the adventurers into the business of mining come out with even a competence. It is a fact well attested that of the men reported worth their millions made in mining nearly every one made his money by fraud in manipulating the shares of mining companies, and oftentimes the millions gained were stripped from hard-working people in humble life, not excepting the hostler and servant girl. And after all the fleecing and stealing indulged in by these sharpers, not a baker's dozen have succeeded in holding a fraction of the wealth imputed to them.

Could we investigate the history of all great fortunes we should be surprised to find how few have been accumulated without the incidental advantage of some fortunate or fortuitous accident or incident. Up to 1840 the two wonderful accumulations were those of Girard and Astor. Now Girard, though a wonderfully wise and thrifty manager, had the good luck to have uncounted thousands thrust into his hands by the insurrection of the negroes in Hayti or Guadalonpe, who slew a number of wealthy men who had deposited their money and jewels on board Girard's vessel to bring them to the United States. Now this luck was not in consequence of Girard's shrewdness, it was what we call an accident unusual, and perhaps never to be repeated.

The pith of Astor's fortune was also the result of an accident or several accidents that have never been duplicated. So we may readily see that what are called great fortunes resulted more from factitious circumstances than from an inherent ability of good management. Yet it must not be forgotten that these men held on to what they got and increased their gains by adhering closely to the rules of economy and simplicity taught them in the schools of poverty.

While very rich men are scarce, and the condition of the millions remains just about as it was fifty years ago, the people are slowly being educated to a better comprehension of the true method of accumulation. It is easily seen that the economy and frugality that governed the lives of those who have succeeded in gathering large fortunes will give every man competence in due time, while waste and unthriftiness lead surely to poverty.

The royal road to wealth has never changed, it lies through the vale of self-denial, saving small sums, invested in living permanent property and adding annually to the sum gained. Misfortunes may sweep it all away, but this chance must be taken in all ventures.—Taunton (Mass.) Gazette.

Gypsy Peculiarities.

Few more fantastic scenes can be conceived than a gypsy wedding. The place usually chosen is a sand pit. In two long rows, fronting each other, the attendants take their stand, leaving a path in the middle, half way down which a broomstick is held up about eighteen inches above the ground. The bridegroom is called, walks down the path, steps over the broomstick and waits the maiden's arrival. She, too, is called, walks down between the two rows of gypsies, lightly trips over the stick and is then received into the arms of her husband. A few days of feasting follow and then the wild wandering life is resumed. Children grow up in the tent or van, and as the wants become greater, the gypsy matron adds another to her resources for making a livelihood. The fortunes she predicts to the farmer's blooming daughter bring many a meal to her hungry family, and the elegant lady who allows her stealthily to enter the rich home rewards her with money or castoff clothes when from the lines of her hands she is foretold a future full of splendor. Old age comes slowly to the gypsy race; weakness, pain and suffering are strangers among them, and the physician's craft is despised, as are all the other institutions of the Gorjos. But when death at length enters the gypsy's tent he is borne uncoffined to his last resting place, deep in the forest or on the lonely heath, and as often as their wanderings bring the gypsies to the place where one of "our people" is laid to rest they stop and pay a short tribute to the memory of him who sleeps beneath the moss or heather.

The Genesis of Fashion-Plates.

In these plates every line is charged with meaning. The carriage of the head and arms, the way of holding fans or parasols is that of well-bred demoiselles or ladies. The lissome waists, the shapely necks and compact hairdressing, belong to the well-born class who follow the fashions abroad, and it is as much a pleasure to study the groups and expressions as any pictorial story by Willems or Madrayo. Turn the page in the same number, and Berlin is apparent in the stiffer, more careless figures and outre inventions of dress which seek novelty rather than grace. The drawing is poorer, the faces those of German shop-girls, or low-class women who only dress for occasions, who lay the hand in view on the bodice or hold it up with first and little fingers out to improve the shape, who wear preposterous petticoats gathered all round the belt, or Marguerite costumes with girdles that spoil the waist, or broad bands of trimming which cut up the whole figure, or corsages of the pretty milliner style. English-drawn figures are from seven to thirteen feet high in proportion, drawn by pupils of the schools of design, who make half a guinea by copying costumes mounted on wire stands, adding laces and accessories of their own fancy. The faces are foolish, with big, dark eyes, like opera girls, and vicious temper under lines of dove-like meekness, suggesting the younger sister or impatient shop-girls who tried on the cloak and dress for models. The drawing grows worse and worse, till it is a mere shadeless outline, less offensive than the meanly-sketched figures which tell of ill-placed economy in the fashion-sheets, which are, as a rule, conducted on the principle of paying little for illustrations and nothing for contributions—and show it, too. In this country the fashion journal, which appears on tinted and hot-pressed paper, with contents of every feminine interest from Abraham's wife down, presents its readers with costume figures of impossibly bad drawing, heads set at right angles with the neck, wooden shoulders, patent grin, and amputated hands with three fingers apiece. How can they be better, drawn as they are by a 14-year old boy from one of the central drawing classes, who is glad to earn 50 cents to $1.25 an hour at such work. The wretched work passed off in the most pretentious papers is enough to afflict the nerves of the eye permanently, while the poorest ought to be prohibited by law.

Japanese Ragpickers.

Late in the evening, when the shutters of shops and offices are close drawn, when the lanterns at the fire stations are lighted, when song and merriment commence at the tea-houses, and when weary! heart-sick sons of toil, millionaires, grandees and coolies have thrown aside the robes of office and the implements of trade in exchange for peace and ease, the "chiffonnier" wanders forth. We choose the French word, not only because the native word is of dreadful length, but because the French expresses the trade of the man exactly. He is armed with a long two-pronged bamboo, and carries over his left arm a basket, into which he forces all sorts of old rubbish and unconsidered trifles. Externally he appears to be a consolidated mass of what he picks up, for nothing is visible of his face but a pair of quick, glancing eyes, and there is scarcely a square inch of whole garment upon him. He rarely raises his eyes from the ground, and moves at a slouching crawl, stopping now and then to sort some especially tempting heap of filth, and prongiug the odds and ends into his basket. No one notices him, for he creeps along under the shadow of the houses, making no sound with his straw-bound feet, and living in his own little world of dirt and evil smells. Yet dirty and miserable as he appears—a very Pariah among men—his calling is by no means an unimportant one. That collection of many colored bits of filthy paper in his basket will be ground to pulp, prepared, and turned out as rough, serviceable material in less than a week's time. The leaves of the last new romance, turned over by the dainty fingers of the Japanese belle in her boudoir, the yellow proclamation of the Imperial Government, the white, semi-transparent windows of the great castles, the gorgeous lanterns of the big tea houses, are all made from the scraps picked up by the chiffonier, while for fish-bones, pieces of broken metal, and cinders, there are endless uses. Moreover, it is a lucrative calling, for pickers-up of old scraps and fragments have risen to wealth and position; and one of the most famous restaurants in the gay quarters of the great city is owned by one who, for forty years, slouched about back slums with his basket and prong of bamboo.—All the

The Songs of Russia.

The Russian comic songs, says Archibald Forbes, are full of "snap" and verve, and they always have a rattling chorus, in which everyone within hearing joins, while the singer accompanies the strains of his chorus with a ludicrously fantastic breakdown, in which he seems to dislocate every joint in his body. The plaintive melodies vibrate a strange pathos, that swells the heart of the listener, even although he may understand nothing of the words. And the grand chant, with which the massive columns moved forward into battle, glows with the old fervor of fighting ardor. There is a legend of a battle-song so heart-stirring that it inspired Mennonites to violate their tenets, and fight like men possessed.—Boston Record.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Whereas default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage dated the 12th day of November, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one, executed by Mary A. Thomas to John Frenz, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds, of the county of Charlevoix, in the state of Michigan, in liber 6 of mortgages at page 494, on the 29th day of November, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one, at two o'clock in the afternoon of said day. And whereas, the said mortgage has been duly assigned by the said John Frenz, to Daniel Head, by instrument of assignment bearing date the 10th day of May, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-two, and recorded in the office of the register of deeds of said county of Charlevoix, on the 14th day of July in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three, at two o'clock in the afternoon of said day, in liber 9 of mortgages, at page 101, and the same is now owned by the said Daniel Head. And whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice, is the sum of Thirteen Hundred and seventy two dollars and seven y cents ($1,372.70), principal and interest, and a further sum of thirty dollars ($30), provided by law as an attorney fee in the foreclosure of said mortgage which is the whole amount claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding at law or in chancery having been instituted to recover the debt now remaining secured by the said mortgage, or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described at public auction to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in the township of South Arm, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, which is the place of holding the circuit court for said county, on Wednesday, the 19th day of May, 1886, at twelve o'clock meridian, which premises are described in the said mortgage as follows, to wit: Lot three (3), and the south one-half (½) of the south-west one-quarter (¼) of section seventeen (17), in township thirty-three (33) north, range seven (7) west. In the county of Charlevoix and state of Michigan, and containing in all one hundred and forty-five and twenty-five one-hundredths acres of land, according to the United States survey thereof, excepting, however, the north one-half (½) of the southwest one-quarter (¼) of the southwest one-quarter (¼) of said section seventeen (17), and also excepting lots number two (2), three (3), four (4), five (5), six (6), seven (7), eight (8), and fifteen (15), in Scheff's addition to the village of Ironton, according to the recorded plat thereof, which have been released from said mortgage by the assignee thereof.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage, made and executed by J. Milo Eaton and Ellen J. Eaton, his wife, of Charlevoix, Michigan, to Mary J. McGlashan, dated February fourth, A. D. 1882, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for the county of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan, on the fourth day of February, A. D. 1882, in liber "4" of Mortgages, on page 477, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of Two Thousand Four Hundred and Fifty-eight and 33-100 Dollars, ($2,458.33), principal and interest and no suit or proceedings at law having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage or any part thereof: Now, therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and the statute in such case made and provided. Notice is hereby given that on Thursday the twenty-second day of April, A. D. 1886, at one o'clock in the afternoon, I shall sell at public auction to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in South Arm township, located in the village of South Lake, commonly called East Jordan, in said county of Charlevoix, (that being the place and building in which the Circuit Court for Charlevoix County is holden), the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with interest at ten per cent, and all legal costs, including such attorney fee provided for in said mortgage as is allowed by the statute in such case made and provided, to wit: All those certain pieces or parcels of land situate in the township of Charlevoix, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, and described as follows, to wit: Commencing at the quarter post between sections twenty six (26) and thirty-five (35), in township thirty-four (34), north of range eight (8) west; thence due south twelve (12) and 25-100 chains; thence east to the shore of Pine Lake; thence north along the shore of Pine Lake, to the section line between sections twenty-six (26) and thirty-five (35); thence west along said section line to the place of beginning, containing eight and 5-8 (8⅝) acres, more or less. Also the north half of the north east quarter of the north west quarter, all of which is contained in section thirty-five (35) in township thirty-four (34) north of range eight (8) west, containing twenty-eight and ⅝ acres, more or less, together with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the condition of a certain mortgage, made by Mary Blackbird to John A. Bacot, dated October 3d, A. D. 1884, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, on the 3d day of October, A. D. 1884, in liber 8 of mortgages, on page 522, which said mortgage was on the 22d day of December, 1884, assigned by said John A. Bacot to Frederick W. Mayne, said assignment being on record in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 10 of mortgages on page 610, and on the 14th day of December 1885, was assigned by said Frederick W. Mayne to Hugh Miller, said assignment being recorded in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 13 of mortgages, on page 146, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of One hundred and ninety six and 15-100 dollars, as principal and interest, and no suit or proceedings at law having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof. Now, therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and the statute in such case made and provided, notice is hereby given that on Saturday, the 13th day of March, A. D. 1886, at one o'clock in the afternoon, I shall sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the town hall in the village of East Jordan, (that being the place where the Circuit Court for Charlevoix County is holden,) the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with ten per cent interest, and all legal costs, together with an attorney's fee of fifteen dollars, covenanted for therein, the premises being described in said mortgage as all that parcel of land, situate in the township of Hayes, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, and known and described as follows: The south west quarter (¼) of the south west quarter (¼) of section thirty-six (36) township thirty four (34) north of range seven (7) west, containing forty acres according to the United States survey.

Dated Charlevoix, Mich., Dec. 15, 1885.

HUGH MILLER,
Assignee of Mortgagee.

FREDERICK W. MAYNE,
Attorney for Assignee of Mortgagee.

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage, made and dated the 22nd day of September, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four, executed by Henning Frizzell to the Pine Lake Iron Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, and doing business in the County of Charlevoix, in the State of Michigan, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of the said County of Charlevoix, in Liber 11 of mortgages at page 11, on the 18th day of April, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-five, at one o'clock in the afternoon, and the same is now owned by the said Pine Lake Iron Company. And whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of Fifty-Five Dollars and Twenty-two cents, principal and interest, which sum is a part of the purchase price of the premises herein described, and a further sum of fifteen dollars provided by law as an attorney's fee in the foreclosure of said mortgage, which is the whole amount claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage, and no suit or proceedings at law or in chancery having been instituted to recover the debt now remaining secured by the said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in the said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises herein described at public auction to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in the township of South Arm, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, which is the place of holding the circuit court for said county, on Friday, the 2d day of April next, at twelve o'clock meridian, which premises are described in the said mortgage as follows, to wit: Lots twenty (20) and twenty-one (21) in block number twelve (12) in the Pine Lake Iron Co.'s plat of Ironton, town of Eveline, county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan.

Dated December 30th, A. D. 1885.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the money secured by a certain mortgage, dated the thirtieth day of October, 1883, executed by Benjamin Walker and Maria Walker, his wife, of Charlevoix county, Michigan, to Josiah E. Harding, of Allegan county, Michigan, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of Charlevoix county, in liber 9 of mortgages, on page 163, on the 31st day of October, A. D. 1883, and whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of three hundred and forty-six dollars, and no suit or proceeding having been instituted at law, or in equity, to recover the debt now remaining secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof, and whereas, in and by the conditions of said mortgage it is provided that should any default be made in the payment of the interest due thereon, or any part thereof, on any day whereon the same is made payable, and should the same remain unpaid and in arrears for the space of thirty days, the principal sum together with all arrearages of interest thereon shall at the option of the said obligee or his assigns become due and payable immediately thereafter, and whereas, default has been made in the payment of the interest due on the principal sum on the day when the same became due, and whereas said interest has remained unpaid and in arrears for the space of over thirty days; the said Josiah E. Harding, has elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole amount of said mortgage, principal and interest, due and payable, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative. Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in village of East Jordan, in the county of Charlevoix, Michigan, (that being the place where the Circuit Court is holden in said county), on the 27th day of April, 1886, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of that day, which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows: The west half of the southeast quarter of section seventeen, in township thirty-four north, of range seven west, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan.

Dated January 19, 1886.

A Trip to the Tropics.

We have the promise of a series of letters, which we shall publish under the above title. Jamaica being a somewhat unusual resort, and although a very interesting portion of the globe, not much written about, we are sure our readers will be delighted with these articles as they appear week after week. Our Ironton friend who contributes them, is a keen observer, and close discriminator in natural scenery; and the affairs of a country; and it is needless to say possesses a rare gift in being able to make his readers see things just as he sees them.

Old navigators all agree that a "trip to the tropics" is the most delightful ocean voyage that can be taken.

The West Indies, Central and South America are one side of the general line of travel and comparatively few go that way, either for health, pleasure, or novelty. But if the reader will journey with me and spend a winter in Jamaica all three can be enjoyed in an unlimited degree. We will choose the month of October for our sea voyage, as the "hurricane months," July, August, and September, are then past, and we may feel assured that soon after passing Hatteras, we shall enter upon "summer seas" that bear no resemblance to the raging ocean with its traditional waves that roll mountains high. Let us then board the steamship Acadia, genial Captain Graham, master, at Collihou street wharf, Philadelphia, and turn our bow and our faces down the Delaware.

Philadelphia's pleasure gardens, the navy yard, the powder works, Admiral Dupont's magnificent residence, and other objects of interest pass like a panorama before us. Soon we reach the beautiful little city of Wilmington, where the river widens into the bay. As we arrive off capes May and Henlopen, the pilot's boat comes alongside and sunders the last cord that binds us to America, by taking our pilot and the letters we have written during the hundred mile trip down the Delaware. And now as the evening is upon us, and we take a last look at our native land before turning into our bunks, we realize that he who can leave his country without a feeling of sadness must have a soul as dead as he who returns from "wandering on a foreign strand" without a feeling of gladness. As we enter the bay the receding waves meeting the incoming tide, chop the sea to such an extent that the feeling of sadness is intensified to a feeling of positive melancholy, and we gather small comfort as we stagger into our staterooms and plunge into our berths from the thought, "Our lot is the common lot of all who go down to the sea in ships."

The morning finds us far out of sight of land our only companion in solitude an approaching steamer, as it comes nearer we read her name, the British Princess, freighted with one thousand emigrants. They greet us as welcome harbingers of land with such cheers as only sea worn sailors, welcoming release from the bondage of the sea, can give. In the following days we are entertained by the variety of sights which make a complete sea voyage, a description of which every traveler inflicts upon his friends. Mother Carey's chickens, hover around us; flying fish rise in schools or flocks on every side, and occasionally a rash adventurer lands on the decks; porpoises and blackfish are not wanting, and even a school of eight whales are seen but a short distance away. They fluke their tails and take their soundings, in the most approved manner, as though on exhibition for our benefit. In short nothing is wanting to make a complete sea voyage in a "trip to the tropics."

Eleven hundred miles south of Philadelphia we pass Watling's Island or San Salvador, the first land seen since leaving America. It is a disputed question whether this is the island or Cat island, forty miles to the westward, on which Columbus first landed. With the aid of a glass we can see people on shore, examine closely the buildings, and withal get a very clear idea of the island. In a few hours we are off Bird Rock light house on Crooked island. Twenty two miles south of Crooked island is Fortune island; like most of the Bahamas it is low ground and so exposed to the salt sea atmosphere that vegetation is far from being luxuriant in a tropical sense. Twenty-six miles to the south east is Castle island and six miles west of that island are the Mirapovas shoals, making a narrow, and in stormy weather, difficult passage for sailing vessels. There are excellent light houses on both Crooked and Castle island, the former a revolving the latter a steady light. It is difficult to imagine a more isolated life than is led by the keepers of these light houses. With the exception of the inspecting man of war, which makes an annual and in some cases quarterly visit, hardly a word of communication is held with others than their own household from January to December. Passing among these of the Bahama islands, occasionally a sail boat starts out and as we approach is sailed alongside in a skillful manner, while the blacks, or "white trash," whichever it may be, clamber aboard with bales of sponges, and baskets of shells, sea ferns and sea fans, and trade for money, provisions or old clothes. On the morning of the sixth day at sea, we see what at first appears to be a dense blue cloud on the horizon but on approaching we can soon distinguish the mountains of Cuba. About twenty five miles west of cape Maysi, which is the eastern extremity of Cuba, is seen Anvil Hill, an extinct volcano about 2,000 feet high. The table lands on the summit have an area of five square miles. The natural deposits have filled the crater and it is now the finest coffee plantation on the island. Although Cuba the "Gem of the Antillas" is rich beyond description, the eastern extremity is rocky and barren. Cape Maysi is a promontory about 800 feet high, eight ledges or sea walls forming a gigantic stairway to the top, each step cut and proportioned as by the hand of man. Rounding Maysi and Caleta point, we see enormous gorges penetrating the island as far as the eye can reach. These fissures appearing to be from one-fourth to one-half mile wide and unfathomable are the work of earthquakes. Looking from Cuba forty-five miles to the southeast we can see the highlands of St. Nicholas point, Hayti. Our course is now directed to the southwest and Cuba sinks from sight. We have passed under the sun and for the first time it shines upon us from the northward. In the evening the north star seems to speak of home and friends, while over our bow the southern cross, that most beautiful constellation in the heavens, tells us of the "Isle of Springs" we are nearing. As we enter the harbor of Port Antonio, Jamaca, a vision of tropical luxuriance and beauty is before us. The bay forming this harbor, which is the best in Jamaica, is a half mile wide and a mile deep. At its mouth is Navy island forming a complete natural breakwater leaving only a narrow passage to the sea. Entering this passage we see the quaint little town of Port Antonio, shaded with palm, mango, and bread fruit trees. Nestling close to the water's edge are the ware houses, stores and shops that comprise the business portion of the town. While on our right is a peninsula one hundred feet high, called Tichfield heights, on which the finest residences are built. A range of high hills rise abruptly from the sea, back of this range is another and another, each succeeding range rising higher and higher until Blue Mountain peak, 8,360 feet high, casts its shadows over all.

Governor Alger issued a proclamation ordering that the flags on the state capitol be placed at half-mast for the period of 30 days, in honor of General Hancock, recently deceased. The order also included the closing of the state business offices on the day of the funeral.

NEWS CONDENSED.

Concise Record of the Week.

FORTY-NINTH CONGRESS.

A RESOLUTION directing the Secretary of the Treasury to report whether the Assistant Secretary at New York had been instructed to refuse deposits of silver dollars for certificates, was adopted by the Senate on the 29th ult. A bill was passed to remove the political disabilities of George S. Storrs, of Texas. The Attorney General sent a letter to the Senate, in answer to the resolution calling for "all the documents and papers in relation to the management and conduct of the office of United States Attorney for the Southern District of Alabama," in which, after acknowledging the receipt of the resolution in question, he says: "In response to said resolution, the President of the United States directs me to say that the papers which were in this department relating to the fitness of J. D. Bennett, recently nominated to said office, having been already sent to the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, and the papers and documents which are mentioned in said resolution, and still remaining in the custody of this department, have exclusive reference to the suspension by the President of George M. Dustin, the late incumbent of the office of District Attorney of the United States for the Southern District of Alabama, it is not considered that the public interests will be promoted by compliance with said resolution, and the transmission of the papers and documents therein mentioned to the Senate in executive session." The House of Representatives passed a bill to pay the Fourth of July claims, aggregating $229,000, distributed among eleven States. At the evening session fifty pension measures were put through.

A BILL providing for the division of the Sioux Reservation, Dakota, and a relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder passed the Senate on the 1st inst. Bills were introduced to appropriate $150,000 for buildings and material used or destroyed by the Federal army in Nashville, and for a public building at Beatrice, Nebraska. In the House Mr. Hanback, of Kansas, secured the adoption of a resolution which provides that "the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice be empowered to make full inquiry into any expenditure on the part of the Government relative to the rights of the Bell and Pan-Electric Telephone Companies, and for the purpose of this investigation and to the end that the people may be fully advised, the committee is granted the right to send for persons and papers, all expenses to be audited and accounted from approved vouchers, and when so approved to be paid out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. Mr. Matson, of Indiana, moved to suspend the rules and put upon its passage the bill increasing the pensions of soldiers' widows from $8 to $12, with an amendment providing that this act shall apply only to widows who were married to the deceased soldiers prior to its passage and to those who may hereafter marry prior to or during the service of the soldier. Mr. Brown, of Indiana, inquired whether the effect of the passage of the bill under a suspension of the rules would be to put to one side the amendment which was pending to the bill repealing the limitation on the arrears-of-pension act, and upon receiving an affirmative reply moved that the House adjourn. The motion was lost—yeas, 98; nays, 171. After a short debate between Messrs. Browne and Matson, the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill was agreed to—yeas, 198; nays, 93.

MR. RIDDLEBERGER, of Virginia, offered a resolution in the Senate, on the 2d inst., that the President is not restricted by law in removing officials, and that the Senate has no right to require a statement of his reasons for suspensions. Mr. Pugh submitted a substitute, declaring the President responsible to the people for removals or suspensions from office. The matter went over. The electoral-count bill, with all the amendments proposed, was recommitted. Mr. Chace introduced a bill to prevent Congressmen from recommending appointments to office, and Mr. Harris a measure appropriating $75,000 to establish a bureau of public health. The Secretary of the Treasury answered a resolution of inquiry by stating that no assistant treasurer has been instructed to refuse to issue certificates on deposits of silver dollars. The House of Representatives devoted the day to eulogies of Vice President Hendricks by leading members. Mr. Bynum, of Indiana, was the first speaker to bear testimony to the true worth of the dead statesman. He traced the life of Mr. Hendricks through childhood, youth, and manhood, showing that in every stage he had manifested that ability and talent which had made his name familiar to every household in the land. Mr. Hewitt said that the nomination of Mr. Hendricks in 1884 secured the success of the Democratic ticket. It prevented an issue addressed to the conscience of the people, and in New York especially was so acceptable to a portion of the party otherwise dissatisfied that personal grievances were to a large extent swallowed up and postponed to the large duty of justice to the man in whose person the will of the people had once been defeated. But for the existence of this feeling the accession of independent voters would not have materially changed the strong current of feeling among a portion of the Democratic voters for the candidates of the other party. Mr. Hendricks, he said, was a partisan, but this partisanship was never exerted at the expense of his patriotism. There was no reason for apology or explanation so far as Mr. Hendricks' views on the matter of appointment to public office were concerned. These views were given in his letter of acceptance of the nomination for Vice President in 1876, and coincided with the views of Washington and Jefferson. Mr. Randall expressed admiration for the dead statesman, whose life had been the embodiment of that old Latin saying, "mild in manner and resolute in conviction." His ways were gentle and kind, but in a matter of right or wrong he was fixed and immovable. As he was greater than others, he was also stronger than any political organization to which he was attached. He believed that our liberties were sacred only when all tendencies toward centralization were to be resisted and destroyed. He died as he lived, calmly and serenely. Like a shadow thrown softly and sweetly from a passing cloud, death fell; for him.

THE Chair placed before the Senate, on the 3d inst., the resolutions submitted by Mr. Riddleberger and the substitute for it submitted by Mr. Pugh, relating to the relations between the President and the Senate in regard to information and papers affecting Government officers suspended or appointed. Mr. Edmunds said that practically but four months of the session were left for business. The resolution, offered, embodied no practical question—only two questions—and it would be time enough to debate the question when it should become a practical question. He moved to lay the resolutions on the table. The motion to lay on the table was decided in the affirmative, only one voice being heard in the negative. At a subsequent stage of the Senate proceedings, Mr. Riddleberger again called up his resolution and criticised the course of Senator Edmunds, whose vote "is too supple to be heard except by himself, who never makes a speech and then moves and votes but his motion," "I don't point blank charge by a radio asterisk," continued Mr. Riddleberger, "but I don't like being led by a wheelbarrow." Great merriment. The motion of Mr. Morrill to recommit was then, without debate, referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The Dakota bill was placed before the Senate, and Mr. Logan took the floor in favor of the admission of that Territory as a State. Mr. Morgan opposed the admission of Dakota under the present conditions. He thought the Senate was asked to admit no new State merely for the purpose of admitting the officeholders that had been sent here. The patriotism that had been so much referred to led in it a strong flavor of self-interest. The House of Representatives adopted a resolution offered by Mr. Bland, requesting information from the Secretary of the Treasury whether an arrangement was made with the New York Clearing-House to prevent the circulation of silver, and asking for a statement of silver dollars and certificates on hand and afloat.

EASTERN.

A seven-story malt-house at Albany, N. Y., valued at $125,000, was destroyed by fire.

A billiard tournament in New York for $5,000, lasting six nights, between Schaefer and Vignaux, was won by the former, who scored 3,000 points to the Frenchman's 2,818.

Mayor Smith, of Philadelphia, has issued an order for the enforcement of the statute of 1794 prohibiting the performance of any worldly employment on Sunday.

From the estate of the late Francis E. Parker, of Boston, about $75,000 each will go to Harvard College and Phillips (Exeter) Academy.

Owing to the strike, it is reported that the coke supply will not last over ten days, and as a result employes of mills and furnaces throughout the country will be rendered idle.

A number of imported laborers who were brought to Standard, Pa., refused to go to work, having been dissuaded from entering the mines by the striking Hungarians.

WESTERN.

The census of Nebraska for 1885 shows a population of slightly less than ten persons to the square mile. The State contains nearly 48,000,000 acres, of which less than 11,000,000 are under cultivation.

An assignment has been made by the banking firm of Ritzinger Brothers, at Indianapolis. The partners state that malicious gossip caused the failure. G. P. Malott, a depositor, drew a revolver on A. W. Ritzinger, and threatened his life. One of the attorneys engaged reports the assets as high as $207,000, much of which is in real estate. The liabilities are said to be about $150,000. For some hours there was a run on the banking-house of S. A. Fletcher & Co., but all drafts were promptly met.

A courier brought information to Fort Bayard, New Mexico, that the Apache chief Geronimo had unconditionally surrendered to Lieutenant Mans.

In the woods near Detroit, close to the house where the Knoch family was murdered, a Pole discovered in a hollow tree a full suit of male clothing, saturated with blood.

The Supreme Court of the State of Michigan has decided that the three Detroit Aldermen recently indicted for bribe-taking and bribe-soliciting must stand trial on the charges preferred.

SOUTHERN.

The blunder of a sleepy brakeman caused a collision on the Chesapeake and Ohio Road at Staunton, Va., one man being killed and three others possibly fatally injured.

Bolling Parker, a respectable farmer of Nansemond County, Va., made a deadly assault with an ax upon his wife and sister. The latter was instantly killed, and his wife fatally wounded. Parker says he had no quarrel with his wife or sister, but could not resist the power that prompted him to the deed. He is believed to have been insane.

A New Orleans special reports that "on the Jamison plantation, near Thibodeaux, La., while the wedding ceremony was being performed which united in marriage James Baptiste and Marie Dujoe, the lights were suddenly extinguished and the room left completely dark. In the midst of the darkness screams were heard, and when lights were brought it was found that the bridegroom had been stabbed seven times in the back with a large knife and fatally wounded, dying a few minutes afterward. An investigation showed that the murder had been committed by Keziah Collins, a former mistress of Baptiste, who, in cooperation with others, had extinguished the lights when she had assaulted him. The woman escaped on a steamboat."

Unusually heavy snow storms are reported from the Southern States, a depth in excess of two feet being noted at some points. Snow fell in the vicinity of the City of Mexico for the first time in thirty years. Snow fell to the depth of several inches at Washington, and at various points in Tennessee, Kentucky, Arkansas, Texas, and Virginia it was from ten to twenty-two inches in depth.

The recent cold weather has killed large numbers of fish in the Gulf of Mexico.

POLITICAL.

At a caucus of Democratic Senators in Washington, after a full discussion of the matter of refusing to furnish the reasons for removals from office, it was resolved to give the President cordial support. A Washington correspondent reports the President as saying:

"I have tried to be true to my own pledges and the pledges of my party. We both promised to divorce the offices of the country from being used for party services. I have held to my promise, and I mean to hold to it.

"I did not propose to hold party service in the past in the Democratic ranks as against a man. On the contrary, it gave him a strong, equitable claim to office. He had been excluded for twenty-four years because he was a Democrat. He should be removed for the same reason when a Democratic administration came into power, provided he was a competent man for the position to be filled. What I understand by civil-service, as I am carrying it out, is that officeholders shall be divorced from politics while they fill their positions under this government. That rule I have meant to stand by. My removals from office, such as are made, are made for cause. It would be absurd for me to undertake to give the country my reasons in all cases, because it would be impracticable. When I have removed a Republican for political reasons, or for any other reasons, I would apply the same rule to my own party. I talk Republicans to Senators should be just enough to believe this of me. The only thing I am trying to do is my duty. Why they should misconstrue that no one can see. They do not come to me, or I to them personally or by committee, to get an understanding of my attitude or to obtain explanations on points of action to which they object. They stand off and question the sincerity of my purpose."

The election of a successor to Congressman Rankin will take place in the Fifth Wisconsin District, Feb. 23.

Thomas R. Hudd, of Green Bay, Wis., and Col. Fred Horn, of Cedarburg are candidates for the seat in Congress made vacant by the death of Joseph Rankin.

W. M. Campbell, of Litchfield, Minn., has been appointed Marshal for Minnesota.

The Governor of Ohio has sustained the charges made against the Police Commissioners of Cincinnati, but they absolutely refuse to vacate their offices.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A case to test the validity of the Blake transmitter patent, held by the Bell Telephone Company, has been filed with the Canadian Minister of Agriculture.

General David Hunter, U. S. A. (retired), died suddenly in Washington last week. He was a veteran of the Mexican war, served with distinction in the war of the rebellion, and was President of the military court that tried Mrs. Surratt. The venerable John D. Philbrick, LL. D., the most widely known educator in Massachusetts, died at Danvers, in his 68th year. He was a member of the educational jury at the Vienna Exposition. A dispatch from Rochester announces the death of Thomas Leighton, well known as a bridge builder, aged 68 years. The Hon. David T. Linegar, of Cairo, Ill., died at his home in that city after an illness of some months. He was a prominent member of the last Illinois Legislature.

A rabid dog ran through the streets of Parsons, Kansas, during a terrible storm, and bit five persons before it could be killed. George P. Fatgel and Joseph Clark, the latter a boy of 12 years, were bitten by a St. Bernard dog at Jersey City. They will be sent to Paris to be treated by M. Pasteur. At Cohoes (N. Y.) dispatch says: "George Waterhouse, a boy 14 years of age, some six years ago was bitten by a dog in Lansingburg, N. Y. For the past week the boy has shown signs of hydrophobia. His condition became alarming, and a physician was called, and administered all the mediemes ittually used in such cases, but it was deemed advisable to smother him."

FOREIGN.

The new British Cabinet was officially announced on the 3d inst. It is made up as follows: Mr. Gladstone, Prime Minister and First Lord of the Treasury; Sir Farrer Herschell, Lord High Chancellor; Earl Spencer, Lord President of the Council; Mr. H. C. E. Childers, Home Secretary; Earl Rosebery, Secretary for Foreign Affairs; Earl Granville, Secretary for the Colonies; Earl Kimberley, Secretary for India; Mr. H. Campbell-Bannerman, Secretary for War; Sir William Vernon Harcourt, Chancellor of the Exchequer; the Marquis of Ripon, First Lord of the Admiralty; Mr. J. Chamberlain, President of the Local Government Board; Mr. C. O. Trevelyan, Secretary for Scotland; Mr. A. J. Mundella, President of the Board of Trade; Mr. John Morley, Chief Secretary for Ireland. The dispatches say the composition of the Cabinet is thought to indicate a compromise, and has caused much astonishment. Under the new administration Mr. Charles Russell has been appointed Attorney General, Mr. Arnold Morley Patronage Secretary, and Earl Sydney Lord Steward of the Queen's Household.

Lord Dufferin has gone to Burmah to make arrangements for the extension of the Indian administration to that country.

A huge block of buildings in Manchester, England, valued at $500,000, was destroyed by fire.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

The conference committee of the Ohio Senate reached an agreement on the 4th inst., and submitted its findings to the Senate, which agreed thereto. The principal points are that two Republican members shall be added to the Committee on Privileges and Elections; that a sub-committee of three of each party shall make the investigations; and that on points on which the latter may disagree the Hon. A. G. Thurman and the Hon. R. A. Harrison shall decide, such decision to be final, both before the committee and in the Senate; that the will of three members shall rule on the calling of witnesses and taking of testimony, but that the Senate proper shall take no action in any contested case until the conference committee shall have agreed upon rules to govern the trial.

An Iowa jury has decided that a colored man has rights which the keeper of a restaurant is bound to respect. At Keokuk, last week, a Superior Court jury, in the case of the Rev. T. L. Smith vs. Lemuel Daugherty, brought in a verdict of $1 in favor of the plaintiff. The suit was for $1,000 damages. The Rev. Smith ministers to the spiritual wants of the Pilgrim's Rest Baptist flock of Keokuk, and is prominently identified with every movement of the colored people in that section of Iowa. He is also manager of the Western Herald, the organ of the colored Baptists of Iowa, Illinois, and Missouri. The suit resulted from a refusal to furnish refreshments at Daugherty's restaurant. On the night of Oct. 27, 1885, the Rev. Smith attended a colored Masonic lodge meeting. Officers of high rank in the order were present. They labored in the Masonic cause until late, when the Rev. Smith hospitably invited the visiting guests to Daughtery's restaurant to partake of refreshments. He was astounded and mortified at the reception given by Mr. Daugherty to himself and guests. They labored with the restaurant man, but failed to make any impression on his Celtic obstinacy. He persistently, but respectfully, refused to sell to colored men. Hence the suit for damages.

Justice George A. Meech, of the Chicago Police Court, has begun suit against the Rev. Dr. Abbott E. Kittredge, pastor of the Third Presbyterian Church of that city, for slander, fixing the damages at $25,000. The action is based upon certain remarks made by Dr. Kittredge in a sermon, in which he criticised Justice Meech's conduct in imposing only a nominal fine upon 225 men arrested in a gambling-room.

A LETTER from the Secretary of the Treasury, stating that since 1827 the conscience fund has developed to $220,717, was read in the Senate on the 1st inst. A memorial from the Legislature of New Jersey protesting against the granting to the Baltimore and Ohio Road the right to build a bridge from the Jersey shore to Staten Island. Mr. Plumb introduced a bill to appropriate $150,000 more for a public building at Fort Scott, and Mr. Dolph a measure to extend the limits of Portland, Ore., to include the east bank of the Willamette. Mr. Cameron called up the bill providing for an assistant Secretary of the Navy in the Senate, and a debate of the merits of the bill was entered upon which soon took the character of a political discussion and ended in a fight over the action taken by Secretary Whitney in the Dolphin matter. Mr. Cockrell defended the actions of Secretary Whitney. In the House the day was devoted to the discussion of the Dakota bill. Mr. Harrison declared that the real animus of the objections to the bill was that another Presidential election should pass before the people of Dakota were to be permitted to participate in such elections. Mr. Morgan said that Mr. Harrison, who was evidently a candidate for the Presidency, might not have a chance at the votes of Dakota, for he (Mr. Morgan) did not think that he would rip on in four years. Mr. Harrison replied that if he ever should be a candidate, although he would not be sure but that he might justly claim the electoral vote of Alabama, he never would expect to have it counted for him. Upon the reading of Mr. Harrison of papers in contradiction of those read by Democratic Senators to show the feeling prevalent in Dakota with regard to the question of admission, one Senator brought down the House and Senate by quoting Falstaff's exclamation: "Oh, Lord, how this world is given to lying!" When at another time, Mr. Harrison asked amid laughter whether Mr. Butler would have entitled the constitution of Dakota "The Constitution of the State of Dakota, by the grace of God and the Senator from South Carolina," Mr. Butler turned the laugh against his opponent by replying: No; I should have simply said: "By the grace of the Senator from Indiana."

THE LAW LAID DOWN.

Messrs. Riddleberger and Pugh Define the Relations of the President and Senate.

[Associated Press report.]

In the Senate.

Mr. Riddleberger of Virginia offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the Executive of the United States is not restricted by constitutional law in removing or suspending appointees; that the Senate has no right to require that reasons shall be given for such removal or suspension; that it is the right of the Senate to call for any paper relating to the conduct of removed or suspended appointees, or to the qualification and fitness of all persons whose names are presented to the Senate for confirmation or rejection, and it is the duty of the Executive to comply with all demands for the same.

In offering the resolution Mr. Riddleberger said his purpose was simply to bring the subject up in open debate. It did not involve any so-called high prerogative of the Senate when it should go into secret or executive session, but only that abstract question as to whether the Executive could be called on or required to give reasons for removals. Mr. Riddleberger asked for the immediate consideration of the resolution, but Mr. Cockrell (Mo.) objected.

Mr. Pugh, of Alabama, offered later in the day the following substitute for the resolution, and asked that it be allowed to lie over until to-morrow:

1. That the executive power is expressly vested by the Constitution in the President of the United States, so that he shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed.

2. That the power of appointment to Federal office is an executive power to be exercised by the President under the limitation in the Constitution that he shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate shall appoint.

3. That the power of removal and suspension from the powers and duties of Federal office is also an executive power vested exclusively in the President, without any such limitation in the Constitution as is imposed thereby on the power of appointment, and for its exercise he is responsible alone to the people and not to the Senate.

4. That the right of the President to make nominations to the Senate and of the Senate to advise and consent thereto are each separate and independent rights, to be exercised by the President and Senate respectively, and separately and independently within their absolute discretion; but in relation to the person or persons so nominated the Senate may request information of the President affecting the character or qualifications of those as to whose appointment he asks the advice and consent of the Senate.

5. That when the President makes nominations to the Senate of persons to be appointed by him to exercise the powers and duties of Federal officers who have been removed or suspended by him, no law, public duty, or public policy requires that he shall send or communicate to the Senate any cause, reason, or information within his own knowledge or contained in any letters, petitions, papers, or documents addressed to him or any member of his Cabinet, or in the possession of either, and relating to the subject of removals or suspensions or containing charges, causes, or reasons, and the proof thereof, for making such removals or suspensions; and no law, public duty, or public policy requires or authorizes the Senate to call for such information existing in any such form from the President or any member of his Cabinet, to enable the Senate to review or question the action of the President in exercising his executive, discretionary, and exclusive power of removing or suspending Federal officers from the powers and duties of their offices, or to put the President on trial by the Senate or to enforce accountability to the Senate for anything he may have done in the exercise of such jurisdiction.

6. That to obtain information considered by either house of Congress useful in passing necessary and proper laws either house of Congress may request the President, if not deemed by him incompatible with the public interest, to give any information within his knowledge or contained in any public document or records or file or in the lawful custody of any of the departments, and relating to the administration of any public office or the official conduct or acts affecting the official conduct or duties of any public officer; but for the Senate to make such request of the President, or to direct any member of his Cabinet to transmit to the Senate any information or any public documents or papers in open or executive session to enable the Senate in open or executive session to review the propriety or the reason of the information upon which he acted or may have acted in making removals or suspensions, would be an attempt to obtain such information by false pretenses, and for uses and purposes not authorized or justified by any law or public policy of the United States; and for the President to grant such request or require any members of his Cabinet to obey such direction from the Senate, when decreed by him to be made for such unjustifiable and unlawful uses and purposes, would be to create new and encourage an improper practice and an injurious innovation upon his exclusive and independent rights, powers, and duties as President of the United States.

The plan of the Republicans is to refer the matter to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, whence Mr. Hoar (Mass.) will report a substitute expressing the Stalwart Republicans' views of the question. This resolution will be debated in open session, and it is expected that the Stalwart Republican Senators will say their say concerning the President. They hope by acting upon the resolution in open session to force Mr. Van Wyck (Neb.) and other Republicans of whose support in executive session they do not feel certain.

Meanwhile the Judiciary Committee, to which the Senate in executive session referred the Attorney General's letter in the Dustin case, will continue the pursuit of the President through Mr. Garland. There is talk of backing down on the part of some Republican Senators, but Mr. Edmunds, who leads the opposition to the President, is as determined as ever.

GENTLEMEN BURGLARS KILLED.

A Tennessee Merchant and an Armed Crowd Pursue Three Cracksmen.

[Chattanooga telegram.]

A terrible tragedy occurred at Knoxville Junction, eighty miles from this city, in which two daring safe robbers were killed by a pursuing posse. Last Friday night three burglars broke into the store of A. M. Hamby, a merchant at Gleanaty, and attempted to crack his safe, in which there were several thousand dollars. They were detected by the merchant, who at once opened fire on them. They returned the fire and a regular fusilade ensued in which twenty-five shots were exchanged, but no one was wounded.

The burglars fled, and no trace of them was found until this morning, when Hamby learned that the robbers were encamped on the Emory River. He collected a posse and went in pursuit of the desperadoes. They were found concealed among some crossties, and were ordered to surrender. Two of the burglars threw up their hands, but the third shouted defiance at the posse and swore he would never give up. The posse shot him dead, his body being perforated with bullets. The remaining two fled, but one was shot, and in his agony leaped over a bluff 400 feet high into the Emory River and was drowned. The third burglar escaped. The two burglars killed were handsomely dressed and wore the diamonds and watches. No clew to their identity could be obtained.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

THE Italian people have left off smoking cigars, owing to their indignation at a new law affecting the price. In Rome an association called the Pipe Club has been formed, every member of which refuses to smoke cigars. In Naples companies of young men parade the streets with long pipes, so that a regular revolution in the habits of the people has been effected.

THE Paris fire brigade is composed of 1,743 men and fifty-one officers, divided into twelve companies occupying as many barracks in different parts of the city. Important features of the system are the forty-six lookout stations, and the telegraph which connects all the stations with one another, and with head quarters, and is used for no other purpose.

AMERICANS are the third highest in point of numbers of the foreigners residing in Japan, according to statistics published in a native paper. The Chinese stand at the head of the list with 2,471 residents, followed by the English with 618, the Americans numbering 187. Although the Americans are far less numerous there than the Chinese or English, they occupy more houses, in proportion, than either.

THE following prophecy concerning the destruction of the world was made by Nostradamus, the celebrated French astrologer, who died in 1566: "Quand George Dieu crucifiera, Que Marc le resuscitera, et que Saint Jean le Portera; La fin du monde arrivera"—which means that the world will come to an end when the feast of St. George falls on Good Friday, the feast of St. Mark on Easter, and Corpus Christi Day on St. John's Day. Such is the case this year.

THE new Bishop of Ely, Lord Alwynne Compton, comes of about the most cultivated aristocratic family in England, and one which has already given an eminent prelate to the episcopate in the person of that militant prelate who donned armor and jack-boots in 1688, Bishop Compton, of London. He occupied the see nearly forty years, was a famous botanist, and the first to introduce into England many foreign trees and shrubs, notably those of North America. A few of these, or their descendants, may yet be seen at Fulham Palace.

THE Iturbides, who have spent the best part of their lives in Washington, are heirs to the throne of Mexico, if there is such a throne. The Emperor Augustin Iturbide had been an officer in the Spanish army when Mexico was a dependency of Spain. Having been cashiered for cruelty to his prisoners, he revenged himself by heading the revolt which freed Mexico from the Spanish dominion. This was in 1821. But, being a man of powerful ambition as well as extraordinary powers, he managed to have himself proclaimed Emperor of Mexico.

"NED BUNTLINE," the famous author, bears a remarkable likeness to the late Capt. Mayne Reid. He is about the same height, has the same expression of countenance, and has the same earnest, bluff method of speech. What adds to the remarkable nature of the resemblance is the fact that he was an old friend of the English author. They fought together in the Mexican war and were within ten feet of each other at Churubusco, where, in the celebrated forlorn hope charge, Mayne Reid was wounded. Although "Ned Buntline" fought through that war, he has asked for no pension from the United States Government.

AN electric boy has been on exhibition in Edinburgh, and a gentleman who writes to the electrician says he made such a thorough examination of the case as to satisfy him that there was no deception. He was a colored boy. The writer says: "I had the boy stripped naked. While thus naked he walked in my presence, and also sat on a wooden seat with his feet off the ground. In every position in which I tried him I found electricity proceeded from his body when I touched it with one finger. The electricity came with the greatest freedom from the upper half of his body, and especially from his tongue."

THERE were expended during 1885, in the erection of new buildings in the city of New York, the sum of $45,000,000, besides $7,000,000 expended in alteration of existing buildings. The following table shows how these figures compare with corresponding returns from other cities:

	Estimated population.	Outlay on buildings.	No. of buildings.
New York	1,550,000	$52,000,000	3,368
Chicago	650,000	19,000,000	3,121
Boston	400,000	12,000,000	1,664
St. Paul	125,000	8,500,000	3,451
Minneapolis	140,000	9,700,000	3,370

Minneapolis expended about $69 to each inhabitant; St. Paul, $68; New York, $38; Boston, $32, and Chicago, $29. The average cost of the new buildings in New York was more than in the other cities, that in St. Paul being least. Among Chicago's buildings were nearly 350 "flats." The number of dwelling houses erected in St. Paul and Minneapolis was not only proportionally but actually greater than the number built in the other cities.

HOW WONDERFUL are the works of Nature! In the tropics, where man is disinclined to work, grow the date, the palm, and the bread tree. In the temperate zones everything comes to the hand of the man who will work, and the bracing climate makes labor a pleasure. In the high latitudes the bear is clothed in thick and fine fur, and the denizens of the frozen seas are habited to withstand the rigors of the climate, while man is of thick and stunted stature. In Nebraska, when a man is accused of murder, the people take him out and hang him to the nearest tree. But, fortunately, there are few trees in that State, and so a great many people escape.

THE French Government has coined a new dollar for circulation in Tonquin in the East. Specimens of the new coin are to be seen in London, and it appears to be exactly the same as the Mexical dollar in weight, size, and fineness. The superscription, however, is different, and this it is which inspires the criticism, by those who know the Chinese, that the latter will reject it, and will say, "No wantee China side." It will be remembered that the United States formerly coined a trade dollar for circulation in the East; but its deficiency in fineness (371¼ grains instead of 377¼ grains) soon became apparent to the astute natives, and they reverted to the Mexican dollar, large quantities of which are still sent to China. It remains to be seen whether the dollar provided by the French Government will be more successful.

THE circulation of the London Times is now confined to clubs, hotels, restaurants, persons who hire it to read, a very limited class of business-men, and families of exceptional affluence; but thousands coming under the latter head do not take it. It is, no doubt, glanced over—for few persons actually read through its yards of print—by the Peers and members of the House of Commons. The effect of the new enfranchisement will be to diminish its influence still further, as the new voters know nothing of it. While, however, its circulation declines, or at best stagnates, it probably is as an advertising medium more valuable than ever. The London morning paper having the widest circulation among the well-educated class is the Conservative Standard.

IT looks as if Mr. John Jay Knox, of New York, wants to pose as the champion ass of the year. He is President of that band of cranks, the Anti-Vivisection Society, and he is wild with the thought that the medical men of this country are about to institute some researches into the Pasteur theory. He calls the members of the Pasteur school "human brutes" in a letter written to the New York papers, and says it is reported that Dr. Billings, who went over with the bitten children to Paris, is going to kill five thousand rabbits by slow fever. Knox says: "If he kills even one rabbit he will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law by this society." Knox is the special champion of the rabbits and Bergh of the dogs. But, all the same, dogs go mad and people are bitten and die the most horrible of deaths in consequence. It is doubtful if death comes to man in any shape more terrible than through that of hydrophobia. Anything that human ingenuity can do to lessen or prevent this fearful malady should be welcomed by every sane person. The death of every rabbit in the country would be a cheap price to pay for human life. The same papers that contain Knox's letter tell of three children in Mutawan, N. J., aged 15, 12 and 10, who were bitten the day before by a mad dog. They were bitten by a dog that had been bitten by that dog which caused the children to be sent to Pasteur.

LABOR'S ADVOCATES.

Hon. John J. O'Neill, Chairman of the House Committee on Labor.

Hon. J. J. O'Neill, of Missouri, has been made Chairman of the House Committee on Labor. The importance of this committee is not to be underrated, and the appointment of Mr. O'Neill as Chairman thereof cannot be but flattering to himself and friends. John J. O'Neill, of St. Louis, was born June 25, 1846, of Irish parents. He received a common-school education, and during the war was in the employ of the Government. After the close of the war he engaged in manufacturing pursuits, and in 1872 was elected to the State Legislature, being re-elected in 1874 and 1876. In 1878 he was nominated for Congress on the Workingmen's ticket, but withdrew from the contest. He was elected to the Municipal Assembly of St. Louis in 1879 and again in 1881. He was sent to the Forty-eighth Congress as a Democrat, and was re-elected to the Forty-ninth Congress.

Frank Lawler, Member of the Committee on Labor.

Hon. Frank Lawler, of the Second Illinois District, is one of the most active members of the committee of which Mr. O'Neill is Chairman. He was born at Rochester, N. Y., June 25, 1842; attended a public school until 13 years of age, when, owing to a serious accident which befell his father, he was compelled to leave school and seek employment in a brick yard, where he continued to labor for two years; was a news agent on railroads for three years; learned the trade of ship-builder, was elected President of the Ship-carpenters and Ship-caulkers' Association, and took an active part in organizing trade and labor unions; was appointed upon the request of the trade and labor organizations to a position in the Chicago Postoffice, which he held from 1869 to 1877; was elected a member of the Chicago City Council in 1876, was re-elected in 1878, 1880, 1882, and 1884; and was elected to the Forty-ninth Congress as a Democrat. The Denver Tribune says of Mr. Lawler:

"It is the fashion of several Chicago papers, mostly Democratic, to sneer and poke fun at Frank Lawler, the Democratic Congressman who beat Mr. Finerty. Frank Lawler is by no means a bad fellow. He was a newspaper boy, learned and worked at the trade of a ship carpenter, was a letter-carrier in Chicago, and finally drifted into the Aldermanic Board. He is an American, born in New York State, of Irish parentage, a natural orator, and a pretty 'square' man. He is particularly clever to newspaper correspondents, tells them what he knows, and neither lies about nor exaggerates the facts. In those regards many of his colleagues might emulate him to their advantage. Mr. Lawler is not a course, uneducated man. He writes a dashing good hand, and one can read his signature and his chirography. He makes no mistakes in spelling, either.

"Mr. Lawler does not get drunk, play poker, or 'buck the tigor,' and, although plainly dressed, wears clean shirts and collars, minus the diamond headlight studs, like the average city Alderman. The only ornament he carries consists of a gold watch, and he has a fancy for square-toed boots, always neatly polished. Like all natural orators, he talks a little too freely, but there is a world of good sense, and, indeed, modesty in what he says. He is good-hearted and generous, and, sizing him up one side and down the other, barring the slightest suspicion of the 'bregne,' he is vastly the superior of many men who, either through accident or design, get into Congress and go gilping to the devil thereafter, forever and forever, with no amen!"

Connecticut Trades Unions Put Some Questions to Their Congressmen.

[New Haven special.]

The Amalgamated Trades and Labor Unions of this State recently forwarded to the Senators and Representatives from Connecticut at Washington the following measures, requesting their influence in support of the same:

First—That the public lands be reserved for actual settlers, not for railroads and speculators.

Second—The abolition of the Government contract system and non-competition of convict with free American labor.

Third—Graduated tax on lands and incomes.

Fourth—The establishment of postal savings banks and safe deposits for small amounts.

Fifth—That importation of foreign labor under contract be prohibited.

Sixth—Incorporation of trades-unions.

Seventh—Direct Government issuance of money without the intervention of banks.

Eighth—That the Government shall control all telegraphs, telephones, and railroads, and that hereafter no charter shall be granted to any corporation for the construction or operation of any means of transporting intelligence, passengers, or freight.

A request for an expression of opinion on the above was made.

BOUTELLE SQUELCHED.

[Associated Press report.]

Mr. Herbert (Ala.), from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back the Boutelle resolution in the House of Representatives calling on the Secretary of the Navy for information relative to the alleged erasures of certain inscriptions and the dismissal of Union soldiers at the Norfolk Navy Yard, with an amendment extending the inquiry to dismissals made at the navy-yard and light-house district at Norfolk during the terms of the immediate predecessors of the present Secretary of the Navy. Mr. Herbert said the present resolution was substantially the same as that originally offered by Mr. Boutelle, except that it was somewhat broader. He demanded the previous question. Then commenced a political debate, which was opened by Mr. Boutelle. Whether his position were that of a member of Congress, or a citizen in private life, said Mr. Boutelle, he entered his protest against this morbid sentimentality; against this false idea of magnanimity, which would for one moment tolerate the laying of the hands of desecration on the memorials of the triumph of the Union arms. In the case of the Norfolk Navy Yard and Custom House gallant, efficient, worthy, faithful, public servants, who had followed the flag of their country across a hundred battle fields, had been turned out that their places might be given to men who had fought to destroy the Government. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Wise, of Virginia, said that the Secretary of the Navy was called upon to report if any tablets had been destroyed at the Norfolk Navy Yard which commemorated the fact that the dry-dock at Portsmouth had been destroyed. He was glad of the opportunity to inform the gentleman from Maine that the dry-dock at Portsmouth had never been destroyed. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The gentleman asked the Secretary of the Navy if inscriptions had been removed from cannon captured from the Confederate army. He would inform the gentleman from Maine that no cannon with such inscriptions had ever been in the Portsmouth Navy Yard. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The gentleman from Maine wanted to know if a Union soldier had been discharged and a Confederate put in his place. He would inform the gentleman from Maine that the man who was discharged had never been in the Union army, had never been within a thousand miles of a line of battle, and had never heard the music of a minie bullet. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Boutelle—Did he not render great service to his country?

"No sir," replied Mr. Wise. "He, sir, was in receipt of a large salary in a bomb-proof position, while brave men fought the battles of their country."

Mr. Brady of Virginia rose and asked permission to propound a question.

"No, sir; no, sir!" exclaimed Mr. Wise. "I will give my attention to you in one minute. The Confederate, or the man who you (Mr. Boutelle) allege was appointed on account of his service in the Confederate army, was appointed after a competitive examination, and the man to whom you refer was removed for beastly intoxication." [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.] "One other fact I commend to your consideration. During the Arthur administration the Postmaster at Portsmouth, who was a Union soldier, twice wounded and twice promoted for gallantry, was removed at the direction of William Mahone. Ah, Mr. Speaker, it is a good thing to raise a fuss over this, isn't it? Your fellow-citizens of Maine," addressing Mr. Boutelle, "are anxious to know if a Confederate has been appointed in the Norfolk navy yard by this administration. Have you forgotten that during the Grant administration and during the administrations of Hayes and Arthur you sent the Captain of the Confederate guerrillas—John S. Mosby—to represent the Government of the United States in a foreign country?" [Applause on the Democratic side.] "Have you forgotten that Longstreet, a Confederate Lieutenant General, was selected by your Republican administration for the most important office in Georgia? Why is it, I will ask the gentleman from Maine, that we have heard a howl from that ice-bound region about these appointments?" [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

"Does the gentleman desire a reply?" inquired Mr. Boutelle.

"No, sir," exclaimed Mr. Wise. "Go read the speech of the Senator of the United States who, with all kindness, is in the estimation of the whole country a better man than you are. Go read the speech of Charles Sumner, of Massachusetts.

"If I mistake not, he was the first in the country who declared, some fifteen years ago, that the time had come for peace, and that the bitter memories of the war should be removed. And mark the contrast between the leader of the Federal army and the gentleman from Maine. The last words spoken by that great leader on his dying bed at MacGregor, were that he thanked God that he closed his eyes on the world believing that peace had returned to a distracted country." [Applause on the Democratic side.] "Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say one word more to the gentleman from Maine while we sit here and vote pensions to our soldiers."

"Our soldiers!" exclaimed Mr. Boutelle.

"Yes," replied Mr. Wise, "our soldiers. We are in the house of our fathers, and we have come to stay." [Applause on the Democratic side]. "While we are ready and willing to vote pensions to honorably discharged soldiers who served their country in time of war, we will never consent that it shall be held, and proclaimed on high, that one who happened to have been in the Confederate army is forever disbarred from the service of his country. I protest that these honorable soldiers of the Union army shall never again be subjected to the treatment that they were subjected to under the last administration, when men who fought bravely for the Union, under the circular bearing the names of William Mahone as Chairman, and James D. Brady, the present member of this House, as Secretary ——"

"There was no such circular," interrupted Mr. Brady. "I challenge him to produce the circular."

"When," continued Mr. Wise, not heeding the interruption, "they were required, under the whip of a master, to give money for partisan purposes—required, like slaves, to hold their ballots up that their boss' minions might see whether they voted right. Oh, what an attitude in which to place a discharged soldier of the Union—under the whip and the lash of a Confederate Brigadier." [Loud and continued applause on the Democratic side and in the galleries.]

—The Athletic Association of the Michigan University has secured the refusal of the roller rink for the use of a gymnasium. The boys will close the contract provided sufficient money can be raised which, added to that already on hand, will be enough to properly equip the place.

—The trial of T. B. Barry for conspiracy in leading the strike in the Saginaw Valley last summer has ended at East Saginaw, the jury bringing in a verdict of "no guilty," after being out twenty-three hours. The trial was made under the conspiracy law, Barry being charged with inciting riot.

—The Coroner's inquest over the remains of Frank Knoch, his wife, and their two children, whose charred bodies were found in the ruins of their home at Detroit, ended with a verdict that the parents came to their death by shooting with a revolver in the hands of unknown persons, and the children came to their death by unknown means.

A notable example of the utilization of smoke is afforded in the case of a charcoal furnace at Elk Rapids. In this furnace are manufactured fifty tons of charcoal per day. There are twenty-five charcoal pits constructed of brick, each pit being filled with one hundred cords of hard wood, and then fired. The vast amount of smoke thus produced is made to yield acetate of lime, alcohol, tar, and gas.

The Sum of All Folly.

If we could get all our goods by wishing for them, would it not be better than by toiling and spending money? If foreign ships brought all kinds of manufactures here and gave them away, who would object? No sane person, surely. Now, because foreign ships, come here and offer half their goods for nothing (or all of them so cheap that it amounts to the same thing), a certain few object, and put such a heavy fine or tax on their imported goods as to keep them from coming here. The same wicked selfishness that has upheld persecution, tyranny, slavery, war, despotism, now upholds the tax on trade and decries cheap imports. If slavery was "the sum of villianies," our tariff is the sum of all stupid ties.

A sample of the execrable hypocrisy of protection is seen in the silk business. "American industry is not to be allowed to compete with foreign pauper labor." No! no! A heavy tariff is put on imported silk manufactures, so that a few thousand persons in silk factories, not over ten thousand in all, and mostly children and girls, may get big wages ostensibly, but in reality to favor a half-dozen employers. They are American laborers, and theirs is an industry par excellence. They must be protected, and more joy is made over their paltry product ten thousand times than over all the results of agriculture itself, whereas in fact the hens of any half dozen counties surpass it. But the poor creatures who try to produce the raw silk here are left to compete with Chinese and Italians, in their foreign homes, who work for ten to twenty cents per day. Get into a factory and work up the raw material, and you become an industry and are to be protected; but go out and toil to create the wealth out of which the manufacture exists, and you are a nonenity, except for taxation.

There is something so unutterably foolish in the belief that wages are higher because employers make higher profit, that one knows not how to expose it. But, says a large manufacturer to me, we don't pretend to pay more wages, because we make more profit. The point is just this: if you don't protect us we can't pay at all, or can only offer so little wages that our workmen will leave us and go at farming.

And that is just the truth. Your occupation is no business at all. It is beggary, alms, and extortion. Good heavens! To believe that a vast number of people can do prosperously what no one can do without ruin. One man can not neglect his proper business to make his own shoes, wagons, harness, etc. But several millions can despise the opportunities that are all around and under foot; can waste millions' worth of raw material, the product of their own hard toil or of countless ages of nature's storing, and can violently displace, pervert the natural evolution of labor by vast numbers of their citizens—all to make a little silk and keep a dozen steel rail mills going, and a few hundred woolen factories and some thousand or two other mills, foundries, etc.

The waste and neglect of raw material in the west and south is something stupendous, all because manufacturing is invited or forced into departments that are unnatural to our present development. Manufactures should develop naturally, just as the flour mill follows upon the thresher. Natural home demand is the parent of manufactures, not a demand forced by embargo on ports and a robber tax. Hostile states blockade each other's ports to ruin or distress the foe. A robber congress has put an embargo on our ports, and punishes the smuggler as the belligerent punishes the blockade runner. Were we of the west under another flag, how long would we tolerate a tariff by the nation owning the ports that compels our products the exports to pay it?

Although we are near sixty millions of people, we are not as great a nation as we were in 1860 with thirty millions. We are not so compactly settled as we were in 1850. Since 1865 the whole continent has been opened up by railways, and we are relatively a more dispersed, thinly settled nation. In 1875 lands had fallen lower than for many years, owing to the countless millions of acres opened up by transcontinental railways, and by homestead laws. We were more crowded in 1860, and our manufactures had increased in less than ten years some eighteen thousand in number, and the investment one hundred per cent. From 1870 to 1880 we added less than eighteen hundred to the number, and only thirty-five per cent to the invested capital. From 1850 to 1860 was our free trade era. Then the agricultural implement business originated, created its own market by experiments in the fields, and grew to enormous proportions. In our then comparatively compact older settled conditions the word tramp was as unknown as the thing; the tramp was the creature, in England, of her corn laws, and filled her highways by armies in 1816–48.

I have stated solid facts. Abolish this tariff, and there will no more be heard of strikes, labor riots, communism, socialism, or tramps, until our lands are settled up, and some other bad laws are felt. H.

A bill has been introduced recently by Senator Voorhees to admit Washington Territory as a state, and Monday he introduced a bill to admit Montana as a state. When the senator was asked if he intended to make the admission of Dakota conditional on the admission of Montana, as it had been reported that the democrats were indisposed to do, he replied: "I can speak only for myself. I think the best argument that we can make is to admit Dakota, Montana and Washington together. They must all come in soon and might as well come in now. I do not see how we can prevent Dakota's coming in. She has a voting population of 80,000 and is certainly entitled to admittance. I thought at first that I should oppose the division of Dakota, but I do not see how I can. The territory has an area of five times my own state, and South Dakota would be as large as Ohio and Indiana. Montana has a voting population of 26,000, and Washington a voting population of 40,000. There are not fifteen congressional districts in the country with the population of Washington, and not a hundred with that of Montana. Dakota is republican. Montana is democratic, and I am sure will remain so. Washington is close and may be won by either party. If she comes into the union by democratic votes, under a democratic administration, our chances in the new state will be all the better. It seems to be much the best plan to take in these three territories at once. They are entitled to it, and politically it will be as fair and equitable an arrangement as can be made."

Pocket Money for the Young.

Teach your children the proper use of money. Begin with a small allowance of pocket-money, which they shall feel as their own, and let an account of its expenditure be made to you. Carefully guard against any ridicule if there have been foolish purchases, for that will soon beget distrust, then follows deceit, and very soon you will never know what has become of the money. Kindly advise, so that if your boy is tempted to spend his money in a way he knows is wrong, he will freely come to you and tell of it. Until you feel positively compelled to do it, do not withdraw your allowance. It may be that you will find no other way to stop a career of wasteful and sinful extravagance, but let all effort be made in other ways first. Teach your boys to earn a little for themselves. Many little ways will suggest themselves. It is so much more helpful to them as well as an enjoyable pride, that it's always well to encourage all such endeavor. We know a mother who prizes, above all her other possessions, a pair of gold sleeve buttons purchased with the first money her boy ever earned, and though he is now in business for himself, we fancy he never invested any money more cheerfully than that.—Mrs. Eben Bliss Hooker, in Good Housekeeping.

A Novel Bird-Trap.

A bucket filled with water was set in the yard of a Huntington street residence recently when a young 2-year-old of the house with maritime proclivities set a tin milk pail afloat in it. Next came a thirsty fantail pigeon, the pride of a neighbor's flock, which perched on the edge of the milk pail and leaned over to wet his whistle with the water in the bucket; but Isaac Newton's law asserted itself, the pail careened with the weight of the pigeon, and caught the bird's neck between its edge and the side of the bucket. The young sailor fairly shrieked with delight as he saw the fluttering tail of the bird sticking up over the edge of the [illegible] to see what it was [illegible] was [illegible] tail [illegible] decim[illegible]

A. D. Cruickshank, the popular Charlevoix attorney, was in town Saturday on his way home from the Grand Encampment of Oddfellows, at Big Rapids.—Petoskey Correspondent of the Harbor Springs Independent.

Manistique indulged in a $12,000 fire last week.

A. J. Mudge placed the first wholesale order for flour with the new mill.

We have tried the flour from the new mill, and know it to be equal to the best in the market. Last night they run out fifteen barrels after supper to meet the immediate demand.

Paraphernalia is a word that came to us from the Greek through the Latin. But the Smith & Cooper millinery firm can surpass Webster in defining it to the ladies. They have exhibited excellent taste both in the selection of their goods, and in the arrangement of the same for the inspection of their patrons.

There will be a Night Cap Social at the Barnard school house, on Saturday evening of this week, the proceeds of which are to benefit Rev. G. W. Howe, who has been laboring in that place during the past few weeks. A good supper will be provided, and admission will be only 25 cents.

The oyster supper at the Congregational church, under auspices of the Baptist church was a success. The ladies wearied themselves, we were about to say overmuch, to entertain their guests sumptuously. He who could not get his money's worth, is a commercial failure in matters of diet.

Their Norwood friends, assisted by a notable company from Charlevoix, dropped in upon Mr. and Mrs. Meech last Saturday evening, bringing with them a fine array of silverware, that being the 25th anniversary of their marriage. Regargless of the complete surprise, the company was provided for with bounteous hospitality.

John B. Alden, the publisher of good books at low prices, is just now issuing a Cyclopedia of Universal Literature. The work has cost years of labor, in planning and preparation, and is a work indispensible to any complete library. The price brings it within the reach of all. Dr. Lossing, the eminent historian and author, says of it: "I am strongly impressed with the great intrinsic value of the work as a popular educator in a high department of learning. The plan is admirable. Combining as it does a personal knowledge of an author with specimens of his or her best literary productions, gives it an inestimable power for good among the people." The work is being published in parts of 160 pages each, paper covers, at the price of 15 cents, also in very handsome cloth-bound volumns, gilt tops, 480 pages, for 60 cents. The parts can be exchanged for bound volumes, at any time. Four parts are now ready, also the first bound volume; volume two will be issued in a few days. The publisher's 132-page illustrated catalogue of standard books may be had for 4 cents, or condensed 15-page catalogue free. John B. Alden, Publisher, New York; G. W. Crouter, agent in this town.

The "Kicking" Era Past.

Speaking of our rejoicing in our new mill the Petoskey Record says: "Charlevoix folks and Charlevoix county farmers will be kicking in due time. No flour is ever popular in the town where it is made, and there are no farmers any where who don't think the miller gouges them. Milling is the queerest business under the sun, and the notions of people about flour are wonderful and past finding out."

We think our friend is mistaken. The kicking era went out of date with the old process. Any just cause for kicking must be found either in shortage of quantity or defective quality. Shortage of quantity can not occur in this new Charlevoix mill, for this is not a custom or toll mill. The wheat is weighed in, and the flour, bran, and middlings weighed out. Defective quality could arise from either of two sources, poor wheat or poor machinery. Now Messrs. Rifenburg & Co. do not propose to flour any poor wheat. They will not soil their machinery with it. If a farmer allows his wheat to grow or become musty, he must sell it to shippers of poor wheat and not to makers of good flour, and then buy his flour. Or, if he wishes it ground here, in justice to the company he must bring 20 bushels of good grain to clean the mill with after his grist is ground. In this case the quantity and quality is just what there is in the wheat he brings, since you cannot get any more out of a thing than there is in it. As to machinery, failure from this source is impossible. The best machinery made for the purpose is here, and working admirably, put in by a reliable firm, the John Hutchison Mfg. Co., of Jackson, Mich. Moreover, we are not writing out a plausable theory of the case. We can refer you to many examples in substantiation thereof. An instance we are most familiar with is that of Colby & Buskirk, of Downgiac, Mich. Not less than nine-tenths of the flour used in the city is from that mill, and the other tenth is poor quality and pretends to nothing else. The roller process has made the saying that "the dust on an honest miller's back will cure sore eyes," no longer a proverb.

A Foul Murder.

Peter Higgins, a farmer, living about seven miles east from Eastport, was missed from home by his neighbors about ten days ago. Mrs. Higgins replied to their queries concerning her husband's whereabouts, that he was gone from home on business for a short time. But Mrs. Higgins' intimacy with her husband's nephew, and a quarrel which had previously occurred, led to suspicions that all was not right. Mrs. Higgins and the nephew went to East Jordan, and the suspicious neighbors embraced the opportunity to search for the missing man. Their efforts were successful. The body of Mr. Higgins was found beneath the manure pile, covered by about two feet of earth and the manure replaced. The body was bruised and gashed, especially about the head. An old broken hoe bearing blood stains, is evidently the instrument of death used.

An inquest was held early yesterday morning, upon the strength of which the murdered man's wife and and nephew were arrested in East Jordan yesterday and taken to jail at Bellaire, to await trial at the next term of circuit court.

The Historical Society.

As we were prevented from attending the meeting last week, we can give only the bare program in this issue:

Houssaye's Anecdotes.

The elder Dumas was asked to contribute a louis, toward the funeral expenses of a poor cuissier, or bailiff. "Here are 40 francs," said Dumas; "bury two." He was, as everybody knew, most liberal. "I have never refused money to anybody except to my creditors," he would often remark. One day Houssaye was at breakfast with him at Monte Cristo, when an actor's wife, poorly attired, but too timid to ask for assistance, called upon Dumas. The latter understood the situation at once. "My poor child," said he, "the sun is very fierce just now. How can you walk without a sunshade?" And he slipped a 500-franc note into the young woman's hand, adding, "Go and buy yourself one." As she moved off he concluded merrily, "If you will come and see me on a rainy day I will give you enough to purchase an umbrella."

Count Colonna Walewski, an illegitimate son of Napoleon I., wrote a comedy, "L'Ecole des Femmes," which was acted with unsatisfactory results at the Theater Francaise. M. Thiers said to Walewski: "Why did you do that? It is so difficult to write a five-act comedy and so easy not to write a five-act comedy."

Gen. Fleury was one of the emperor's bosom friends. After the empire had fallen he gradually sank out of sight. One day Houssaye had him at dinner, and assigned him the seat of honor. "I am not used to this," remarked Fleury. "See the uncertainty of things in this world. There was a time when old Baron de Rothschild gave me the seat of honor—perhaps because my wines were no worse than his. After the war he invited me, but I was placed in the second chair, then in the third, and finally I found myself at the lower end of the table. It was quite natural. I had to come after ambassadors, ministers, and other official personages. As scripture says, 'The first shall be last.'" Fleury, too, was the man who observed concerning a miserly senator, "Oh! he denies himself nothing—in other people's houses.

Merimee was another wit. Referring to M. Viennet, of the academy, he observed: "We must not speak ill of his tragedies. At the siege of Lipsic he had one on his mind that he intended for Talma and the pain of kings. A cannon ball recontected again at his breast but the tragedy saved him. The missile had not strength enough to go beyond the third act."

How They Trap Bears in Maine.

I usually build a cubby-house in the woods out of old stumps and decayed branches. I scrape pine 'cru up around you know, and leave a little opening for the bear to go in, after he sees the consarn and his curiosity is excited. I catch some suckers or other kind of fish in the river in this cubby. Then I try to fix the trap so that the bear will have to step on the trencher if he gets the fish. A bear never steps on a log in his path, but always steps over it. I usually fix the trap on t'other side of a log or branch so that he will be pretty sure to step over the log and into the trap. A knowing old bear won't go into one of these cubbies. Sometimes after trying to catch an old sheep thief in this way and not getting him, I have caught the old fellow by hanging a string of fish in a careless way on some tree, as if left there accidently by some sportsman, and putting a trap underneath. Sometimes I find a track where a bear has a habit of fording a brook. I take away the stone in the brook which the bear steps on when he crosses, and put the trap in its place. When the bear feels after the old and familiar stone, his fore-paw is caught in the trap.

Some bears have learned to smell a trap, so we have to kill the smell. We do that by daubing it over with lard and beeswax. I have twelve traps and visit 'em twice a week. The bear is usually caught by the fore-paw. He doesn't live more than twenty-four hours after the jaw closes on him, as a general thing. In warm weather the pelt would soon spoil if I did not get it pretty quick after the critter died. The fur is in the best condition when the bears are housing, late in the Fall. Then it is as nice as a merino sheep's wool. I get $8 to $15 a piece for my pelts. The bears spend the Winter in the ledges about here and under the stumps. Since we had that hurricane that blew down so many trees, there have been a lot of cozy places for bears around here.—Mr. Knapp, Veteran Hunter, in Lewiston Journal.

BEWARE.

Coughs, colds, and slight throat diseases often develop into bronchitis, seated cough, consumption, etc., and should have immediate attention and be removed in the first stages. Not only public speakers, but all, are liable to throat troubles and to obtain relief should use HAMILTON'S COUGH TROCHES, which relieve coughs, and hoarseness, making the articulation clear. Warranted to give satisfaction. Price 25 cents per box.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

SECURE ADMIRATION.

Who can help admiring a lovely face, a clear, smoothe, beautiful complexion? These can be easily obtained by the use of HAMILTON'S ORIENTAL BALM. It will surely remove freckles, tan, pimples, and blemishes of every sort and is in no way injurious to the skin, but is the most harmless and elegant preparation of its kind. Price 50 cents per bottle.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

TOOTHACHE.

Money is a great cure for aching hearts, but a twenty dollar gold piece placed on an aching tooth don't seem to have the least effect. In fact, nothing is sure cure but HAMILTON'S TOOTHACHE DROPS, which are warranted to cure in one minute. Price 25cts.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 1-52

Farmers and Mechanics.

Save money and doctor bills. Relieve your Mothers, Wives and Sisters by a timely purchase of Dr. Bosanko's Cough and Lung Syrup, best known remedy for Coughs, Colds, Croup and Bronchial affections. Relieves Children of Croup in one night, may save you hundreds of dollars. Price 50 cts. and $1.00. Samples free Sold by G. W. Crouter. 2.

Proper Treatment for Coughs.

That the reader may fully understand what constitutes a good Cough and Lung Syrup, we will say that Tar and Wild Cherry is the basis of best remedies yet discovered. These ingredients with several others equally as efficacious, enter largely into Dr. Bosanko's Cough and Lung Syrup, thus making it one of the most reliable now on the market. Price 50 cts. and $1.00. Samples free. Sold by G. W. Crouter. 2

MY DARLING, WHERE ART THOU?

BY NATHAN D. CHNER.

"Oh, my darling, where art thou? All vainly
I search the old paths, silent now,
Where once heart to heart spoke so plainly.
My true-love, why lingerest thou?
But, ah, wait. There returns a fierce parting—
A quarrel, wild words, prayers denied—
After which all is dark. But no thwarting
Should my darling thus keep from my side."

Sad the words through the forest-ways lonely!
They are those of Wild Nell, who for years
Thus her grief-distraught heart voices only
By mingling entreaties and tears.
Hark again: "Oh, my darling!" Thus ever
She complains, and will not understand
That her love can return to her never,
Though her cries compass ocean and land.

Wild that parting which poor Nell thus dimly
Out of wrecked hopes and memories brings!
Sweet and bitter that past o'er which dimly
It hovers with dark-brooding wings!
For with her was the fault that her lover
Fled, heart-broken, over the wave,
Where no scorn his retreat might discover,
There to find among strangers a grave.

Too late, all too late, did her reason
Back to calumny track the fell lie
That had dared to accuse of base treason
The fond heart she had thrust forth to die;
The tale of whose fate, sad and mournful,
Uncomplaining, unwept and disowned,
Has remained, though no longer she's scornful,
A blank in her mind disenthroned!

Hark, again through the dim, solemn forest—
"Oh, my darling, where art thou?" she cries,
"I am she, the true love thou adorest!
Haste, haste to me, light of my eyes!
Call me home to thee, sweet, as so often
When I was thy dove and thy dear!"
Poor Nell! there is nothing can soften
A grief so profound and severe.

THE WIDOW'S SON.

BY M. C. WALSH.

"Father, I have a favor to ask of you," observed Amy Archdale, a beautiful girl of twenty, as her father came home from business one summer evening.

"Well, Amy dear, what is it you wish?" asked Everett Archdale, who was accustomed to grant every reasonable request his fair daughter made.

"Have you a vacancy in your office for Robert Alger?" she asked, timidly, looking up into his calm face, anxiously.

"Robert Alger," repeated Mr. Archdale, reflectively, "how happens it that you take so much interest in the young man?"

Amy blushed and said earnestly, "Oh, papa, if you knew what a hard struggle his poor widowed mother has to get along, you would not need to ask that question; and now Robert has returned from the West and is anxious to support, or even assist her, but cannot get a position."

"Well, my dear child, that is really too bad, but it is no affair of ours; still I am disposed to what I can to alleviate distress; so if you will have Mrs. Alger send Robert to the office to-morrow, I will see what I can do for him."

"Oh, thank you! thank you, papa." And the young lady's face became radiant with a flush of pleasure.

Amy Archdale was the only child of Everett Archdale, Esq., and heiress to his fine fortune and extensive estate at Elmwood.

Mr. Archdale was a wealthy merchant, who owned quite a number of ships engaged in foreign trade.

After dinner Amy dispatched a servant with a note to her friend, the Widow Alger, notifying her to send her son to the merchant's office on Weybosset street the following day.

Accordingly the young man presented himself, and, after a brief examination, Mr. Archdale being very well satisfied with his penmanship and general business qualifications, as well as his neat appearance and gentlemanly deportment, at once engaged him at a salary of ten dollars a week, which the young applicant was very glad to accept.

He applied himself eagerly to his duties, and at the end of six months was promoted to the full charge of the books with a largely increased salary.

At length Mr. Archdale was so well pleased with Alger that, noticing his health was being impaired by too close application to business, he determined to send Robert away on one of his ships as supercargo, hoping that a change of air and scene would prove beneficial.

Both Robert and his mother esteemed Miss Archdale highly for her kindly assistance and sweet disposition; and the former had learned to love her, though on account of the disparity in their social standing he felt obliged to suppress all tender feelings other than those of sincere friendship.

Still when at length he bade her adieu and sailed on the Etta Fairfax, it was with the fondly cherished hope that he might by a judicious investment of the funds saved from his salary be able to lay the foundation of a comfortable competence, and in the future reach that station which he felt it was essentially requisite to attain in order to aspire to her hand.

He was, however, mistaken in his interpretation of her character.

Shortly after his departure Amy invited Mrs. Alger, a bright, clever little woman, educated and refined, to take up her abode in the Archdale mansion and be her companion, to which the widow gracefully assented.

Amy had many eligible admirers, and one among their number, Gilbert Ashwood, was her favorite suitor.

This gentleman, an aristocratic young attorney, was engaged to be married to the vivacious little beauty.

Time elapsed, and the ship upon which Robert Alger had sailed was reported lost!

It was now nearly a year since that deplorable event, and the Widow Alger was still dwelling at the Grange, her associations with Amy Archdale being in a measure a compensation for the loss of her son.

She still, however, maintained her belief in his escape; refused to abandon hope, and the conviction that Robert was yet alive was her greatest consolation.

One day a sad calamity befell Everett Archdale!

His business suddenly collapsed, and he found himself a bankrupt and almost penniless!

The fine mansion went with the rest, and the Archdales were obliged to take up their abode in a humble cottage, where Amy and Mrs. Alger opened a private school.

Before their departure from the Grange, however, Gilbert Ashwood had an interview with Amy, during which he coolly stated that in view of her recent change from affluence to poverty he could not reasonably be expected to marry her. Without waiting for the conclusion of her recreant lover's speech, Amy released him from the engagement.

She had loved him with all the fond affection of her young heart, and thought him sincere on his part; but now that he had shown himself to have been actuated by the most mercenary motives in seeking her hand, she began to realize that after all it was a blessing that her father had lost his property, as she was thereby saved from a life of misery with one who did not love her.

* * * * * * *

The day appointed for the sale of the Archdale mansion at public auction at length arrived. A large crowd was assembled, bids ran high, and the property was finally, after deliberate proceedings, "knocked down" to a tall young man with dark complexion and a foreign appearance, evidently a stranger at Elmwood.

He paid the necessary deposit to the auctioneer, promising to call at the latter's office in the afternoon with the balance, and requesting him to have the deeds ready to transfer at that time; after which he returned to his hotel.

Nobody seemed to know who the young man was, and when she heard the news, Amy was as much mystified as the rest.

That night while she was reading to her father, a knock suddenly sounded on the cottage door.

She answered the summons, and beheld a tall young man, singularly dark and handsome, standing on the porch.

"Does Mr. Archdale reside here?" asked the stranger, pleasantly.

"He does, sir," replied Amy; "please come in." And she led the way to the humble little parlor, followed by the visitor after which she retired as Mr. Archdale entered the room.

"Mr. Everett Archdale?" queried the stranger.

"Yes, sir."

"Well, Mr. Archdale, I am the young man who purchased your estate to-day."

"Yes?"

"Then you do not know me?" asked the visitor, standing up and casting aside his false beard and other disguises.

"As I live, it is Robert Alger!" exclaimed Mr. Archdale, in astonishment.

"That is my name, sir," admitted Robert (for it was indeed he).

Explanations followed.

The ship upon which Robert had sailed, nearly two years since, had foundered in the Indian Ocean on her outward voyage. Himself, one of the mates, and two sailors were the sole survivors!

They had embarked in one of the quarter-boats, and after having drifted about under the brassy glare of the fierce tropical sun for three days, and spent four dreary nights tossing about on the desolate waste of waters, they were eventually picked up by a passing ship and brought to Australia, where Robert had until recently remained.

He had managed to secure his money before leaving the sinking ship, and at once engaged in business at Sidney, intending, if successful, to return home after a while and surprise his mother.

His business enterprise prospered; and at the end of the first year he had accumulated a snug little fortune.

He remained six months longer, and then determined to return home, as he felt assured he had made enough money to afford him a handsome capital with which to engage in business in his native city—Providence.

Accordingly he came home, via San Francisco.

During his wanderings in the West in early youth he had staked several claims which had been left in charge of a reliable partner.

These were located in Idaho, but as he had heard nothing from his partner for some years, he determined to visit the place on his way home.

He did so, and was surprised to find his claims in the hands of strangers and paying handsomely.

On inquiring, he learned that his partner was dead and these strangers had taken full possession three or four years since, usurping all rights!

As he still retained his papers, however, he placed the matter in the hands of a lawyer, who was instructed to institute immediate proceedings against the invaders.

Mrs. Alger was nearly overcome by the intensity of her joy when she was led into the room to meet her long lost son.

And when the good mother held her boy in her arms and wept with great joy, the scene was indeed an affecting one to those present.

Amy greeted the wanderer with the cordiality of sincere friendship.

Robert had heard the whole story of her heartless lover's treachery, and sympathized with the maiden in her double sorrow.

This was mainly the incentive that had prompted him to assume his disguise and purchase the homestead when it was sold by the Sheriff.

"Oh, Mr. Alger, how kind you were to buy our house and save it from strangers! I shall certainly feel privileged to visit your mother frequently when she takes up her abode there," said Amy, as she followed him to the gate when he was about to return to his hotel.

"So you shall, Miss Archdale," he faltered. "But—but—why can you not take up your abode there, too, as——"

He hesitated, for his heart throbbed so wildly that it seemed to check his further utterance.

Finally, however, he made a desperate effort to control his feelings and contrived to murmur:

"As my wife, dearest Amy, for God knows I love you with all my heart!"

An ecstatic feeling of joy thrilled through Amy's frame as she sweetly murmured:

"So be it, Robert; you are a noble man, and I can desire no better husband."

Needless to say that when they were married Mr. Everett Archdale returned to his former home.

Robert's lawyer out West soon after communicated with him, naming a handsome figure which he had been offered for all right and title to the mines, and the young man instructed him to sell.

So after all the Archdales were restored to their old home through the instrumentality of the WIDOW'S SON.

RAILROAD TRAVELERS.

BY R. J. BURDETTE.

Now there abideth on the railway car, and travel up and down the land herein, the citizen whose name is Legion—William H. H. Legion, of Legionville, Legion County, and this is the manner of man he is:

One of him talketh politics. From the time he getteth upon the train until he steppeth off he talketh the local politics of Deddangon County into the weary ears of the stranger from Farther India, who knoweth about American politics far less than the pig at the corn pen knoweth about the new star in Andromeda.

And another of him is the man who gets carried by. Never a train yet ran upon wheels that did not carry some man by. The brakeman, with the rich tenor voice, opens the front door and shrieks, in ear-splitting falsetto, "Wood awn! Wood lawn!" Then the brakeman, with the deep bass voice, opens the rear door and roars, "Wood lawn! Wood lawn!" The train boy goes down the aisle with his books and apples and squeals, "Woodlawnwoodawn. Finally enters the conductor, who says, in tones of impressive dignity and official authority, "Wood awn; Wood lawn." The train stops. The passenger raises a window and looks out at the village. Ten miles further on the brakeman with the tenor voice opens the door, a cinder flies down his throat and chokes his utterance, he gasps feebly and inarticulately, "Winshermeshum." The astonished passenger springs to his feet. "Winchester Junction!" he howls; "why in the name of goodness didn't you tell me when we came to Woodlawn? Now I can't get home till to-morrow morning! I'll report you for neglecting to call out stations, see if I don't!"

And there is the man who gets off the train every time it stops, rushes down the platform, gets in everybody's way, forces his way into the waiting-room while everybody else is trying to get out, peers into the ticket offices, always wants to know "Where the mischief the telegraph operator is?" Never reads a telegram; never knows what to say if the operator is at his post; always peeps into the baggage car to see if he can discover his own trunk which was put on ten hours and 250 miles ago; gets thumped with trunks and pinched by trucks, gets deeper in the way every time he tries to get out of it, never sees anybody he knows on the whole trip, and would be amazed if he did, and rides in his seat so little of the time that it doesn't pay him to claim it when he sees any one else in it, although that is the only time he wants it.

And there is the man who is familiar with all the train men; he calls the conductor "George" and the brakemen "Johnny," and addresses the waiters at the dining station by their first names. If, however, he speaks to a fellow passenger he calls him "Say, you." He stops the conductor when that official is the busiest to ask him about brakemen on freight trains of whom the conductor never heard; nor any other man, possibly. He calls the length of the car to the newsboy, to know when we pass "ninety-seven," and if "Bill Slunt is runnin' her to-day?" His withering contempt for passengers is something immeasurably painful to the unhappy people who are obliged to travel. This man, whom you have often met, has two or three origins. He usually travels on a trip pass, and used to sweep out the general offices when the regularly ordained janitor had to take the Superintendent's place. He isn't a railroad man, but he'd give both his legs if he could make people think he is.

There are two men in a seat near the stove exchanging recipes for rheumatism and other ills to which human flesh is heir. One of them had the "janders" all last spring. They "come onto" him just as he was getting over a spell of "neuralagy" and left him just in time for two weeks' "rassel weth lumbago in the spine of his back." That isn't what ails him now, though. It's this "miasmia in his system" and the things he has been and is yet taking for it are numerous enough and various enough to kill off a county almshouse. The other man had "a malignant tumor" on his hip all winter, and the only thing his doctor could do with it was to throw him into a "bronchial fever," the effects of which were still painfully apparent in chilblains and "excerated sore-throat." Every time he "swollers" he'd "druther die'n swoller agin." So these two sufferers while away weary hours telling each other infallible cures for all the things the other man has.

And then there are four other people on the train; they are on every train that ever turned a wheel—the two young people who have just been married, and the omnipresent other two young people, the two who want to be married.

Importance of a Trained Military Staff.

That we may be able to keep pace with the rapid and unceasing improvements of modern military science, and adapt them to our peculiar needs, it is absolutely necessary that we should have a permanent establishment where officers devote themselves entirely to the military profession, while the non-commissioned officers and men remain long enough in the service to acquire thorough discipline and instruction.

In measuring the value of such a permanent establishment it is to be borne in mind that not only can it perform certain duties, such as the control of the Indians, very much more efficiently and economically than any temporary force, but that, if maintained at a sufficiently high numerical standard, it stands ready to bear the first brunt of hostilities until new troops can be organized and constructed, that it affords the means of infusing discipline and instruction among these new troops, and that it furnishes the robust frames of the various staff corps, whose business it is to direct the movements and supply the needs of both old and new troops. It is impossible to exagerate the importance of these staff corps of the regular army, and it is one of the unavoidable necessities of our position to maintain them on a larger scale than is demanded by the current needs of the army on a peace footing.

Our ability to increase the strength of the army with rapidity, and to improvise new armies, depends chiefly—it may perhaps justly be said entirely—upon our maintaining in time of peace a large and thoroughly trained staff corps. Far from having too many, our organization is still deficient in the lack of something corresponding to the magnificent "General Staff Corps" of the German army—a corps composed of the ablest and most highly trained officers of the most perfectly organized army the world has ever seen, and forming the most admirable and efficient military instrument of which history bears record.

It must not for a moment be forgotten that the mere drill in the tactics and the use of arms forms a very small—although a very essential—part of the instruction required to prepare troops for war.

The proper feeding and clothing of the men, the care of their health, the collection of the various supplies required, together with the formation and management of the requisite depots and trains to insure their being on hand at the right time and place, the determination of the most efficient arms and ammunition, the establishment of hospitals and field-hospital trains, the provision of the means for crossing rivers, the use of heavy and light artillery, the conduct of sieges, the attack and defense of posts, the collection of information as to the theater of war and the supplies it affords, of the movements and intentions of the enemy, guard and outpost duty, reconnaissances, marches, handling troops on the field of battle—in other words, the means required to put troops to the best possible use, or, in fact, to any use whatever—all this requires for its proper execution a combination of theory and practice, of education and experience, that can be acquired only through a regular establishment. Moreover, it must be remembered that never before has technical science played so great a part in war, and never before was thorough scientific knowledge of the art of war, in all its branches, so necessary to insure success.—George B. McClellan, in Harper's Magazine.

Five Millions in a Bag.

John I. Blair, of Blairsville, N. J., is one of the most remarkable of men. Though 80 years of age, his bearing is perfectly erect, and he is more active than many young fellows of 50 years. The Jersey town in which he lives was founded by him and named in his honor, but he is known in the West as one of the most extensive railroad builders of the century.

He is a man of very large wealth and of very original methods. Many years ago, it is told of him, he was a partner of John B. Alley, another millionaire. They disagreed and separated. Some time after Alley sued him for something like two and a half millions. When the trial day came Mr. Blair was not ready, for some reason, and he wanted a postponement. There was a battalion of lawyers in the case, and a great deal of quibbling ensued. The court finally decided to grant the motion, but stipulated that a bond of double the amount of the alleged claim should be filed.

"The bond required will be $5,000,000, I understand," said Mr. Blair, when that point had been reached.

The opposing counsel were quick to assure him that he had not overstated the amount.

"I expected there would be something of the kind necessary," said Mr. Blair, quietly, "and so I brought this along."

"This" proved to be a black bag, which he had laid down on the floor near his chair when he came into court. He opened it, and, stepping up to the bench, took from it and spread before the Judge $5,000,000 in Government bonds.

"These will answer, I suppose?" he inquired.

After the Judge recovered from his amazement he said he believed they would. "But," he continued, "I will make you custodian of them, with the distinct understanding that none of them shall be used while it is a part of the bond."

"Your Honor need have no fear on that score," Mr. Blair responded, reassuringly. "I only brought in a few this morning for this purpose. These are same that I will have no use for while this matter is pending."

It was some time after the millionaire had left the court-room before the witnesses of the scene recovered from the stupor produced by the display of such princely wealth in such a matter-of-fact fashion.

LITTLE Lou Brakeley has some very cute things to say now and then. A day or two since she was following her grandma about the house, picking up such information as childish curiosity leads to, and suddenly putting her hand on what to her seemed a novel utensil, she asked what it was. Her grandma told her it was a corn-popper, and that temporarily ended the catechism. Some time afterward the two were seated quietly in the sewing-room, when Lou broke the silence with: "Nana!" (her version of grandma,) "is your papa dead?" "Yes," answered grandma. A long pause, and then came from the little lips: "Then the only papa you got is just a corn-popper!"—Yonkers Gazette.

A Kind Act.

One day Sir William Napier, while walking in the country near Freshford, met a little girl sobbing over a broken bowl. She told him that when she got home she would be whipped; but suddenly she looked up at him and said: "But ye can mendit, can't 'ee?" He told her that he was afraid he could not, but that he would give her sixpence to buy a new bowl. Finding, however, that he had no money in his pocket, he promised to meet her on the spot, and at the same time, next day. The child was off quite happy. On returning home, Napier found an invitaion to dine at Bath the next evening, to meet a person he particularly wished to see. He at once thought of this little friend. Would it be possible to go and meet her, and then to return in time for dinner? Finding that it would be impossible, he wrote to decline the invitation, remarking to his daughters, "I cannot disappoint her, she trusted me so implicitly."

WOOD WORMS can be destroyed in books and woodwork by benzine. Books are locked up in a cupboard with a saucer of benzine. The insects as well as their larvæ and eggs soon die off. Furniture and carvings are similarly placed in a room with a dish of benzine and kept closed up for several weeks, the time required for the complete destruction of the insects varying according to the thickness of the wood. New woodwork can be protected against their entry by a coating of glue, as, living on vegetable substances, they do not touch animal products.

A TERRIBLE CONFESSION.

A Physician Presents Some Startling Facts.

Can It Be that the Danger Indicated Is Universal?

The following story—which is attracting wide attention from the press—is so remarkable that we cannot excuse ourselves if we do not lay it before our readers entire:

To the Editor of the Rochester (N. Y.) Democrat.

SIR: On the first day of June, 1881, I lay at my residence in this city surrounded by my friends and waiting for death. Heaven only knows the agony I then endured, for words can never describe it. And yet, if a few years previous any one had told me that I was to be brought so low, and by so terrible a disease, I should have scoffed at the idea. I had always been uncommonly strong and healthy, and weighed over 200 pounds, and hardly knew, in my own experience, what pain or sickness were. Very many people who will read this statement realize at times they are unusually tired and cannot account for it. They feel dull pains in various parts of the body and do not understand why. Or they are exceedingly hungry one day and entirely without appetite the next. This was just the way I felt when the relentless malady which had fastened itself upon me first began. Still I thought nothing of it; that probably I had taken a cold which would soon pass away. Shortly after this I noticed a heavy, and at times neuralgic, pain in one side of my head; but as it would come one day and be gone the next, I paid little attention to it. Then my stomach would get out of order and my food often failed to digest, causing at times great inconvenience. Yet, even as a physician, I did not think that these things meant anything serious. I fancied I was suffering from malaria and doctored myself accordingly. But I got no better. I next noticed a peculiar color and odor about the fluids I was passing—also that there were large quantities one day and very little the next, and that a persistent froth and scum appeared upon the surface, and a sediment settled. And yet I did not realize my danger; for, indeed, seeing these symptoms continually, I finally became accustomed to them, and my suspicion was wholly disarmed by the fact that I had no pain in the affected organs or in their vicinity. Why I should have been so blind I cannot understand!

I consulted the best medical skill in the land. I visited all the famed mineral springs in America and traveled from Maine to California. Still I grew worse. No two physicians agreed as to my malady. One said I was troubled with spinal irritation; another, dyspepsia; another, heart disease; another, general debility; another, congestion of the base of the brain; and so on through a long list of common diseases, the symptoms of many of which I really had. In this way several years passed, during which time I was steadily growing worse. My condition had really become pitiable. The slight symptoms I at first experienced were developed into terrible and constant disorders. My weight had been reduced from 207 to 130 pounds. My life was a burden to myself and friends. I could retain no food on my stomach, and lived wholly by injections. I was a living mass of pain. My pulse was uncontrollable. In my agony I frequently fell to the floor and clutched the carpet, and prayed for death! Morphine had little or no effect in deadening the pain. For six days and nights I had the death-premonitory hiccoughs constantly! My water was filled with tube-casts and albumen. I was struggling with Bright's disease of the kidneys in its last stages!

While suffering thus I received a call from my pastor, the Rev. Dr. Foote, at that time rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, of this city. I felt that it was our last interview, but in the course of conversation Dr. Foote detailed to me the many remarkable cures of cases like my own which had come under his observation. As a practicing physician and a graduate of the schools, I derided the idea of any medicine outside the regular channels being in the least beneficial. So solicitous, however, was Dr. Foote that I finally promised I would waive my prejudice. I began its use on the first day of June, 1881, and took it according to directions. At first it sickened me; but this I thought was a good sign for one in my debilitated condition. I continued to take it; the sickening sensation departed, and I was finally able to retain food upon my stomach. In a few days I noticed a decided change for the better, as also did my wife and friends. My hiccoughs ceased and I experienced less pain than formerly. I was so rejoiced at this improved condition that, upon what I had believed but a few days before was my dying bed, I vowed, in the presence of my family and friends, should I recover I would both publicly and privately make known this remedy for the good of humanity, wherever and whenever I had an opportunity, and this letter is in fulfillment of that vow. My improvement was constant from that time, and in less than three months I had gained 26 pounds in flesh, became entirely free from pain, and I believe I owe my life and present condition wholly to Warner's safe cure, the remedy which I used.

Since my recovery I have thoroughly reinvestigated the subject of kidney difficulties and Bright's disease, and the truths developed are astounding. I therefore state, deliberately, and as a physician, that I believe more than one-half the deaths which occur in America are caused by Bright's disease of the kidneys. This may sound like a rash statement, but I am prepared to verify it fully. Bright's disease has no distinctive features of its own (indeed, it often develops without any pain whatever in the kidneys or their vicinity), but has the symptoms of nearly every other common complaint. Hundreds of people die daily, whose burials are authorized by a physician's certificate as occurring from "Heart Disease," "Apoplexy," "Paralysis," "Spinal Complaint," "Rheumatism," "Pneumonia," and the other common complaints, when in reality it is from Bright's disease of the kidneys. Few physicians, and fewer people, realize the extent of this disease or its dangerous and insidious nature. It steals into the system like a thief, manifests its presence if at all by the commonest symptoms, and fastens itself in the constitution before the victim is aware of it. It is nearly as hereditary as consumption, quite as common and fully as fatal. Entire families, inheriting it from their ancestors, have died and yet none of the number knew or realized the mysterious power which was removing them. Instead of common symptoms it often shows none whatever, but brings death suddenly, from convulsions, apoplexy, or heart disease.

As one who has suffered, and knows by bitter experience what he says, I implore every one who reads these words not to neglect the slightest symptoms of kidney difficulty. No one can afford to hazard such chances.

I make the foregoing statements based upon facts which I can substantiate to the letter. The welfare of those who may possibly be sufferers such as I was is an ample inducement for me to take the step I have, and if I can successfully warn others from the dangerous path in which I once walked, I am willing to endure all the professional and personal consequences. J. B. HENION, M. D.

AN article in Hall's Journal of Health, after naming the earliest and prominent symptoms of consumption, says: "How much it is to be wished that the symptoms of this hateful disease were more generally studied and understood, that it might be detected in its first insidious approaches and application be made at once for its arrest and total eradication; for certain it is that in very many instances it could be accomplished."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Big Diamonds and Poor Luck.

A leading London jeweler, in talking with a Pall Mall Gazette reporter, remarked: "A big diamond always brings bad luck. I would not hold one, except in the way of trade, on any terms. If a man comes to me with a diamond worth £100,000—as a matter of fact there are few diamonds of that value—I should proceed in this manner: I should look at the stone, weigh it, test it, and having satisfied myself of its value, I should hand it to the vender and ask him to seal it up. Why? So that he might not show it to any one else. I should then ask him to call in forty-eight hours for a reply, and call some friends together, and I should say: Here is a diamond in the market worth £100,000; what will you take? and we should form a syndicate, buy the stone, and, holding it for a time, ultimately cut it and sell it in small portions."

COL. D. J. WILLIAMS, Quartermaster U. S. A., and ex-U. S. Consul at Callao, Peru, spent $20,000 in eight years in trying to cure himself of rheumatism, but got no relief until he used St. Jacobs Oil, which cured him.

Electricity in Engraving.

In a new engraving maching Lieut. B. Carter, of London, has made an interesting application of electricity. The machine is chiefly intended for decorative work upon metals, and rapidly produces high-finished results. The words or designs to be engraved are first furnished by a setting of ornamental types or stereotype plate. A fine platinum point traverses this, its motion being responded to by a table carrying the metal to be engraved under the point of the graver. As the platinum point is raised or let down by the design an electric current, acting upon an electro-magnet, produces a corresponding movement of the graver, which is thus made to accurately cut in the metal an enlarged or reduced copy of the types.

A Wise Reform.

The habit of administering quinine in powerful doses, as an antidote to malarial maladies, was once dangerously common. Happily this practice has undergone a wide reform. Not only the public, but professional men, have adopted, not wholly, of course, but largely, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters as a safe botanic substitute for the pernicious alkaloid. The consequences of this change are most important. Now fever and ague sufferers are cured—formerly their complaints were only for the time relieved, or half cured—the remedy eventually failing to produce any appreciable effect, except the doses were increased. A course of the Bitters, persistently followed, breaks up the worst attacks and prevents their return. The evidence in favor of this sterling specific and household medicine is of no ambiguous character, but positive and satisfactory, and the sources whence it proceeds are very numerous.

AMONG the miscellaneous articles purchased for the use of the United States Senators, and by them charged to the republic, are baronial envelopes, the English quarterly magazines, the American magazines, including several publi-hed specially for children, common-sense inks, shears, magic pencils, whistles, silver and porcelain toothpicks, anti-nervous pen-holders, pearl glove-hooks, card-plates and cards, cork-screws, sugar spoons, Apollinaris water, granulated sugar, ginger ale, lemons, lemon-squeezers, dippers, tumblers, "one punch bowl for lemonade," salts of tartar, spirits of ammonia, castor oil, cologne, soft soap, and repairs to a tricycle.

The Great German Physician.

The remarkable phase in the practice of Dr. Peter W. Schmidt (frequently called Dr. Pete) is, he never asked one to describe their disease but tells each one their trouble without asking a question. His success is phenomenal. His practice enormous. He is sought after by hundreds wherever he goes, because he cures when every other physician and remedy have failed. He has allowed his great medicines, Golden Seal Bitters and Lung Food for Consumption, to be offered to the suffering, and we assert without fear of successful contradiction that there is no disease they will not cure. Thousands of bottles have been sold. Thousands of broken-down and discouraged invalids saved. Send to Golden Seal Bitters Company, Holland City, Mich., for Facts for the Million! Free.

One of my children, a girl about nine years old, had a very bad discharge from her head and nose of a thick yellowish matter, and was growing worse. We had two different physicians prescribe for her, without benefit. We tried Ely's Cream Balm, and much to our surprise in three days there was a marked improvement. We continued using the Balm and in a short time the discharge was apparently cured.—O. A. Cary, Corning, N. Y.

DROPSY

TREATED FREE.

DR. H. H. GREEN & SONS,

Specialists for Thirteen Years Past,

Have treated Dropsy and its complications with the most wonderful success; use vegetable remedies, entirely harmless. Remove all symptoms of dropsy in eight to twenty days.

Cure patients pronounced hopeless by the best of physicians.

From the first dose the symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two-thirds of all symptoms are removed.

Some may say they can do without knowing anything about it. Remember, it does not cost you anything to realize the merits of our treatment for yourself. In ten days the difficulty of breathing is relieved, the pulse regular, the urinary organs made to discharge their full duty, sleep restored, the swelling all or nearly gone, the strength increased, and appetite made good. We are constantly curing cases of long standing—cases that have been tapped a number of times, and the patient declared unable to live a week. Give full history of case. Name sex, how long afflicted, how badly swollen and where, are bowels costive, have legs been tapped and drained of water. Send for free pamphlet, containing testimonials, questions, etc.

Ten days' treatment furnished free by mail.

Ironton.

Rev. VanAuken preached at the M. E. church Sunday, to a large audience.

The people of Ironton are a church-going people. One week ago Revs. Iddings and VanAuken preached at the same hour, both had good congregations.

The following is the program in Ironton for the present week. Monday eve. Organizing a society to be called the "Knights of Labor." We have not learned the particulars. Suppose there was a large and enthusiastic meeting. When told the initiation fee was one dollar we turned sadly away. Tuesday eve. Mustering of the G. A. R. boys by Major Green, of Charlevoix. We understand that they are now a full rigged post, sailing under the name "The Iron Post of Ironton." This being another occasion where our attendance was respectfully declined, we cannot write particulars, but will endeavor to learn some facts for our next letter. Wednesday eve. Prayer meeting at the Ironton hotel. Thursday afternoon. Ladies' temperance prayer meeting, and Thursday eve. prayer and conference meeting at the M. E. church.

On Friday evening there will be a basket social at the home of Mr. F. C. Bird, proceeds to go toward paying the church debt.

Saturday evening a temperance lecture by Mrs. Benjaman, of the W. C. T. U., is announced.

We are glad to note that our invalid friend S. M. McQueer, Esq. is on his feet again, and able to attend to the duties and responsibilities of the engine room.

Our friend A. M. Burdick has forty-eight fine hens in his new hennery, and is very desirous of making it an even fifty. Padlocks are worth 15 cents and chickens 25 cents. A word to the wise is suficent.

There will be an entertainment at the Ironton hotel, on Washington's birthday, Monday evening, the proceeds to go into the treasury of the young ladies' society. They will welcome any friends who may like to take advantage of the excellent sleighing and moonlight evenings.

Burgess.

No school in district No. 4, from Wednesday of last week, until Monday of this week. The teacher, Miss Hannah Bell, had business in Charlevoix that required her presence there.

The lumbermen, who were broken off by the soft weather last week have again commenced operations.

A good time for hard colds, and quite a number of the inhabitants of our town are improving it.

Mrs. Hamlin has been visiting her sister, Mrs. Whitford, the past week.

A basket social at A. W. Chew's residence next Thursday evening, the proceeds to go for the benefit of Ren Wood who preaches at our school house.

We understand that I. Rarn, of Carpenter, is selling out, and intends to go onto his farm, just out from Petoskey, in the spring.

The cold weather of week before last, has frozen a good many potatoes that were out in pits.

Marion.

Mrs. Reed is on the sick list.

Many of the farmers here are now hauling logs to Mr. Nicholls' mill.

We have quite good sleighing in this locality now.

Wood is beginning to move more freely than at any time before this winter.

Monday, the 15th inst., occurred the marriage of Miss Serepta Cooper to John McIntosh, of the firm of McIntosh & Lynde. May they have a long and prosperous journey down life's pathway.

The G. R. & I. are clearing eight acres of land at Oden and will make a beautiful park. They will also erect bath houses and run a 'dummy' four times a day between that point and Petoskey. — Kalamazoo Telegraph.

"Baby Mine," a Langshan pullet owned by Dr. W. J. Miller, of Battle Creek won a $50 prize at Cairo, Ill.

The tug Pendleton went down at Cheboygan, by being caught in the ice.

Temperance Column.

Conducted by a Committee of the W. C. T. U.

The W. C. T. U. will meet at the home of Mrs. L. E. Allen, on Friday, at 3 p. m. All the ladies are cordially invited to attend.

Under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., Mrs. S. C. Benjamin will deliver a temperance lecture at the Congregational church, next Sunday evening. All are respectfully invited to be present.

Rev. Mr. Parmenter's Address.

Our temperance matter being already in the hands of the printer, this synopsis of Mr. Parmenter's address was unavoidably postponed until this issue of the JOURNAL. In giving this synopsis we cannot expect to convey the full effect of the address upon the audience. If we can preserve the statistics and set the reflective imagination of our people upon them again, our purpose will be accomplished.

The text was Acts xxiv-25. A reason for the greater importance attached to the subject of temperance by christian people, and especially ministers is found in the increased activity of christians and the greater intensity of christian thought, Aroused and quickened by the missionary spirit of the age, christianity imitating the example of the Master, preaches, and practices a gospel of interference. Another reason is found in the fact that the evils of intemperance have increased out of all proportions, to the increase of population. From 1860 to 1870 the per cent of increase in population was 29, and that of intemperance was 31. From 1870 to 1880 the corresponding figures are respectively 33 and 70.

Fifty, or even thirty years ago the monster vice sneaked into its dens of desecration and seemed tolerably content to live a life of infamy and shame. Now the hydra-headed monster, without a pretense to modesty, claims the protection of law.. It rejoices in its privilege of paying its blood money to the government, and then demands its victims by thousands and tens of thousands, with a pride of power that contemns God, despises law, and defies control; as an organized body it bribes juries, corrupts judges and legislators, and intimidates and murders officers engaged in enforcing the law. It packs caucuses and conventions, and holding the balance of power, compels concession from political parties, corrupting government both local and national. These crimes of organized evil come in only as additions to the private characters of individual inebriates, as insane persons, thieves, debauchees, and mid-night assassins. Lulling to sleep both congress and the courts by waving its golden wand forged in the fires of hell; with equal pride it snatches its victims from the hovels of poverty and the halls of wealth, from untutored youth and disappointed age. How can we call it other than the maamoth evil of our day.

The fact that there are 104 saloons on the street leading from the white house to the capital, serves as an illustration of the frequent and mighty temptation before the intemperately inclined. And the question of how to save all, and especially the young, from misery and disgrace, and eternal death, that lurks behind the tinseled surface of those inviting institutions, appeals to all in whom there yet remains a spark of human feeling. The appeal is made to our manhood, to our christianity, and to our ambition, to be of use in the world. There must be work that will draw the sweat of self sacrifice. The weapons used must be more efficient than moral suasion. Every instrument of warfare God has put into our possession, we must wield wisely and well. We must guard our influence, keeping off from the gambler's premises, (to use an illustration from Spurgeon) although we should not gamble if we were there, remembering that our presence there may make a gambler out of some one else. And remembering the preamble of the constitution of the United States, the appeal to us as patriots comes with exceding force. Let us inquire, in the spirit of the constitution, what influence or power more constantly and efficiently opposes the "general welfare" of "the people of the United States" than the rum traffic? The conclusion is imminent that all license laws are unconstitutional, and if they were not unconstitutional, they would still remain contrary to God's law, which says, "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that puteth the bottle to him and maketh him drunken also." If drunkenness be not a sin, why tax it? If it is a sin, it is a crime, and to license it makes the goverment a partner in the crime. License laws are contrary to the statement of Gladstone, that "It is the duty of the government to make it easy for the citizen to do right."

Finally, consider the subject in the light of the Yankee question "Does it pay?" Opening the ledger we find credited to the rum traffic $100,000,000 license fees. On the debit side are, 1st, $900,000,000 paid for rum; 2d, 30 per cent of increase of taxes; 3d, prosecution and punishment of crime, $2,000,000,000. While we look at these figures with the question before us, "does it pay," let the words of our favorite poet inspire us to activity:

"Sail on, O Union, strong and great;
Sail on, nor fear to breast the sea.
Our hearts, our hopes are all with thee.
Our hearts, our hopes, our prayers, our tears,
Our faith, triumphant o'er our fears,
Are all with thee, are all with thee."

WHEN A CURE IS GUARANTEED

Why will you refuse to be relieved of that cough which is liable to become seated on your lungs and to cause you many a suffering day and sleepless night? Your children are liable to be taken with croup and die before a doctor can be summoned. Be wise and obtain a remedy that will not fail to give relief from coughs, colds, whooping cough, cronp, and all other lung difficulties. HAMILTON'S COUGH BALSAM will do this and costs but a trifle. Price 25 and 50 cents per bottle.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Whereas default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage dated the 12th day of November, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one, executed by Mary A. Thomas to John Frenz, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds, of the county of Charlevoix, in the state of Michigan, in liber 6 of mortgages at page 464, on the 29th day of November, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one, at two o'clock in the afternoon of said day. And whereas, the said mortgage has been duly assigned by the said John Frenz, to Daniel Head, by instrument of assignment bearing date the 10th day of May, in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-two, and recorded in the office of the register of deeds of said county of Charlevoix, on the 14th day of July in the year A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three, at two o'clock in the afternoon of said day, in liber 9 of mortgages, at page 101, and the same is now owned by the said Daniel Head. And whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice, is the sum of Thirteen Hundred and seventy two dollars and seventy cents ($1,372.70) principal and interest, and a further sum of thirty dollars ($30), provided by law as an attorney fee in the foreclosure of said mortgage which is the whole amount claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding at law or in chancery having been instituted to recover the debt now remaining secured by the said mortgage, or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of Sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described at public auction to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in the township of South Arm, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, which is the place of holding the circuit court for said county, on Wednesday, the 19th day of May, 1886, at twelve o'clock meridian, which premises are described in the said mortgage as follows, to wit: Lot three (3), and the south one-half (½) of the south-west one-quarter (¼) of section seventeen (17), in township thirty-three (33) north, range seven (7) west. In the county of Charlevoix and state of Michigan, and containing in all one hundred and forty-five and twenty-five one-hundredths acres of land, according to the United States survey thereof, excepting, however, the north one-half (½) of the southwest one-quarter (¼) of the southwest one-quarter (¼) of said section seventeen (17), and also excepting lots number two (2), three (3), four (4), five (5), six (6), seven (7), eight (8), and fifteen (15), in Schoffen's addition to the village of Ironton, according to the recorded plat thereof, which have been released from said mortgage by the assignee thereof.

Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage, made and executed by J. Milo Eaton and Ellen J. Eaton, his wife, of Charlevoix, Michigan, to Mary J. McGlashan, dated February fourth, A. D. 1882, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for the county of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan, on the fourth day of February, A. D. 1882, in liber "I" of Mortgages, on page 477, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of Two Thousand Four Hundred and Fifty-eight and 33-100 Dollars, ($2,458.33), principal and interest and no suit or proceedings at law having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage or any part thereof: Now, therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and the statute in such case made and provided. Notice is hereby given that on Thursday the twenty-second day of April, A. D. 1886, at one o'clock in the afternoon, I shall sell at public auction to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in South Arm township, located in the village of South Lake, commonly called East Jordan, in said county of Charlevoix, (that being the place and building in which the Circuit Court for Charlevoix County is holden), the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with interest at ten per cent, and all legal costs, including such attorney fee provided for in said mortgage as is allowed by the statute in such case made and provided, to wit: All those certain pieces or parcels of land situate in the township of Charlevoix, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, and described as follows, to wit: Commencing at the quarter post between sections twenty six (26) and thirty-five (35), in township thirty-four (34), north of range eight (8) west; thence due south twelve (12) and 25-100 chains; thence east to the shore of Pine Lake; thence north along the shore of Pine Lake, to the section line between sections twenty-six (26) and thirty-five (35); thence west along said section line to the place of beginning, containing eight and 5-8 (8⅝) acres, more or less. Also the north half of the north east quarter of the north west quarter, all of which is contained in section thirty-five (35) in township thirty-four (34) north of range eight (8) west, containing twenty-eight and ⅝ acres, more or less, together with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining.

Dated January 20th, 1886.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the condition of a certain mortgage, made by Mary Blackbird to John A. Bacot, dated October 3d, A. D. 1884, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, on the 3d day of October, A. D. 1884, in liber 8 of mortgages, on page 522, which said mortgage was on the 22d day of December, 1884, assigned by said John A. Bacot to Frederick W. Mayne, said assignment being on record in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 10 of mortgages on page 610, and on the 14th day of December 1885, was assigned by said Frederick W. Mayne to Hugh Miller, said assignment being recorded in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 13 of mortgages, on page 146, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of One hundred and ninety six and 15-100 dollars, as principal and interest, and no suit or proceedings at law having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof. Now, therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and the statute in such case made and provided, notice is hereby given that on Saturday, the 13th day of March, A. D. 1886, at one o'clock in the afternoon, I shall sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the town hall in the village of East Jordan, (that being the place where the Circuit Court for Charlevoix County is holden,) the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with ten per cent interest, and all legal costs, together with an attorney's fee of fifteen dollars, covenanted for therein, the premises being described in said mortgage as all that parcel of land, situate in the township of Hayes, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, and known and described as follows: The south west quarter (¼) of the south west quarter (¼) of section thirty-six (36) township thirty four (34) north of range seven (7) west, containing forty acres according to the United States survey.

Dated Charlevoix, Mich., Dec. 15, 1885.

Assignee of Mortgagee.

FREDERICK W. MAYNE,
Attorney for Assignee of Mortgagee.

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage, made and dated the tenth day of September, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four, executed by Henning Frizzell to the Pine Lake Iron Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, and doing business in the county of Charlevoix, in the State of Michigan, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of the said County of Charlevoix, in Liber 11 of mortgages at page 11, on the 18th day of April, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-five, at one o'clock, in the afternoon, and the same is now owned by the said Pine Lake Iron Company. And whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of Fifty-Five Dollars and Twenty-two cents, principal and interest, which sum is a part of the purchase price of the premises herein described, and a further sum of fifteen dollars provided by law as an attorney's fee in the foreclosure of said mortgage, which is the whole amount claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage, and no suit or proceedings at law or in chancery having been instituted to recover the debt now remaining secured by the said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in the said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises herein described at public auction to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in the township of South Arm, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, which is the place of holding the circuit court for said county, on Friday, the 2d day of April next, at twelve o'clock meridian, which premises are described in the said mortgage as follows, to wit: Lots twenty (20) and twenty-one (21) in block number twelve (12) in the Pine Lake Iron Co.'s plat of Ironton, town of Eveline, county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan.

Dated December 30th, A. D. 1885.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the money secured by a certain mortgage, dated the thirtieth day of October, 1883, executed by Benjamin Walker and Maria Walker, his wife, of Charlevoix county, Michigan, to Josiah E. Harding, of Allegan county, Michigan, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of Charlevoix county, in liber 9 of mortgages, on page 161, on the 31st day of October, A. D. 1883, and whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of three hundred and forty-six dollars, and no suit or proceeding having been instituted at law, or in equity, to recover the debt now remaining secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof, and whereas, in and by the conditions of said mortgage it is provided that should any default be made in the payment of the interest due thereon, or any part thereof, on any day whereon the same is made payable, and should the same remain unpaid and in arrears for the space of thirty days, the principal sum together with all arrearages of interest thereon shall at the option of the said obligee or his assigns become due and payable immediately thereafter, and whereas, default has been made in the payment of the interest due on the principal sum on the day when the same became due, and whereas said interest has remained unpaid and in arrears for the space of over thirty days; the said Josiah E. Harding, has elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole amount of said mortgage, principal and interest, due and payable, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative. Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in village of East Jordan, in the county of Charlevoix, Michigan, (that being the place where the Circuit Court is holden in said county), on the 27th day of April, 1886, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of that day, which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows: The west half of the southeast quarter of section seventeen, in township thirty-four north, of range seven west, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan.

Dated January 19, 1886.

A Trip to the Tropics.

II.

The history of Jamaica is a chapter of tragedies. It is no part of my plan to write a history of the island; yet a brief outline cannot be uninteresting.

Jamaica was discovered by Columbus May 3d, 1494, and named by him Santa Gloria, in consequence of the beauty of the country; but the aboriginal name Xaymaca, (signifying an abundance of rivers and great fertility), harmonized into Jamaica, has been accepted.

Jamaica remained in Spanish possession 161 years, during which time the aborigines, an unwarlike tribe of Indians, were exterminated. The history of the country during these years is full of the horrible cruelties practiced on this people. In 1655 the island was surrendered to an English expedition. The Spanish were driven from the country, but the destruction and devastation of war caused a famine which compelled the soldiers to eat vermin, and green unwholesome fruits. Such diet brought on a disease similar to a plague which nearly depopulated the island. Oliver Cromwell, who was "Protector" in England at the time, resorted to novel means to repopulate the country. After offering inducements to Bermudas, Barbadors and other places, a thousand young girls and an equal number of young men, were "listed" in Ireland, and sent to the colony. In the year 1657 a former Spanish governor returned with a strong force, landed and built a fort on the north side of the island. After holding out a short time, the fort was completely routed by the English army, and Don Sasi, (the governor), escaped to Cuba in a canoe. When Jamaica passed under English rule the Spanish slaves retired to the mountains, and for more than one hundred years carried on a system of petty warfare with the planters. The isolation of the planters rendered them an easy prey, for the "Maroons," as they were called, would surround a lonely plantation in the night, free the slaves, burn the buildings, and in many cases murder the inmates, and then return to their mountain fastnesses. Every measure taken to drive them from their retreat met with failure. The Mosquito Indians from the Spanish main, were employed, also Cuban hunters and blood hounds. At last a treaty of peace was agreed upon between the English government and the three Maroon captains, Cudjoe, "Accompong" and Quaco. The English government conceded to them the lands they occupied; and they were subject to the laws of the land, but reserved the right of electing their own magistrates. Maroontown had been a city of refuge for escaped slaves. Not only was this discontinued, but in several insurrections, the Maroons supported the masters and fought their own race.

To the present time the Maroons live in the seclusion of the mountains, hold themselves as vastly superior to the commoners, and will do no labor that was commonly assigned to slaves, as laboring in canefields, etc.

While the English dealt treacherously with them many times, they have always been true to their peace treaty. Even in the insurrection of 1865, when the negroes were incited by seditious speeches to attempt the massacre of the white population of Jamaica, the Maroons of Scot's Hall, and Mooretown, headed by their chief, Colonel Fyfe, did good service in crushing the rebellion. During the seventeenth century the Carribean sea swarmed with pirates and privateers. About the year 1675, Sir Thomas Modyford, governor of the island, entered into league with these outlaws and commissioned them on his own responsibility, in the name of the King of England, to commit depredations on the provinces of the Dutch, Spanish, and other nationalities. On intelligence of this reaching England the governor was called home as a prisoner for assuming too much authority. At this time Port Royal was the home of all the pirates that infested these seas, and to quote the history of Jamaica, was "The finest town in the West Indies, and the richest spot in the universe, also the wickedest city on earth."

In 1692 occurred "the great earth quake" which changed the whole outline of the island. The mountains were riven assunder, valleys became mountains and river channels were formed where the mountains had been. Port Royal was sunk many fathoms under the sea, and the thousands of putrefying bodies that rose to the suface bred a pestilence that slew thousands of the survivors. In sailing on Kingston Bay at the present time the ruins of the city can be seen. None of the ill gotton wealth has ever been brought up from the sea and the divers who have attempted it have in most cases lost their lives. The destruction of the city is looked upon as the judgment of God, and as his will that the blood bought gold should lie buried in the sea. In 1694 the French invaded the island under Admiral DuCasse. They penetrated the interior, committing horrible atrocities, murdering men and women. They were finally driven back to their ships by the colonial militia, with a loss of seven hundred men, but in escaping they carried with them 1,300 slaves. During the early part of the eighteenth century the Picaroons from Cuba made frequent invasions, landing on the unprotected coasts in the night time, murdering the planters, plundering the plantations and kidnapping the slaves. In 1740 Jamaica was the victim of another dreadful earthquake. The greatest destruction occured at Savanna la Mar, the whole town being totally obliterated, leaving none to tell the tale. In 1760 one of the most formidable of the many rebellions among the slaves occurred. The insurgents fought with desperate fury and were at first successful, but were finally overpowered by the militia after many hundreds on both sides were killed. The ringleaders were burnt, and some were hung in chains. Seventeen years later another outbreak among the slaves disturbed the tranquility of the the island. At this time there were 250,000 slaves in Jamaica. Again the ringleaders were executed. In 1785 came the last of five successive hurricanes, which so completely destroyed the island vegetation that many thousand, perished by famine. And thus it has been with this beautiful but unfortunate island throughout its entire history in instances far too numerous to admit of the slightest mention here. Earthquake and famine, hurricane and flood, plague and pestilence, and enemies from within and without. In 1865 the negroes attempted the massacre of the entire white population, believing that Jamaica was to be taken possession of by the United States and they reduced to slavery.

Since that time Jamaica has enjoyed peace and prosperity. When slavery was abolished 50 years ago 300,000 slaves were set free. To-day she has a population of 600,000 souls, of which, perhaps 50,000 are white, 50,000 East Indians (coolies), and the remainder black and brown.

Cutcheon says that Grant's namby pamby imbecile acknowledgement of Fitz John Porter's innocence was based on the idea that there was no battle on the 29th of August, 1862; whereas, in Cutcheon's opinion, there was a battle and Cutcheon is willing to swear to it. It is of course high time for somebody to come forward and show that Grant didn't know a battle from a dog-fight, and Cutcheon is the man to do it; at any rate he is the man who has done it. A year ago Grant was alive and Cutcheon didn't set himself up so high for a military authority as he does now. He then contented himself with being a moral philosopher, and attributed Grant's change of views in regard to Porter to his desire to get on the list. However, either as a military critic of Grant, or as a stern moralist accusing Grant of selling himself for an annual pension, Cutcheon is an equally edifying spectacle.

FORTY-NINTH CONGRESS.

THE Senate closed its long and wrangling debate over the admission of South Dakota into the Union as a State on the 5th inst., by passing the bill of the Committee on Territories. A vote was first taken on the Butler substitute, which was an act to enable the people of Dakota to frame a State constitution, etc., and it was rejected by a vote of—yeas 22, nays 33. A vote was then taken on the bill itself, which resulted in—yeas 32, nays 22. The negative vote was wholly Democratic. The affirmative vote was made up of thirty-one Republicans and one Democrat—Mr. Voorhees. The bill as it was passed divides the Territory of Dakota on the line of the 46th parallel of latitude; provides for the admission of the southern portion as a State under the title of Dakota, and the organization of the northern portion into a separate Territory under the name of Lincoln. The Frye bill for the appointment of a commission to investigate the alcoholic-liquor traffic was reported favorably to the Senate. It provides for the appointment by the President of five persons to investigate the alcoholic-liquor traffic, its relations to revenue and taxation, and its general economic, criminal, moral, and scientific aspects in connection with pauperism, crime, social evil, the public health, and general welfare of the people; to inquire and take testimony as to the practical results of license and prohibitory legislation for the prevention of intemperance in the several States, and to report the result of their investigations to the President, to be by him transmitted to Congress. It appropriates $10,000 for the expenses of the investigation. The Senate passed Mr. Sewell's bill providing for an annual appropriation of $600,000 to buy arms and ordnance stores, quartermasters' stores, and camp equipage for the militia of the several States and Territories. No State is to receive a share of the appropriation unless its militia force numbers at least one hundred men for each Senator and Representative to which it is entitled in Congress. The Senate also passed a bill providing for the sale of the old site of Fort Brady, in Michigan, and for the purchase of a new site and the erection of suitable building thereon. The House of Representatives passed the Senate bill to pay to Joseph W. Parish, of Peoria, $58,341.85 for ice contracted for army hospitals in 1863. Mr. Randall reported to the House the pension bill from the Appropriation Committee, and it was referred to the committee of the whole. The bill as reported appropriates $75,754,200, an increase of about $15,000,000 over last year. It is made up as follows: For army and navy pensions, $75,000,000; for fees and expenses of examining surgeons, $500,000; for salaries of eighteen pension agents, $72,000; for miscellaneous expenses, including clerk hire, rents, etc., $182,200.

A NICE silver debate was running along peacefully in the Senate on the 8th inst., with Senator John Sherman on the floor pointing out the mistakes that had been made in the Treasury Department in failing to follow his example, when some accidental remark was made about the inquiries the Senate was making of the Secretary of the Treasury in regard to silver, and the Senator from Ohio at once branched off into a discussion of the great question of the hour—the relations of the Executive and the Senate. Mr. Edmunds was absent, and Mr. Sherman had a chance to come to the front as the Republican spokesman. For half an hour the debate between Mr. Sherman on one side and Messrs. Sanlsbury and Pugh on the other was decidedly interesting. Mr. Sherman's position was that the Senate had no right to question the President as to his reasons, but it had a right to any information that exists in the departments. The doctrine, he declared, had always been recognized till the present administration came in. In the administrations of Pierce and Buchanan committees of Congress had a cabinet minister before them, and overhauled papers in the departments, and it was never even suggested that the two houses of Congress were not entitled to see everything on file in the departments. When he was Secretary of the Treasury he was summoned before committes of both houses, and questioned about executive acts both in regard to appointments and removals and in regard to financial policy, and he answered all questions but one, and that was as to what he was going to do. The Senate agreed to a resolution offered by Mr. Ingalls, which directs the Finance Committee to inquire into the propriety of making such an amendment to the Revised Statutes as may be necessary to require the issue of United States notes of the denominations of $1 and $2. In the House of Representatives, Mr. Blanchard introduced a resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for a statement of all moneys seized or collected in the Department of the Gulf by Generals Butler and Banks. Mr. Springer introduced a bill to enable the people of Dakota east of the Missouri River to form a Constitution and State Government, and there is strong reason to believe that it will be the measure which the House will oppose against the Harrison bill which passed the Senate. The bill provides for admitting the east half of Dakota, which contains about 420,000 inhabitants, with two members of Congress and two United States Courts. This will leave only about 30,000 inhabitants west of the river to be organized into the Territory of Lincoln. Bismarck is left out of the new State, and will become the capital of the new Territory. The bill provides that Congress may hereafter, when the Indian reservation titles are extinguished, annex the Territory of Lincoln, and Dakota is required to consent to this in her constitution. Mr. Weaver addressed the House upon the coinage question. In the course of his remarks Mr. Weaver attacked the national banking system. There were four things, he said, relating to finance which this Congress must enact. First, it must provide for unrestricted coinage of American silver. Second, a law must be passed for the issue of Treasury notes to take the place of bank notes. Third, the largest portion of the surplus in the Treasury must be paid out in liquidation of the interest-bearing public debt. Fourth, it must forbid by law any further discrimination against silver coin.

A BILL to provide for the control of the reservation at Hot Springs, Arkansas, and the distribution of water, was introduced in the Senate on the 9th inst. The Senate passed bills appropriating $350,000 each for public buildings at San Francisco and Portland, $200,000 for San Antonio, $150,000 for Pueblo, Fort Smith, Dayton, and Zanesville, and $100,000 for Atchison, Sioux City, Oshkosh, and Vicksburg. A bill passed to sell the old site of Fort Brady, in Michigan, and erect a suitable building in a new location. The Speaker laid before the House the response of the Secretary of the Treasury to the Bland resolution. Referred. The Secretary says: "I have received the inquiries addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury by the House of Representatives in their resolution respecting the silver balance and circulation, and beg leave to say in reply that I will, with all due diligence, make full answer to the same. I am for the moment delayed by the current business of the department, and by a special endeavor to promote exigent reforms in the levy and collection of duties on imported commodities, by affording some information therein in season for the advantage of the sub-committee of the Finance Committee of the Senate, which has requested the same and which I am happy to say is about to undertake an early examination of the difficulties set forth in my annual report in respect to the collection of revenue at the Custom House at New York." The Speaker also laid before the House the reply of the Secretary of the Treasury to the resolution asking for a statement of the amount applied to the sinking fund during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885. Referred. The Secretary gives the following figures: Bonds, principal, $45,588,150; interest, $271,607.92; fractional currency, redeemed, $15,885.63. Total, $45,875,702.75.

THE Fontis resolution calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for information as to the refusal of the Assistant Treasuror at New Orleans to receive shipments of silver and to issue silver certificates therefor, was the theme of a protracted debate in the Senate on the 10th inst. Senator Call defended the action of the Treasury officials and Senator Plumb criticised it. Senator Coke attacked the Treasury Department vehemently, saying that the Treasury officials, while ostentatiously taking credit for supporting the public credit and executing the law, were doing everything in their power to accomplish a directly contrary result. He made no war on the administration, he said, but he believed that a public office is a public trust, and in the position taken by him he executed the trust conferred on him by the people whom he in part represented. Senator Teller praised the Democratic members of the last House for "resisting the effort of the incoming Democratic President to discredit silver." He commented severely on the statement made by the President and Secretary Manning, that it had been possible to force only $50,000,000 in silver into circulation when $ 300,000 of silver certificates and $40,000,000 in silver coin were in the hands of the people. Mr. George defended the administration, after which Mr. Eustis said that he had telegraphed to Mr. Roach at New Orleans to ascertain the purpose of the bank shipment of silver, and had received this reply: "Shippers sought to get rid of excessive silver by shipping to the Sub-Treasury and asking that silver certificates therefor should be turned over to their New Orleans correspondents. The Sub-Treasurer declined to receive from express company because, first, he doubted the propriety of the Treasury becoming intermediary between country and city banks; second, for lack of clerical force. I feel assured that provision for sufficient clerks would remedy everything." The matter finally went over. The House met, adopted resolutions eulogistic of Gen. Hancock, and immediately adjourned.

EASTERN.

The remains of General Hancock were on Saturday, the 13th inst., escorted by regular troops to Trinity Church, New York, where funeral services were conducted by Rev. Morgan Dix. A special train conveyed the cortege to Norristown, Pennsylvania, and the casket was placed in the vault. Mrs. Hancock has received telegrams of condolence from Samuel J. Tilden, the Governors of various States, and numerous military officers of high rank.

The Mahone report, showing the sums appropriated for and expended on public buildings from March 4, 1789, to March 4, 1885,—assay offices, mints, and buildings in the District of Columbia being excluded,—gives the following figures of the amounts actually expended in the States named:

New York	$15,339,085	Indiana	$855,076
Pennsylvania	8,762,074	Minnesota	640,336
Massachusetts	8,357,114	Nebraska	628,316
Illinois	7,781,581	Iowa	606,658
Ohio	7,387,936	Wisconsin	601,723
Michigan	894,027

Laura Don, well known as an actress, died near Troy, N. Y.

WESTERN.

The boiler in a feed mill at Oshkosh exploded, killing the engineer, Walter Follett, and a laborer named Remmold, besides seriously injuring several other persons.

A Seattle (Wash. Ter.) dispatch of the 11th inst. says: "This city has become a military camp, and every corner is guarded by a sentry, and military rule is supreme. There has been no effort on the part of rioters to interfere, nor to even hold a meeting. They are without recognized leaders, and are utterly powerless to do anything so long as the military are under arms. There is, however, an intense feeling of bitterness against the militiamen who did the shooting on Monday, and it is openly threatened that they will be hanged as soon as military rule is relaxed. Precautionary measures against mob violence have been taken by the authorities of Portland and Olympia."

John G. Thompson died at Seattle, Wash. Ter., last week. He held the position of land-claim agent in Washington Territory by appointment of President Cleveland. He was 53 years of age, a native of Ohio, and spent his early life on a farm. He was a member of the Ohio Democratic State Central Committee from 1860 to 1883, during fourteen years of which he was Chairman of the Executive Committee. He was elected Sergeant-at-Arms of the House in the Forty-fourth Congress, and served three terms.

SOUTHERN.

Two passenger trains came into collision on the Iron Mountain Road, near Piedmont, Mo., three employes being killed and several travelers slightly injured. Both engines and eight coaches were wrecked.

Dr. C. Whittier, of California, has purchased 76,000 acres of land in Swain County, North Carolina, and will open a vast cattle ranch and build a new town.

At New Castle, Delaware, with the mercury in the neighborhood of zero, five thieves were lashed on their bare backs and a forger was placed in the pillory for an hour.

During a heavy fog at New Orleans the British steamship Castle Craig refused to obey her rudder and collided with several other vessels, doing about $70,000 worth of damage.

Near Graham Station, Kentucky, Mrs. Slater and her nurse and baby were drowned by the ice giving way beneath their sleigh.

WASHINGTON.

The following is the full text of Senator Allison's silver bill, introduced in the Senate the other day:

That hereafter any holder of silver coins of full legal-tender value may, at his option, present them in sums of $50, or any multiple thereof, at the Treasury, or at the Sub-Treasury in the city of New York, and receive therefor in exchange a like amount of gold coin or United States notes, and any holder of gold coin may in like manner present the same and receive therefor silver coins of full legal-tender value or United States notes; provided that nothing herein shall be construed to authorize the increase of the aggregate issue of United States notes now authorized by law, nor to restrict or limit the issue of gold or silver certificates as now provided by law.

SEC. 2. That sections 5143 and 5194 of the Revised Statutes are hereby repealed, and the words "lawful money," wherever in the statutes of the United States, shall be construed to include United States notes, gold, and silver of full legal tender.

SEC. 3. That all laws and parts of laws requiring the lawful money deposited with the Treasurer of the United States, as provided by section 5223, Revised Statues, to be held as a special fund for the redemption of notes of national banking associations, are hereby repealed, and all the money now deposited or which may hereafter be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States, as authorized by section 4 of an act entitled "An act fixing the amount of United States notes, providing for a redistribution of the national bank currency, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1874, shall be covered into the Treasury.

SEC. 4. That section 3 of the last-named act is hereby amended so as to authorize the redemption of national bank notes in gold or silver, and to authorize the deposit of gold or silver in lieu of United States notes required to be deposited by said section.

The Government suit to test the validity of the Bell telephone patent will be conducted by Solicitor General Goode, assisted by ex-Senator Thurman, of Ohio, Grosvenor Lowrey, of New York, and Eppa Hunton and Jeff Chandler, of Washington.

Attorney General Garland's attention was called to the widely published statement that the President had asked for his resignation, to which he replied:

"You may say that there is no truth in the report so far as I have been advised, and it occurs to me that I should know. You may further say that the reports that I have received gifts of the Pan-Electric stock or am a donee of that company are not correct. People seem to have forgotten my letter to the President dated Oct. 5, 1885." Turning to that letter the Attorney General read this sentence: "About three years ago I, with six or seven other gentlemen, entered into an organization known as the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, based upon what was called the Rogers invention. We formed that company in good faith and started in its operations. You will see from this," said the Attorney General, "that I was one of the original incorporators of this company, and as such entitled to stock." The President has said recently to friends that a request for the resignation of Mr. Garland was not in contemplation.

POLITICAL.

Chairman Morrison, of the Ways and Means Committee, a Washington correspondent informs us, has completed his tariff bill, and is having certain computations made to show the practical operation of the measure. Speaking of the bill in an interview the other day, Mr. Morrison said:

It is not the intention of this bill to go through the entire list of the schedules of dutiable articles, but to fix the duties on certain articles which are now classed too high or upon which rates are exorbitant, such as pig-iron, which is valued at $6.72, and would be high at $5, and steel rails, which bear 9-10 of a cent a pound and would be liberally cared for at $12 or $13 a ton. Sugars will also be reduced. In the schedule of cotton and woolen textiles, pottery, metals, and cotton there are many articles on which the duties are entirely too high and can be reduced from 10 to 40 per cent. on the present rates. As a rule all raw materials will be transferred to the free list. Iron ore, which now has a duty of 25 per cent., will be made free; so will lumber, hemp, and chemicals. Wool will not be disturbed at present, but certain manufactures will be scaled down. In fact, the free list will be substantially enlarged.

Mr. Morrison claims the bill will receive the united Democratic support. Mr. Randall says he has not seen the bill, nor has he been much consulted in regard to it, but in a general way he can say that he will oppose it if it strikes at the interests of his constituents, or will in any way tend to a cheapening of American labor. Mr. Morrison says it will take some weeks to consider the bill thoroughly in committee, but his plan is to report it, and pass it in the House as soon as possible.

A favorable report on the Hennepin Canal bill is considered as assured from the committee having it in charge.

The Democratic Congressional Committee at Chilton, Wis., nominated Thomas R. Hudd on the fifty-first ballot to succeed the late Joseph Rankin.

The President has nominated Stephen A. Walker to succeed Mr. Dorsheimer as United States Attorney for the Southern District of New York. Mr. Walker is now President of the Board of Education of New York City.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Business failures throughout the country for the week were 253 for the United States and 34 for Canada, a total of 287, as against 289 for last week and 329 for the week previous. Most of the failures were in the Southern, Western, and Pacific States.

According to the report of the New York Produce Exchange, the visible supply of grain on Feb. 6 was: Wheat, 54,197,045 bushels; corn, 7,251,352 bushels; oats, 1,824,398 bushels; barley, 1,750,207 bushels; rye, 715,067 bushels.

The Adams Tobacco Company, of Montreal, went into liquidation, with liabilities amounting to $175,000.

Rioting was resumed in Trafalgar Square, London, on the 9th inst., by ten thousand men, mainly of the lowest class, who were driven by the police into the side streets and dispersed. Burns, Champion, Hyndman, and Williams, the four principal leaders of the riots, called on Joseph Chamberlain, President of the Local Government Board. Mr. Chamberlain refused to see them personally, but replied to a statement in writing relative to the grievances of the workingmen with a letter in which he said he did not think any of the remedies proposed by the Social Democratic Federation would prove effectual to relieve the misery of the unemployed. He accompanied this statement with some vague promises of attention to the wants of the poor. His visitors went away dissatisfied.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

Touching the attitude of the Republican Senators toward the President, the Chicago Inter Ocean's (Rep.) Washington correspondent telegraphs that journal as follows:

There is considerable feeling upon the Republican side of the Senate, growing out of the action of some of the committees in reporting nominations to succeed suspended officials, which is claimed to be a violation of the programme adopted at a recent caucus, when it was decided to suspend action upon all such cases until the points at issue between the President and the Senate were decided. It is the policy of Edmunds and other leaders to hold in abeyance all of such nominations until the President or the members of the Cabinet send in the papers called for in suspended cases, to either finally reject them or to hang them up unconfirmed until the end of the session. Mr. Edmunds advances the proposition that the Senate cannot act intelligently upon a nomination until it knows why the vacancy it is to fill was made by the President, and if the latter refuses to furnish such information the Senate ought to punish him by refusing to confirm the nomination.

Employes in John P. Mullaly's stables at St. Louis, discovering that the building was on fire, undertook to save the horses, and were vigorously clubbed by two policemen, who claim to have mistaken them for thieves. The result was the cremation of sixty-two horses.

Daniel J. Dalton, Clerk of the Hamilton County (Ohio) Court, was arrested at Columbus at the instance of the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the House and brought before that body for contempt in refusing to allow the committee to make a photographic copy of the tally-sheet of Precinct A, Fourth Ward, Cincinnati, and also in failing to produce the original returns before the committee at Columbus. A resolution was adopted in the House by a strict party vote directing that Dalton be placed in jail for thirty days unless he furnished the returns.

Mr. O'Shea, the Parnellite candidate, has been elected member of Parliament from Galway.

The French Chamber of Deputies rejected a motion of want of confidence in the Government by a vote of 301 to 188.

MR. MITCHELL of Oregon introduced a bill in the Senate on the 11th inst. providing for the repeal of all treaties permitting the coming of Chinese to the United States and prohibiting their coming, except in the case of diplomatic and official personages. The Senate passed without amendment the House bill for the payment of the "Fourth of July" claims and a bill regulating the promotion of West Point graduates. The Blair education bill was called up in the Senate, and Senator Morgan (Ala.) delivered a long speech against it. He called it a bill to tax the honest, hard-working man in order to educate the children of the drunken, loafing vagabond. Forty of the sixty millions of people in the United States were dead-beats and non-producers, and the tax imposed on the remaining twenty millions, he said, would foot up $10 a head. The constitutional ground for the bill, Mr. Morgan continued, was said to be found in the "general-welfare" clause of the preamble to the Constitution. Such an application of that clause simply meant that you could pull down the man who got up by his own exertions, in order to put up a drunken loafer who would not exert himself. Senator Morgan characterized Senator Blair's idea as one involving the right of Congress to educate the children of the several States without the consent of the States. The Senate adjourned to Monday, Feb. 15. In the House, Mr. Bingham, of Pennsylvania, asked leave to introduce a bill granting a pension of $2,000 per annum to the widow of Gen. W. S. Hancock, but Mr. Beach, of New York, objected. The House passed the bill to enable national banks to increase their capital stock and to change their names or locations. The Fitz-John Porter bill came up in the House, and Mr. Haynes, of New Hampshire, opened the debate with a speech in its support. Mr. Steele, of Indiana, followed Mr. Haynes and opposed the bill, declaring that General Pope's famous order could and should have been obeyed by General Porter. A map of the scene of military operations in question having been hung upon a support in the space in front of the speaker's desk, Mr. Steele pointed out with a cane the movements of the various commanders. During the delivery of the speech Mr. Steele was interrupted but times by General Bragg, who took occasion to question the speaker's statements, and at the close of the speech the two had a brief controversy over the circumstances attending certain movements at the battle, during which General Bragg said: "I find that those who were not there know very much more about it than those who were." Mr. Steele replied: "In reply to that I have read the reports of as distinguished soldiers as ever did battle for any cause who were there."

EVICTING THE CHINESE.

Riotous Scenes at Seattle, Wash. Ter.—Chinamen Driven Aboard a Steamer.

They Are Shipped for San Francisco, with Steerage Passage Prepaid.

[Seattle (Washington Territory) telegram.]

At last the long-drawn-out anti-Chinese agitation has reached a culminating point so far as Seattle is concerned. It was thought by many when the United States troops were withdrawn from here that the agitation was dead, and as weeks went by without the commission of any overt act, this opinion was strengthened. As the event shows, however, the feeling was not very dormant, and the agitators have been quietly laying plans all the while. An effort was made to put these plans into execution to-day, though with what success can not be said. An anti-Chinese meeting was held last night, at which a committee was appointed for the ostensible purpose of visiting Chinatown and ascertaining whether the city sanitary regulations were properly observed by Chinamen. This committee commenced its work at 7 o'clock this morning, headed by Acting Chief of Police Murphy, and, accompanied by an enormous crowd which had apparently come together by previous understanding, it proceeded to Chinatown. The mode of procedure was simple. The committee would approach a Chinese house and knock at the door. When the occupants appeared they were asked questions concerning the observance of the cubic air and other city ordinances. While the conversation was in progress a crowd would enter the house and begin packing the contents upon a wagon which would appear at that juncture. It was useless for the Chinamen to resist, and they generally acquiesced with as good a grace as possible. When their movable goods were loaded in the wagon they were also placed on board and driven to the ocean dock, where the Queen of the Pacific was lying ready to sail for San Francisco. Not the slightest warning of this movement had been given, and the authorities were totally unprepared for it. The police force generally sided with the crowd, and made no effort to stop the work of removal. Sheriff McGraw was soon on the scene, and commanded the crowd to disperse, but it paid no attention to him. When he would collect a few citizens and attempt to interfere, the crowd would cease operations at that point, but carry them on without cessation in other quarters. This continued for several hours. Sheriff McGraw, Judge Green, and Mayor Yesler made such efforts as they could in behalf of the law, but without avail.

The Governor issued a proclamation "warning all persons to desist from breach of the peace, and that peacefully disposed persons shall retire to their homes, except such persons who are disposed to assist the Sheriff and the duly constituted civil authorities in maintaining law and order, and I request all persons who are disposed to assist in maintaining order to enroll themselves under the Sheriff immediately for that purpose. Furthermore, I order the military of this city to immediately place themselves under arms, and that the commanding officers of such companies report forthwith to the Sheriff of King County."

This was read to the crowd, and was received with a howl of defiance. It had absolutely no pacifying effect. An attempt was then made to ring the fire-bells, but they were soon silenced. Two local companies of militia and three companies of home-guards, organized at the time the United States troops were withdrawn, however, responded as quickly as possible, but by the time they were ready for action there seemed nothing for them to do.

About four hundred Chinamen were huddled together in a warehouse on the ocean dock, and an immense crowd prevented them from returning to their homes. Indeed, the majority of them showed much inclination to remain, as they were thoroughly cowed, and eager to get away. Officers of the steamship, however, refused to receive Chinamen without tickets. They prepared hot-water hose, and took every precaution to defend the vessel from any attempt to force the Chinamen on board. In this dilemma a collection was raised and enough subscribed to pay the passage of about a hundred. These were received on board, each one expressing a desire to go and declining the offers of officials to protect them from violence if they remained.

QUEER CASE.

Remarkable Effects of a Rattlesnake Bite.

[Jasper (Ga.) telegram.]

The condition of Mr. Sylvester Sams, a well-known citizen of this county, excites considerable interest. Two years ago Mr. Sams, while walking on his farm, was bitten by a rattlesnake. He immediately resorted to the native remedy in such cases, whisky, of which he took copious draughts. Nothing more was thought of the matter until six months ago, when Sams betrayed symptoms of St. Vitus dance. He is never still, not even in his sleep, twitching his muscles and moving incessantly. Later he has developed violent symptoms, so much so that he beat his wife and family and whoever comes within reach. He now acts like a man with a well-defined case of rabies, only instead of barking he makes a rattling sound. He has been taken to the Canton jail, where a strong guard can be kept over him until the result of his case can be reached.

HANCOCK DEAD.

Another Brave Soldier and Brilliant General Vanquished by the Dread Destroyer.

His Taking Off Sudden and Unexpected—A Sketch of the Deceased.

[New York telegram.]

Winfield Scott Hancock, Major General commanding the Department of the Atlantic, died at Governor's Island on Tuesday, the 9th inst. The cause of his death was a carbuncle, located on the back of his neck, combined with kidney trouble. The carbuncle first made its appearance Jan. 27, while the General was in Washington, whither he had gone on private business. He believed it to be a boil, and had it lanced. It caused him considerable annoyance for two or three days, but on Friday, the 29th ult., he felt in the best of health and spirits. He returned to New York on that day. The supposed boil began to trouble the General after his return to Governor's Island, and a week ago to-day Dr. Janeway pronounced it a carbuncle and began to treat it as such. Two days later the General's condition was apparently much improved. The carbuncle, however, broke out afresh on the 7th with a great deal of vigor. It grew worse and worse until 11 o'clock at night, when the General became delirious. The following day the kidney trouble was discovered, and the patient's condition was for the first time considered dangerous. Early this morning he became unconscious. Dr. Janeway called in Col. Charles Sutherland, Medical Director, and telephoned for Dr. D. M. Stimson, of this city, who soon put in an appearance. The physicians examined the patient, and soon saw that Gen. Hancock's hours were numbered. He sank steadily from that time forth until he died. Fears were entertained of uremic convulsions, and preparation was made to treat them, but they did not appear, and the General passed away quietly. In the room at the time, in addition to the physicians, were Gen. James B. Fry, Lieut. Eugene Griffin, an aid-de-camp; Hospital Steward Robinson, and Orderly John Ward, who had been in constant attendance on the sick man for several days past. The patient had been unconscious for about six hours previous to his death.

Mrs. Hancock was in the adjoining room when her husband passed away. She had been up with the General all night, and left him at four o'clock in the morning. Even then the sick man seemed to realize that his end was drawing near. As his wife imprinted a farewell kiss on his sunken cheek he murmured: "Oh, Allie, Myra, good——" Allie was a pet name by which he called his wife. The sentence was not finished. They were the last words he attempted to utter. With Mrs. Hancock, at the time of her husband's death, were her cousin, Mrs. Emma Bouvier, and Mrs. Eugene Griffin. The survivors of General Hancock's immediate family, aside from his widow, are his brothers Hillary Hancock, who was born his twin, and is a lawyer at Minneapolis, and Brevet General John Hancock. He was the father of two children, both of whom are dead. His daughter Ada died in March, 1875, and his son Russell died a year ago last December at his plantation in Clarksdale, Miss. The son left a widow and three children, one of them a boy, who has been living with the General at Governor's Island.

The News in Washington.

[Washington dispatch.]

A telegram announcing the dangerous illness of Gen. Hancock was received by the President about 1 o'clock to-day and was read to the Cabinet. Just after the Cabinet adjourned a second telegram was received conveying the intelligence of his death. The flag on the White House was immediately placed at half-mast, and the President soon after issued the following Executive order:

"Tidings of the death of Winfield Scott Hancock, the senior Major General of the army of the United States, have just been received. A patriotic and valiant defender of his country, an able and heroic soldier, a spotless and accomplished gentleman, crowned alike with the laurels of military renown and the highest tributo of his fellow countrymen to his worth as a citizen, he has gone to his reward. It is fitting that every mark of public respect should be paid to his memory. Therefore, it is now ordered by the President that the national flag be displayed at half-mast upon all the buildings of the executive departments in this city until after his funeral shall have taken place."

The President also sent the following telegram to Mrs. Hancock:

"Accept my heartfelt sympathy and condolence in your terrible bereavement. The heroism and worth of your late husband have gathered to your side in this hour of your affliction a nation of mourners."

The flag on the War Department building was placed at half-mast by order of the Secretary of War, and arrangements were made for the promulgation of a general order formally announcing Hancock's death to the army, which will be issued to-morrow. The Secretary of War also recalled the invitations he had issued for a reception to the officers of the army, navy, and marine corps for this evening.

Biographical.

General Hancock was born in Montgomery County, Pennsylvania, Feb. 14, 1824; he entered the West Point Academy in 1840, graduated in 1844, and in 1846 received his commission of Lieutenant of infantry. He served during the Mexican war, was promoted for his gallantry, and, having filled several subordinate posts, was made Assistant Quartermaster of the Western Department with the rank of Captain on the staff, which rank he held at the outbreak of the civil war. In 1861 he was appointed Brigadier General of volunteers, and served in the Army of the Potomac. He accompanied General McClellan's army to the Peninsula in 1862, and distinguished himself in the battle of Williamsburg.

At the battle of Fredericksburg, in December, 1862, he commanded a division which suffered severely, and for his meritorious conduct on this occasion he received a commission as major general of volunteers. He took part in the battle of Chancellorsville. When the advance of the Union and Confederate forces encountered at Gettysburg, July 1, 1863, and the Union forces were driven back, Hancock was sent forward by Meade to decide whether a general battle should be risked there, and if so, although he was outranked by Howard, who was on the field, was ordered to take the command until Meade should come up. In the decisive engagement July 3 Hancock's division bore the prominent part, although he himself was severely wounded early in the engagement. He recovered sufficiently to return to duty Dec. 27, 1863, but was unable to command a body of troops until April, 1864, when he was promoted to the command of the Second Army Corps and was engaged in all the battles of the Wilderness campaign, from May 5 to June 12, 1864, when the breaking out of the old wound received at Gettysburg compelled him to leave for a time. He returned to his command in July, and remained with it until Nov. 26, 1864, being subsequently engaged in lighter duties until the close of the war. He was promoted to be Brigadier General of the regular army in August, 1864, Brevet Major General March 13, 1865, and Major General of the United States army July 26, 1866.

After the war he was successively commander of the Middle Department, 1865-66; of the Missouri, 1866-67; of the Department of Louisiana and Texas, 1867-69, and of the Department of Dakota, 1869-72. Upon the death of Gen. Meade, November, 1872, the President, in acknowledgment of his great military services, appointed Gen. Hancock to the command of the Department of the East, with headquarters at Governor's Island, New York, a position which he held up to the day of his death, being one of the three Major Generals in the United States Army.

In 1868 Gen. Hancock was a prominent candidate for the Democratic nomination to the Presidency, which, however, was given to ex-Gov. Seymour. He secured the nomination in 1880, but was defeated in the election by Gen. Garfield, who received a popular majority of 7,018 and an electoral majority of 59 over Gen. Hancock.

MR. EDMUNDS' PRECEDENTS.

The Judiciary Committee's Report on the Relations of the Executive to the Senate.

[Washington special.]

Senator Edmunds has completed his report on the reply of the Attorney General to the Senate Judiciary Committee's application for information regarding a removed official. He has had the records overhauled for precedents, and is greatly pleased at what he has found. The following is in substance the historical portion of the Senator's report:

Three Senate committees have considered the whole subject of the relations of the Executive to the Senate and Congress, and have taken substantially the same position, that the Senate has a right to participate with the President in removals, as it has a right to participate with him in appointments, and that Congress has a right to enact almost any kind of a law regulating the exercise of the appointing power by the President. The first of these committees reported in 1826, and had Thomas H. Benton at its head. In 1835 John C. Calhoun had a committee created to consider the growth and the proper means of curtailing Executive patronage, and made a very able report, not much of which, however, was devoted to the matter of removals. In 1844 a third Senate committee was raised on this subject, and was headed by Senator Morehead, who made his report June 15, 1844. The Benton and Calhoun reports and the debates on the latter are attached to the Morehead report, which devotes more space than its predecessors to the alleged right of arbitrary removal possessed by the President. Senator Morehead said that the power of removal without cause and without the consent of the Senate was not only not conferred on the President by the Constitution, but was expressly withheld from him. He admitted that that power had been exercised without impeachment and without the acquiescence of the constituted authorities ever since the organization of the Government, but he pointed out that for the first thirty years removals were scarcely ever made except for cause, and with that practice he contrasted the practice of removals for political reasons, which began sixteen years before, and had been general for twelve years. It was not, he said, till 1826 that the Senate's attention was called to the President's assumption of power not belonging to him, and its attention was then called to it by the exercise of the appointing and removing power by a President who was elected by the House of Representatives after a heated and excited campaign. The committee then created (the Benton committee) reported in favor of Congressional regulation of the appointing power, and reported six bills to curtail the President's patronage, and also to repeal the four years act of 1820. One of these bills was to prevent the arbitrary removal of army and navy officers. None of these bills was acted on. The Calhoun committee reported two bills. One of these repealed the four years law, and made it the duty of the President to report to the Senate the reasons for every removal made during the recess; the other bill regulated the management of public deposits. The former bill passed the Senate after a most interesting debate by a vote of 31 to 16. Mr. Morehead describes this as the reclamation by the Senate of the power which, by the casting vote of the Vice President, was in 1789 yielded to the President, but which Congress has the right to reclaim at any time. Mr. Morehead argues the invalidity of the precedent of 1789 on account of the peculiar circumstances, George Washington then being President and the Senate being entirely new to its duties. Besides, he says, all that was then conceded was the President's power to remove for good cause. He admits that Madison argued for the President's power of removal, but he also points out that Hamilton, who was always on the side of a strong executive, said in No. 87 of the Federalist that the President could only remove with the consent of the Senate. Hamilton used this to allay the fear of those who thought the President might make a clean sweep on coming into office. Fisher Ames construed the Constitution as Hamilton did. "Down to 1828," says Mr. Morehead, "the power was not construed as authorizing the removal of honest, qualified men. The motive for its exercise was public policy—not party resentment." The report vigorously condemns allowing the President to divide the offices "as a victorious General distributes the spoils of conquest. A citizen of the United States," says the report in small capitals, "who accepts a public trust, however obscure his birth or humble his employment, has an inviolable right to be protected in the faithful discharge of his duties from the violence or the menaces of arbitrary power." Speaking of the newly introduced spoils system, the report says:

"Honest, capable, and faithful public servants have been removed from offices which they had filled with credit to themselves and advantage to the country to make room for incompetent parasites, whose meager qualifications for such offices were to be acquired at the expense of the Government, and whose experience was to be matured at a cost not to be estimated, consisting of losses to the nation perhaps never to be recovered. Diplomatic functionaries who had filled those stations with honor to themselves and their country have been recalled to make way for reduced to afford the means of corrupting the members of the National Legislature."

The resolutions attached to this report affirm the right of Congress to make laws regulating the appointing and removing power, denying the power of arbitrary removal to the President and the heads of the departments and declaring in favor of a law regulating qualifications of appointees and excluding improper interferences in State or Federal elections by officials. In the debate on repealing the four-year law, Mr. Calhoun attributed the needless increase of the public service to the President's power of removals, and he claimed that his party had pledged itself to repeal the four-year law and to restore to Congress the power of dismissing officials. Webster and Clay strongly supported Calhoun in denying the power of absolute removal to the President. Webster affirmed the power of Congress to reverse the action of 1789, and Clay offered an amendment to Calhoun's bill, providing that if the President's reasons were not satisfactory to the Senate, the removed official should resume his office. Webster affirmed the constitutional right of the Senate to demand of the President the reasons for his removal. Two years before this, in March, 1842, the House of Representatives by resolution called on the President and the heads of the departments for the names of all members of the Twenty-sixth and Twenty-seventh Congresses who were applicants for office, whether they applied in person or by friends, and what places they wanted. President Tyler refused to give the information, saying, in the first place, that applications for office were confidential communications to him, but he added:

"The appointing power, as far as it is bestowed on the President by the Constitution, is conferred without reserve or qualification. The reason for the appointment and the responsibility for the appointment rest with him alone. I cannot perceive anywhere in the Constitution of the United States any right conferred on the House of Representatives to hear the reasons which an applicant may urge for an appointment to office under the Executive Departments, or any duty resting upon the House of Representatives by which it may become responsible for any such appointment."

In the summer of the same year—July, 1842—the removal of a pension clerk named Sylvester by Secretary of War Spencer, created such a breeze that the House raised a select committee to investigate the matter. Garrett Davis was Chairman. This removal was not political. Webster demanded Sylvester's removal on the ground that he had spoken libelously of him. Garrett Davis reported three resolutions of which the second is as follows:

"Resolved, That both houses of Congress, and especially the House of Representatives, as the grand inquest of the nation, have a constitutional right at all times to free access to the executive departments of the Government for the examination of all papers therein, whether regarded by the head of the department as public or as private and confidential, and also to copies of such papers from the officer or officers having their custody, as either house may require."

DAKOTA SENATORS.

The Two Men Chosen to Represent the Prospective State in the U. S. Senate.

Hon. G. D. Moody.

Gideon D. Moody, one of the newly elected United States Senators from Dakota, was born in Cortland, N. Y., in 1832, entered the Union army, rising from the ranks to a colonelcy. Removing to Dakota he was made Speaker of the Assembly in 1868, and re-elected in 1874. In the years intervening he served as a member of the House. He was sent as a delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1883, and served as chairman of the committee appointed to prepare the memorial to the President and Congress setting forth Dakota's claim to sisterhood in the United States.

Hon. W. J. Edgerton.

W. J. Edgerton, the United States Senator-elect from Dakota, who, with Mr. Moody, his colleague, is in Washington awaiting recognition, has already served in the Senate. He was chosen to succeed the Hon. William Windom, of Minnesota, when the latter was chosen for Garfield's Cabinet. Upon the close of his Senatorial term he was commissioned, Dec. 23, 1883, Chief Justice of Dakota, which position he held until succeeded by the Hon. Bartlett Tripp.

BORED WITH BULLETS.

An Officer in Austin, Tex., Shot and Killed by a Drunken Scion of a Good Family.

[Houston (Tex.) special.]

For several days past Mr. Kyle Terry, a handsome man, about 26 years old, whose home is near Richmond, in Fort Bend County, has been visiting friends in this city. He has been indulging in liquor pretty freely, and last night became somewhat intoxicated. Officer Williams arrested Terry against the latter's protest, taking him to the station, but was released on the pledge that he would appear before the Mayor and answer to the charge of being disorderly. This morning he came upon Officer Williams, who was going toward the Court House. The very sight of Williams seemed to drive Terry crazy. He sprang toward the officer, uttering a terrible oath. Williams saw he was confronting a man crazed with drink, and jumped behind a passing colored man. When the negro saw Terry advancing, pistol in hand, he became frantic and tried to run, but Williams clung to his back with deadly tenacity. The colored man from sheer fright, it is thought, fainted, and with Williams still clinging to him they rolled off the sidewalk into the gutter. Terry followed, becoming apparently more excited at Williams' effort to escape. Bending over the prostrate negro, Terry emptied his self-cocking six-shooter into the prostrate form of his victim. He literally pumped lead into Williams without moving his arm. Each ball entered the body of the unfortunate man. The effects were noted by people who witnessed the affair from a distance, who say the body seemed to jump a few inches from the ground each time a bullet penetrated it. The fifth ball passed through the heart, and Williams rolled over dead, one hand still grasping the negro, who lay in an almost comatose condition, an unwilling witness to the awful crime. Terry was immediately arrested without resistance and taken to jail. Intense excitement has prevailed here all day, and an extra guard has been placed inside the jail to prevent possible lynching. Officer Williams was a general favorite on the force, and leaves a wife and three children. The Terrys have been for three generations among the most honorable citizens of the south. The prisoner is a son of General Frank Terry, of Confederate renown. Terry's Rangers were far-famed in war days. He comes from a fighting family, being a nephew of Judge A. W. Terry, of California, the slayer of Senator Broderick. Other members of the family have achieved distinction in legislative halls and on the bench of Texas.

A Dollar in the Mint.

The visitor followed an ingot into the coiners' department. The ingot has in its name, with its suggestions of treasure galleons and buccaneers, about all the romance there is in the nomenclature of money. It has in itself $50 worth of silver prepared by the melter for the coiners' use, the shape of a bar twelve inches long, two inches wide and half an inch thick. It has a rapid, varied and rather trying experience before it is on its way into dollar shape. The first room in the coiners' department was full of artisans rolling, drawing, cutting, and milling the ingots.

Thorough sheer force is the first of the coiner's art exercised on the ingot. That which the visitor had followed was inserted between the jaws of two huge rollers and slowly went through a process of deglutition down an iron throat. Twelve times it had to go through this ordeal, the pressure being increased by the narrowing of the space through which the ingot passed by a sixteenth of an inch each time. It is then twice its former length and so reduced in this press that when split in the middle the two bars which are produced are just the thickness of a dollar. The rolling process imparts a heat to the metal which necessitates the use of handling it and a brittleness to overcome which another trip to the furnace is required.

Some coiner of imperial Rome was doubtless a long time hammering out Judas' thirty pieces of silver. The machine which was working across the room from the rollers cut out in the minute which the visitors looked at it just eight times as many pieces as Judas sold his master for—240, all told—using up in the process about ten bars of metal which had been heated in a furnace and straightened in a drawing machine before they reached the cutter.

"It's like a girl cutting out cookies," said Colonel Maurice as he watched the big machine clanking silver like a greedy boy. Each bar of cuttings was bent into three folds by a workman as the machine finished with it and stowed in a box for a return to the melters. Then the milling machine was set whirling. It is a thick circular piece of steel with grooved edges, revolving in a circular hoop of steel, with the inside edges also grooved. A grist of the metal disks from the cutter was dropped into a tube, of which the bottom was the space between the whirling and the stationary grooves. Then the milling machine began scattering the disks from a slit in its circular side. The disks when they came out had a raised edge on each side. They began to look like dollars. Very dull and zinc-like looking dollars they were, however. The visitors followed them into an adjoining room, where they were plunged into an acid bath and then placed in a revolving wire cradle with a quantity of hot sawdust. There they were left, turning brighter and more dollar-like every moment.

The adjusting-room, where the tour next led, looked not unlike a meeting of a Dorcas society, for at least a dozen women—matronly looking for the most part—sat and stitched in knots of three and four, talking meantime in low tones.

"They are sewing coin bags," said Colonel Maurice in explanation.

But of all the flying fingers in the busy room, the most sentient and human seemed the steel digits of the coin press. It seemed a satire on humanity to one watching the workings of this machine that it should do so much and the mortal who ruled it should do so little. All the share the quiet lady-like looking woman who sat before the press had in its operation was in placing pile after pile of bright silver moons in its tube. Then at every three-quarters of a second the two steel fingers of the machine would catch the bottom moon of the pile, pilot it on its course to its place between the dies, and leave it there. Then, with a pressure of sixty tons exerted, every three-quarters of a second the head of Liberty above came down on the eagle beneath and the silver moons received their impress.

Piled on the table at the far end of the room the visitors saw heaps of dollars waiting to be marshaled forth in weighty columns to their tremendous work in the world. Four ordinary mortals—a man and three women—stood there with mechanical fingers busy among those dormant forces.

"They can count the output of $100,000 a day," said Colonel Maurice. "No, it doesn't require a special knack, only experience."—Philadelphia Press.

"WHEN we try to recall social England," says Thackeray, writing twenty-five years ago, "we must fancy it playing cards for many hours every day." The custom is well-nigh gone out now, but fifty years ago was general, fifty years before that was almost universal, in the country. "Gaming had become so much the fashion," says Seymour, "that he who in company should be ignorant of the game in vogue would be reckoned low bred and hardly fit for conversation." There were cards everywhere.

THREE years after her marriage to John Rolfe, who converted her to Christianity, Pocahontas was taken to England by her husband, being presented at court and being treated with marked attention by all classes. When about to return to her native land in 1617, she suddenly died, leaving a son from whom are descended the Tolling, Randolph, Fleming, and other families of Virginia.

—The Hillsdale Water Works are completed, and the first water was let into the pipes last week, and is now in full operation. The people of Hillsdale are delighted.

—By invitation of the South Carolina Bar Association, Thomas M. Cooley, of Ann Arbor, will deliver the annual address before them at Columbia, S. C., next December.

—The Springwells Dry-Dock Company, Detroit, recently increased hours of labor from nine to ten daily without increase of pay. The men, however, struck, and the company yielded.

—William Barnes, at Mackinaw City, was chopping ice from his house door when the ax struck a torpedo which had been dropped. The pieces passed through his clothing, ears, and probably put out his eyes.

—William Snyder committed suicide near Harvey by cutting his throat. He had been sent home from the insane asylum on the ground that he was not crazy, and his friends had abandoned their close watch of his movements.

—The fully completed figures of copper production by the Lake Superior mines for 1885 have just been finished. The total production of smelted copper was 71,150,000 pounds. This is only 1,850,000 pounds more than the product of 1884.

—Judge Brown, at Detroit, decides that it is competent for a vessel-owner to show that he delivered all the grain laden on his vessel, despite the terms of the bill of lading, and that a master has no authority to bind the vessel or her owners for cargo not laden on board.

—The Sturgis Furniture Manufacturing Company's works, with contents, have been destroyed by a fire, caused in a peculiar manner. A workman was standing in front of the stove, when the back of his coat caught fire. From the coat the flames seized on inflammable oils and the building was soon on fire.

—Things look as though the university boys would not get even the brief apology for a gymnasium which they have been attempting to boom at the roller rink. President Angell, Trustee of the gymnasium fund, some $3,000 in money made at the field-day exercises and entertainments, says that he does not feel that he could part with any of it to be used off the campus. The students asked for $150.

—At the Farmers' Institute at Rochester, Prof. R. C. Carpenter, of the Agricultural College, read his paper on the "Reclamation of Swamps," in which he showed that the first step in improvement must be drainage, which will fit most swamps for pasture or meadow lands. Top-dressing of manure or lime is essential on many swamps and for crops generally. The element of time is also necessary; muck must be allowed to decay. The celery and peppermint are especial crops that do well on muck. Grain will do well after some years of cultivation, but not at first.

Capital Punishment.

Much is being said throughout the state by the press and otherwise in favor of the establishment of the whipping post, capital punishment, and other means of more severe modes of dealing with our criminals. This we think is all wrong. The trouble is not with our modes of punishment, nor the severity of the punishment, when convictions are had; but the trouble is with the machinery for the trial of criminals. It is almost impossible to convict one of crime at the present age of the world, as our laws governing the trial of criminal cases are all in favor of the criminal. Courts and juries seem to forget that the people have any rights to be subserved, and the benefit of every doubt, whether in the law or the evidence, is given to the prisoner. The people have no right of appeal to a higher court, no matter what errors are committed by the trial court, and a motion for a new trial will not be entertained no matter what new evidence may be discovered or what frauds may be perpetrated upon the people by the trial jury. These things are all wrong. The people should have some rights which courts and criminals are obliged to respect.

Lawyers are sent to the legislature who are interested in making defenses in criminal cases as easy as possible. Thus laws are framed and passed which are decidedly in favor of the criminal; and should a law be passed which savors of a subserviency of the people's rights, with reference to crimes, the court in the trial of the case under it, will so construe the law as to deprive it of all utility, and the people are again without remedy. We think legislation is needed in this matter, but it should be in the direction of simplifying the rules of evidence, and regulation of the trial of cases, and not by inflicting more severe penalties for the violations of laws.

"Michigan Lumber."

"A Grand Rapids lumberman predicts that Michigan lumber will be used up in five years."—Roscommon News. The prophecies of the Grand Rapids man will certainly be fulfilled if many such contracts as the following are filled from our forests:

A contract has been made by the Michigan Central railroad company with a lumber manufacturing firm on the Mackinaw division north of Bay City. It calls for the drawing to market five hundred million feet of lumber in the next ten years. The terms are private, but satisfactory to both parties.

Five hundred million feet of lumber! Hesitate a moment and think of that immense quantity.

An ordinary flat car is two rods long and is capable of carrying ten thousand feet of lumber. To transport five hundred million feet it will require fifty thousand cars, or a train over 512 miles long, or 2,500 trains of twenty cars each, exclusive of locomotives.

Five hundred million feet of lumber will build twenty thousand ordinary houses, or four cities of 20,000 population, and it would build a fence nearly four feet high around the entire globe.—Bay City Tribune.

The Telephone Suits.

Fault is found with the administration for bringing a suit to invalidate the Bell telephone patent, simply through the ignorance or depravity of the fault finders.

Bell obtained two patents—one in March, 1876; the other in January, 1877. The first one was held to be invalid, because it was not a working electrical telephone, and the second one because it embodies ideas and inventions already established by other inventors, including especially that of Professor Philip Reis, of Germany. Once his first and useless patent, he did indeed produce an instrument which transmitted words, and under his second patent has used it. But its arrangement was based, it is claimed, upon Reis' instrument and upon discoveries made by Edison and other inventors. In addition to this the charge that he fraudulently secured from Gray's caveat ideas which he proceeded to embody in his patent of 1876, and exhibited at the Philadelphia Exposition a telephone substantially the same as that described in Gray's caveat, but wholly unlike that described in Bell's patent. Every claim in the invention or discovery described in the Bell telephone was shown before Secretary Lamar to have been used prior to 1876 by a score of different inventors; not that any one of them invented a telephone, but that their discoveries and inventions of various kinds in that direction were used by Bell in developing his instrument.

Such is the case against Bell, and upon this showing the interior department ordered the suit begun. If it is successful it will throw open the whole field of telephony and abolish or prevent all monopoly.

The Bohemian Oat Swindle.

Noticing a great many items concerning the Bohemian oat swindle, we wrote to Prof. Johnson, of the Agr'l college, asking the methods of proceedure by which the farmers have lost half a million. The following is Prof Johnson's reply:

STATE AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE. }
Lansing, Mich., Feb. 12, 1886. }

EDITOR JOURNAL, Sir:—The Bohemian oat swindle is carried on in different ways, but mainly, as I am able to learn, as follows: A smooth tongued agent offers the farmer the oats at $10.00 per bushel, cash or note, usually the latter method of payment and agent agrees to take, or sell for the purchaser, all the oats raised from the seed bought of the agent, at so many dollars per bushel. The notes are sold, the contracts prove worthless, the farmer has to pay his note and concludes that he has been badly sold. At a farmer's institute I attended at Eaton Rapids last week it was stated that one bank in that city had $1,000 of these notes given by the farmers in the vicinity, and that $50,000 worth had been sold in three of these central counties. It is a marvel that farmers can be duped in this way after the repeated warnings of the press and those who have suffered.

The oats shell badly, I am told, and are not worth either for seed or feeding purposes any more, if as much, as our ordinary white oats.

Yours truly. SAMUEL JOHNSON.

BEWARE.

Coughs, colds, and slight throat diseases often develop into bronchitis, seated cough, consumption, etc., and should have immediate attention and be removed in the first stages. Not only public speakers, but all, are liable to throat troubles and to obtain relief should use HALLOCK'S COUGH TROCHES, which relieve coughs, and hoarseness, making the articulation clear. Warranted to give satisfaction. Price 25 cents per box.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crozier, Charlevoix, and Crozier & Harris, Ironton.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, as flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after rubbing warm, is a common attendant. Blind, bleeding and itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crozier. 152.

Remorse to Health.

Health is wealth. Wealth means independence. Take Kennedy's Discovery, Kennedy's Cough and Lung Syrup, the best Cough Syrup in the world. Cures Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Hoarseness and Consumption. Cures those terrible Lung Diseases, Pleurisy, Pain in the Side, Chest and Back. Every case warranted. Take no other. Price "Discovery" and Syrup, $1.00. Samples free. Sold by G. W. Crozier. 1

Mr. M. Scott, late of Harbor Springs, has bought Geo. Pappin's lease of the blacksmith shop in Washburn & Ackert's foundry building, and proposes to become a permanent citizen of Charlevoix. He claims an experience of 35 years in the business, which ought to place him in the front rank as a skilled workman. He gives especial attention to horseshoeing, and desires to meet the farmers of the surrounding country.

We have received a copy of "Midsummer Wandering in Northern Wisconsin and Michigan," which in addition to excellent engraving, is full of interesting and well-written articles descriptive of the scenery. The book is a model of typographical beauty, and, in addition to the information it contains for tourists, is worthy preservation as a work of art. It will be mailed free to any address on application to Chas. V. McKinlay, Milwaukee, Wis.

A. D. Crnickshank and G. W. Cronter have each been promoted by the I. O. O. F. Mr. Cruickshank went to the Grand Encampment as Grand Sentinel, to which position he was elected last year; but he returned as Grand Marshal. Mr. Cronter attended the Grand Lodge and was appointed Grand Conductor and nominated for Grand Junior Warden. The Grand Encampment is to be held in Muskegon next year; and the Grand Lodge in Jackson.

A late correspondent of the Albion Republican writes some facts from Florida not usually found in guide books and real estate circulars. At Orlando, hay sells for $30 a ton, milk 15 cents a quart, cabbage 5 cents a pound, small fowls 60 cents a piece, northern beef 25 cents a pound. If these articles were raised there in abundance it would be well enough, but they are not, all having to be shipped in from the north. To keep the orange trees and vegetables thrifty 10,000 barrels of commercial fertilizer are required annually, at a cost of $50 a ton. It requires a steady stream of fresh blood and capital from the north to keep the country healthy The chief product of the soil is malaria. Before moving there to settle we would advise our neighbors here to compare this with some of the flowery real estate circulars, and then calmly compute the real difference in advantages between that state and this, and see if the benefits will warrant the expenses of a change. It is also a fact that the orange groves, which produce such large crops, cost all they are worth to bring them up to the high standard, and are a continual expense to keep them up. Good land is high priced; cheap land will raise nothing and is worse than useless. It would be well to state that the gentleman who writes the letter is not a transient, but has invested considerable property there, and is doing as well as anyone in the community.

The new covered stage recently put on the Petoskey and Charlevoix route, reminds one of the age in which he lives,—a thing which cannot be said of every stage. Of course it is not quite like a palace car, although so tastefully painted. It is substantially and tightly made, well lighted with windows and sash doors, well ventilated, and heated by a nice little sheet iron stove, that could not spill fire if the coach should capsize. The floor is double and carpeted and the seats cushioned. He who wants a better conveyance ought to be obliged to stay at home winters until Charlevoix has a railroad.

The masquerade was a great success, netting the Boy's Band a handsome profit, besides furnishing an abundance of genuine sport to a large party of young people, and older people with young hearts. The boys deserve their success too; for they have given long hours of hard work in their practice. Their new caps and torches give them quite a dazzling appearance on the street in the evening, and their playing shows steady improvement. They gave the masquerade the same persistent labor they do their music, and have the satisfaction of the largest attendance, except possibly one, of any dance ever held in Charlevoix.

The Historical Society.

The "howling elements" were entirely excluded from the covered bus; the ladies arriving like feathers in a bandbox. The spacious parlors of Mr. and Mrs. O. D. Wood were soon filled and the meeting called to order by the genial president, E. H. Green. Mr. Kane read a selection from a famous speech of Daniel Webster, in which the present conflict between senate and executive was foreshadowed and suitable remedies suggested. W. A. Smith, accompanied by his daughter, Florence, favored the audience with a tenor solo. After intermission a beautiful piano duet was executed by Mrs. O. D. Wood and Mrs. F. A. Smith. Then came the paper of the evening on "Chinese Gordon," by Chas. J. Strang; after which Dr. Carlstein gave a bass solo. "I Cannot Sing the Old Song." Mrs. E. M. Clark then read a beautiful poem from Longfellow, which closed the program,—except the matter of getting home, which proved to be the fun-producing feature of the evening.

The next meeting is with Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Upright. Paper by Mrs. O. S. Washburn; subject, "Isabella of Spain."

Wedding Bells.

On Monday evening, Feb. 22d, Mr. Lyman B. Price, of Charlevoix, and Miss Francis M. Norris, of Elk Rapids, were married by Rev. Mr. Morrell, at St. Paul's church, Elk Rapids, in the presence of 250 invited guests. After the wedding, a reception was held at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. L. Price, which was also attended by a very large number of friends of the bride and groom. Mr. and Mrs. Price returned to Charlevoix on Tuesday, where they expect to make their future home. "May they live long, and prosper."

The Murderers of Higgins.

The parties arrested for the murder of Peter Higgins,—his wife and nephew,—proved to be the right ones. Mrs. Higgins confessed to have gone after the mattock, while the nephew held her husband down and choked him. And then she stood by and saw him dealt the ten blows which caused death, after which she stood guard while the remains were buried, putting a rosary and cross over his face.

The nephew, finding all had come out, made substantially the same confession. Both are held for trial.

Around the County.

Letter from D. C. Loveday.

Charlevoix, Feb. 22, 1886.

EDITOR JOURNAL, Sir: Will you allow me through the columns of your valuable paper, in justice to myself and the citizens of Charlevoix county, to correct a false report that is in general circulation in this county, to the effect that the county has had to pay me the sum of $100 for use of my hall in East Jordan for court purposes.

Mr. B——, of the township of Eveline, made it his business to call on me a short time since, to learn the facts in the case, as it was told to him for a fact by a leading citizen of the township of Wilson, who took dinner at his house on the second of February, that I presented a bill of $100.00 to the last session of the board of supervisors of Charlevoix county, for rent of my hall for county purposes, and that said bill was allowed and an order drawn to pay it.

I have never presented a bill to Charlevoix county for anything, as the county records will show; and furthermore, the county holds a lease of my hall for the nominal sum of $1 per year, for as long as East Jordan retains the county seat.

Now, Mr. Editor, whether the parties stating this base falsehood, had been misinformed, and did it innocently, or whether it was done with malicious intent, either to injure me individually, or the people of our neighboring village of East Jordan, I could not say; but if the latter was the intent, (as it seems to be by the story's being used so generally in connection with county seat arguments), the originators must have been as shortsighted as they were when they got up the Traverse City & Boyne Falls Branch of the G. R. & I. via Elk Rapids, Norwood, Charlevoix, Ironton, Boyne City and Cape Horn.

The county records will show in this case, as in the letter of the officers of the G. R. & I. did in the other.

Truth, ratified, then falsehood, will win the people's vote.

That Jersey calf which has received notice far beyond what is usually accorded to calves of the common herd, feels its oats and is thriving accordingly, while the little Durham, which has lately arrived to act as its companion, suffers from a feeling of neglect and mourns the lack of appreciation on the part of Messrs. Editors of the JOURNAL and Enterprise, who have failed to extend to it the hand of journalistic fellowship.

The entertainment given by the young ladies' society Monday evening was well attended and passed off pleasantly. The object of the gathering was more for social enjoyment than profit, but a bountiful supper was provided, which afforded both pleasure and profit, increasing the deposits of the young ladies' treasury over twenty-five dollars.

FOLDED IN

BY WILLIAM MAUGHTON.

God gave me one ewe lamb, so fair,
So beautiful was she
That life was but perpetual prayer
That she might happy be—
Safely sheltered from the world's unrest,
Its sorrow and its sin;—
The Saviour called her to His breast,
And she was folded in.

Ah! Then my heart was desolate,
And life seemed dark and cold;
So long to weep, so long to wait
Outside the Shepherd's fold.
And yet, I knew a crown more fair,
No life prolonged could win,
As when, in answer to that prayer,
My lamb was folded in.

For her sweet sake I'll bear the cross,
The trial and the pain,
For mine is but an earthly loss,
And her's a Heavenly gain.
Safe sheltered from the world's unrest,
Its sorrow, and its sin,
She sleeps upon the Shepherd's breast,
Forever folded in.

THE COLONEL'S SECRET.

A little more than two years ago, when the Jesse James gang and other organized bands of train robbers and desperadoes were being wiped out pretty rapidly throughout Missouri, I was still, notwithstanding years of conscientious study and ambitions dreams, nothing more than a locally popular stock-actor in St. Louis, with little prospect of a sudden, high-vaulting advancement in the profession.

However, both Mabel and I were in fine spirits. At last she could fulfill her vow of residing once more under the long-desolated roof-tree of her family homestead before marrying, and I was soon to be the fortunate possessor of her hand, as I had long been of her heart.

Mabel was not an actress, though her father, Colonel Dearborn, had made his fortune as a theatrical manager, and her earliest associations had been allied with the realities and traditions of the stage.

Our marriage engagement had been a peculiar one.

Five years previously, Colonel Dearborn's elegant country-seat, occupying a commanding but isolated position on the Iron Mountain Railroad, had, during the family's temporary absence, been attacked, sacked and disfigured by mounted robbers, presumably of the James band. The depredations for the time being had full swing, and the communities thereabout were wholly terrorized.

Exasperated at the failure of the authorities to suppress the outlaws and protect law-abiding citizens, the old Colonel had but once revisited Glenwood, as the place was called, and then taken up his residence in St. Louis, there to remain until more settled times.

He was accompanied by Mabel, his motherless child, then a lovely girl of sixteen, and by his sister, a maiden lady of uncertain age, who had also been an actress of prominence in the old days of Ben Debar's New Orleans and St. Louis management. Mabel's mother had died in bringing her into the world, and this lady, Miss Winslow, had nobly and conscientiously filled the maternal place.

Colonel Dearborn had known me from my childhood, both my father and mother having filled professional positions under his management. He now welcomed me as a visitor to his city home. I was soon on terms of intimacy with the transplanted household. The latter was further increased about this time by the arrival of the Colonel's nephew, Clifford Wharton, a young, strolling actor of about my own age, but of cloudy and presumably disreputable antecedents, from somewhere along the Arkansas border.

But the old manager's cherished hope of at last ending his days in the peace and seclusion of his beloved Glenwood was cut short by an interference as seldom provided for as it is vaguely feared. Sudden death by an apoplectic stroke carried him off just as the moral atmosphere of the robber-infested interior was clearing up, and he was beginning to think of returning to his estate.

As a near friend, I was hastily summoned to his death-bed, but reached it, accompanied by his physician, barely in time to receive his last sigh. We found only his daughter present, Miss Winslow being absent on a brief visit. Mabel was terribly agitated, and had evidently received some important communication from her father before the fatal stroke had deprived him of speech. The dying man managed to shake his head hopelessly, as the physician approached, though upon perceiving me his face lighted up.

By a great effort, he seized his daughter's hand and mine, and joined them together across his body.

"All I leave is hers, and she is yours!" he gasped. "You are executor—you will see to everything!" Then, turning his glazing eyes on Mabel, he said to her, faintly but impressively, "Remember!" after which he breathed his last.

My own sense of bereavement was great, for I had come to regard Colonel Dearborn as my best friend. But this sense was relieved by what had just taken place, for, though I had not concealed my growing passion for his daughter, I had not yet ventured to ask him for her hand. But this closing act of his life had at once dissipated my doubts, and, as I was already sure of Mabel's heart, led me to believe that she would become my wife after the usual period of mourning should have elapsed.

As I led her, weeping, from the chamber of death, I saw her cousin, Clifford Wharton, cross the passage from the vicinity of another door leading out of the same room. This gave me an impression that he might have been an unperceived witness of the interview between the old manager and his daughter before my arrival with Dr. L——. However, I thought little of this at the time, for, though I did not like Wharton, and knew that his uncle had never fully trusted him, I had no reason to doubt his sincerity. Nevertheless, as he went by us in the passage and down the staircase, without Mabel having noticed him, he started from his attitude, which had signified both grief and terror, and threw me a glance of such malevolence and triumph that I was both puzzled and placed on my guard, for it was not unknown to me that he had strenuously essayed to make love to his cousin before her preference for me had been so plainly indicated as to leave him without a shadow of hope in that direction.

I left Mabel at the door of her chamber in charge of Miss Winslow, who had just got back home to learn the sad intelligence. After speeding away the frightened servants, who had assembled on the staircase landing, and saying something to soothe their fears, I was returning to the death-chamber, when I met Dr. L—— coming out of it, with something troubled and stern in his face.

"I don't understand Colonel Dearborn's death," said he, taking me into a recess. "It seems that Mabel found him lying speechless on his bed, grasping a cup that had held a composing draught, which he had kept in readiness to take upon feeling the dangerous symptoms against which he had been frequently warned. He had just drunk off the contents, and was yet past help when you and I were summoned. This is what I do not understand."

"Pray explain," said I, anxiously.

"The stroke he received was not necessarily fatal in itself," said Dr. L——. "The composing draught must have relieved it unless"—he looked at me significantly—"unless it may have been tampered with. However, I am not wholly certain of this; but I think that you will agree with me that a post-mortem should be had."

"Undoubtedly!" I exclaimed, astonished and horrified.

"Good! Try to get Miss Dearborn's consent to the examination, but without exciting her suspicions of foul play. You know how reluctant women are in such matters. In the meantime, I shall neither say nor do anything."

I promised, not doubting my ability to bring Mabel to a proper consideration of the subject, and the physician went away. But in this I was mistaken. Nothing that I could say, or hint, or urge could induce either Mabel or Miss Winslow to consent to a post mortem examination. Young Wharton, to my surprise, supported me strongly in my efforts to persuade them—though with hypocritical over-eagerness, I afterward thought—but all to no purpose. Their feminine association of such an examination, with the idea of desecration of the dead was invincible. They even caused Dr. L—— to forego his insistance toward the last; a certificate of death from natural causes was given, and the remains of the old theatrical manager were borne to their last resting-place without it being generally known that anything mysterious had attended his death.

Now came another surprise for me. Col. Dearborn had left no written will. In this case Mabel was of course his sole heiress, as, indeed, she would have been without the injunction embodied in her father's dying words, and which had likewise constituted me his executor. But to my own surprise, and that of nearly every one else, it proved that he had left hardly anything available. He had lived expensively, drawing from time to time upon a large sum of money which he had deposited in two of the St. Louis National Banks. Of this sum only twelve hundred dollars now remained, and as his farming lands about Glenwood had long lain in neglect, it seemed that this modest sum was, for some time at least, to constitute Mabel's sole fortune. However, she continued to draw upon it with great complacency, after reducing her household considerably, as though in anticipation of a windfall of whose nature she would only hint to me in a mysterious way; having been pledged to secrecy, as she said, by her father before my arrival with Dr. L—— at his death-bed. I was so deeply in love that I would have cared nothing for this if she would only have married me without delay. But she had also promised her father that she would put off her marriage until she should once more be established with safety as the mistress of Glenwood.

Well, I had submitted with the best grace I could, and now here at last, having finished my engagement with the —— Theater Stock Company, I was apparently on the threshold of my reward.

It was six months after Colonel Dearborn's death. The organized bands of train-robbers, bank-brokers and horse-thieves were said to have been wholly broken up or scattered, all the southern counties were reported sufficiently safe and quiet to warrant Mabel in resuming the occupancy of Glenwood. Our wedding-day was fixed upon, and I was to set out forthwith for the locality that bade fair to see the fruition of my fondest hopes, as an escort of my bethrothed and her aunt.

I should have mentioned that Clifford Wharton, who had been accustomed to absent himself frequently and misteriously from Mabel's house, in which he still had his quarters, had latterly disappeared so completely that nothing had been heard of him for several weeks.

Ordinarily, nothing would have been thought of this. The fellow was a fair actor, especially in scrio-comic, foppish parts, if he had cared to exert himself and hold his opportunities, and I had twice secured him good engagements at the —— Theater. He had sacrificed them successively, through his indolence and dissipated habits, and I had grown to regard him as a worthless, ungrateful young man, undeserving of further countenance; but now there came rumors of his having committed a downright forgery, in connection with the signature of Mr. Whitcombe, the Treasurer of the —— Theater. It was only to a small amount, indeed, but still sufficient to explain his continued absence, and to cause both Mabel and her aunt mortification and distress, should they come to hear of it.

This, however, I took care to avoid, as the wedding-day was near at hand, and I was solicitous that no shadow of a cloud should interfere with our happiness; but it was fated to be otherwise.

Early on the morning of the day we were to set out for Glenwood, I was breakfasting with Mabel and Miss Winslow, in high spirits. Suddenly Mabel, who had been the first to appropriate the morning newspaper, gave an alarmed exclamation.

"What is it?" I cried.

She recovered herself, laughed nervously, and, handing me the journal, pointed to a telegram.

It was to the effect that a reorganized band of mounted desperadoes, doubtless composed of the scattered remains of the Jesse James and other gangs, had just made a final raid in the vicinity of Glenwood, where they had robbed and despoiled right and left, even digging up house-grounds and orchards, in the hope of unearthing hidden treasure, before being once more dispersed and driven back to the Arkansas mountain line, with a loss of many killed, wounded and captured, by the combined sheriffs' posses of three counties.

"Why, this amounts to nothing," said I, lightly. Glenwood mansion could offer little more to the rascals' cupidity, after their ransacking of long ago, and as for any treasure having been buried there, the idea is absurd."

Mabel changed the topic, and, by the time breakfast was finished, had quite recovered her spirits.

But just then the servant brought her a telegraphic dispatch, which she had no sooner read than she seemed ready to faint.

"Oh, oh! read it!" was all she could say, as she threw me the dispatch.

It was from Wharton, was dated Boone Corners (a village near Glenwood,) and ran as follows:

"Robbers have ripped up everything at Glenwood. Could your father have buried any money there? Entire house-grounds spaded up. Not even your birthday laurel escaped. All safe now. Shall investigate more fully to-morrow."

"Oh, it is gone—gone!" sobbed Mabel, as I looked inquiringly at her. "All the money—the fortune with which I was to surprise you on our wedding-day."

I besought her to calmness, when she at last astounded me by an explanation.

"This was my father's death-bed revelation to me," she said. "He had a morbid distrust of banks as depositories of great sums. Just before the first sacking of Glenwood he had disposed of all his other property for cash. The sum realized was one hundred and seventy thousand dollars. Twenty thousand dollars of this he secured here in St. Louis, as a fund to live on until we could dwell once more with safety in our dear old household. The remainder—one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, in gold and legal tenders—he secretly buried at Glenwood during his last hurried visit there. The spot was under my birthday laurel—a bush that papa had planted just east of the mansion, in commemoration of my birth, and afterward attended himself with care and pride. He had succeeded in imparting this secret to me just before you and Dr. L—— entered the room where he was dying. He had at the same time enjoined me to retain the secret inviolate until the day of my marriage under the old rooftree, when I was to have it unearthed in the presence of my husband, and present it to him as my unexpected dowry. He feared that I might otherwise be wooed and won solely for my fortune. This unlooked-for wealth was to reward the true man who should have loved and married me for myself alone. But now it is gone, gone! Oh, who could have guessed or betrayed the buried treasure's secret? I alone was with my father when he revealed it. I never talk in my sleep, nor have I for a single instant forgotten his injunction to secrecy. It is incomprehensible!"

During Mabel's recital, my mind was alert and busy, as you may well believe, and I had gradually recurred to the suspicions circumstances attending Colonel Dearborn's death which had almost escaped my memory.

"Well, there's no use repining," said I at last, with a cheerfulness that surprised both Mabel and her aunt. "Remember, my darling, that the dowry you were to have brought me is not hopelessly lost until we shall altogether have failed to find its purloiner. Come, hasten with your preparations, and we will be off by the forenoon train, instead of later, as we had intended. While you and Miss Winslow are getting ready, I will take a look through the house."

My decision of manner proved infectious. While they were preparing for the journey I pretended to visit a guest-room I had occasionally occupied, but in reality devoted myself to thoroughly searching the one adjoining, which had been Clifford Wharton's when at home, and was still filled with his belongings.

I found that for which I searched, and, excusing myself to the ladies, hurried off to Dr. L——'s office, which was not far distant. It was with a feeling of yet greater satisfaction that I returned to Mabel's house a little later, and we set out upon our journey without further delay.

We arrived at Boone Corners early in the afternoon. Here, while waiting for a conveyance to Glenwood, three miles distant, I sought an interview with Sheriff B——, whom I chanced to know personally, and obtained permission from him to converse with the prisoners captured on the preceding day. But a brief interview with them served to convince me that the robbers had had nothing to do with digging up the grounds at Glenwood.

"We only ripped up two or three gardens nearer town," said one of the fellows, "and gained nothing by even that. It stands to reason we wouldn't have bothered with Glenwood. It was out of our plan, and we knew it to have already been cleaned out years before."

When we set out for Glenwood, an hour later, we were accompanied by Sheriff B—— and several of his men.

The house and grounds were found less devastated than I had expected, though both Mabel and her aunt shed tears at the havoc that had disfigured the stately old place.

Wharton met us in the garden. He had two or three friends with him, young men of the neighborhood, and I noticed that he was haggard and ill-at-ease; though he strove to dissipate this impression, and at first seemed unaffectedly miserable over the way in which the grounds had been dug up.

"Just look, Mabel!" said he at last, after conducting us to where the laurel lay uprooted. "What an outrage! The villains have not even spared your birthday laurel!"

Having already made certain observations, I signed Mabel to let me reply to him.

"It does seem odd, Wharton," said I, "that the villain or villains should have uprooted this shrub over all others."

"It is odd," he admitted.

"Yes," I went on; "for I noticed elsewhere that the grounds have only been comparatively scarred, without so much as a tree or a plant having been seriously disturbed. One would suppose the villain or villains had expected to unearth something particularly valuable from under this particular laurel."

"What do you mean?" he cried, for my tone was significant.

"Villain—murderer!" I shouted in a voice of thunder—no stage-thunder at that; "I mean that you are the villian—that you are the thief of the golden treasure that was concealed under that laurel bush!"

Changing from white to red in a flash, he drew his revolver with a hoarse cry, but was quickly disarmed by the sheriff's men.

"Oh, you have wrought cunningly, but in vain, Clifford Wharton!" I went on; "for the evidence that has come to light, pointing you out as your uncle's murderer, will be equally unerring in tracking you down as the purloiner of his daughter's buried dowry from under the roots of that laurel bush! Deny the charge, if you can, forger—murderer—poisoner!"

Mabel and her aunt suddenly clung to each other, with exclamations of horror, while Wharton's companions and others were scarcely less affected by these startling accusations.

"Murderer! poisoner!" echoed Wharton, in a faltering voice. "It is false! You can not prove it! What mean you?"

"Look! One of the proofs, at least, is here!" I cried, displaying a phial of almost colorless liquid which I had found among other bottles and phials in a small closet in his room, and whose contents I had subsequently submitted to Dr. L——'s critical analysis. "Behold the poison—the hydrocyanic acid—with which you adulterated Colonel Dearborn's composing draught when you secretly saw him reel into his room under the partial apoplectic stroke which, but for your tampering with the draught, might not have proved fatal."

All this was mere induction and bold conjecture on my part, but, from the frightful change that had taken place in the accused, I saw I had hit the mark, and hastened to push my advantage.

"Dare you deny the truth of my charge?" I went on. "Dare you deny, either, that, after witnessing the effect of the deadly draught, you hid behind the headboard of your victim's bed, where you overheard the secret of the buried treasure imparted by Colonel Dearborn to his daughter with his dying words? What will you then say when I have convinced you that a recent examination of your victim's remains has revealed the presence of a poison identical with the contents of this phial, and that only this morning the druggist was found who sold you this poison, and is willing to identify you as the purchaser? Speak, wretch! dare you deny aught that I have charged upon you?"

His knees were now knocking together, and his conscience-stricken agony was pitiable to witness.

"Mercy! mercy!" he gasped. "It is the retribution of Heaven!"

"It is not I, or even this poor girl, whom you have so ruthlessly orphaned and robbed, who can accord you mercy!" said I, sternly. "But you may make some slight amends for your first crime by confessing your last. Speak, for you are the thief! What have you done with the money you unearthed?"

"Under the barn—under the barn, directions.

He was taken in charge by two of the sheriff's men, while his companions shrunk from him in loathing and horror.

The rest of us then lost no time in going to the barn, where, after digging at the spot indicated, the money was recovered intact.

My strange story is about ended. The exact object of Clifford Wharton in murdering his uncle was never certainly known, for he committed suicide by hanging on the night of that very day, in the county jail; but it has since been thought that he had imagined the old manager to have made a will partly in his favor, and was in hopes of prosecuting his suit for Mabel's hand more successfully with her father out of the way, though the crime had resulted so differently from what he had anticipated.

This, however, is mere conjecture, and we must leave it there.

Suffice it to say, in conclusion, that Mabel and I were duly married, that I bade a final farewell to the stage forthwith, and that our union has been one of exceptional happiness. We are still living at Glenwood, which has long since been restored to its original beauty and stateliness; and Mabel is still occasionally fond of referring back to the recovery of her buried dowry, while her happy husband as often felicitates himself over the strange events that led up to ly against the northeast support!" he almost yelled, after which he fell down in convul- the Stock-Actor's Windfall.—Chicago Ledger.

How Henry VIII.'s Bed Was Made.

This is the way his Majesty's bed was to be made: "The curtains must be drawn and a gentleman usher must hold the curtains together; then must two squires of the body stand at the bed's head, and two yeomen of the crown at the bed's foot, and all the stuff laid safe at the bed's foot, on a carpet, the contents of the pallasse (which was open in the middle) were remade. Then a yeoman to leap upon the bed and roll him up and down and array the litter; then to lay down the canvas again, then the feather bed, and beat it well and make it even and smooth. Then take the fustian (under blanket) and cast it upon the bed without any wrinkles, and the sheet in the same wise." Then follow directions regarding the sheet, how it is to be stroked smooth, tucked under the feather bed, over it is to be laid "t'other stuff," upper sheet, blankets and fustian, and over that a covering of martin's fur and ermine. "A yeoman to beat the pillows and throw them up to the squires to lay them on the bed head, as pleaseth the King's grace. A sheet of Rennes was passed under the pillows, falling over loose in front (no pillow case), over that a rug of ermine. The bedclothes were then to be brought well up to the pillows and turned down the space of an ell. It is added that when all was done these functionaries withdrew behind the curtain which divided the room and had a drink all round.—Old MS. in the Magazine of Art.

LIZARDS are very nearly the shape of crocodiles, and are covered with a skin which has a semblance of scales, not like the scales of a fish. A specimen of the house lizard was shown. This lizard is found in Asia, Africa, South America and in other countries, but not in the United States. It is useful in destroying vermin, and can easily climb walls. It lays its eggs under rafters, in the thatches, and under leaves. It is a mistake to think of scorpions as very poisonous; they are a little venomous. Bird spiders are somewhat venomous. Large toads which have been called poisonous have no venom. Among all the lizards there is only one, a Mexican, which is venomous, and there is some doubt of him. Most of these animals, when irritated, excrete a venomous saliva, and even frogs will attempt to bite when troubled. Toads can tell the weather better than the Weather Bureau. When it is dry they go down into the ground for moisture; in damp weather they come out of the ground. Lizards stow themselves away when the sun goes under a cloud, and at such a time turtles will hide.

Woolen Underclothing.

Among the many means by which we seek to guard ourselves from the effects of chill there is one which hardly, even now, receives sufficient attention, the use of woolen underclothing, except in the very hottest weather. The majority of persons of the male sex do, indeed, show their appreciation of its wholesome qualities; but there remains a considerable moiety of these, and a far greater number of women and children, who prefer an undersuit of smooth but relatively meager linen. Yet the superior advantages of wearing wool next the skin are easily apparent. They do not depend merely on its greater warmth and closeness of application. It is further capable, according to its texture and in virtue of its composition, of better adaptation, in respect of temperature, to the needs of various climates and the changes of seasons than any other dress material. Moreover, it exhibits a special faculty for absorption and distributing moisture. It is this property especially which renders it the natural next covering of the constantly perspiring skin. If one be engaged, for example, in active exercise of limb, a linen fabric will absorb what products of transudation it can till it is wet, but will leave much moisture upon the clammy service; whereas a flannel, from its more spongy nature, will rest upon a skin which it has nearly dried and be but damp itself. It is obvious, then, that in the event of an after chill, and this occurs in summer as in winter, the body is, in the latter case, most favorably disposed to resist it. Flannel is not less cleanly than linen, though it may appear less white; and if the wearer bathe daily, it is surprising how long it will retain its purity. The skin irritation to which it sometimes gives rise is usually associated with coarseness of quality or freshness of manufacture, and is, with nearly all who have experienced it, a merely transient condition. Women, as well as men, we repeat, but above all children and the aged, who are alike particularly apt to take cold, should certainly adopt a woolen material for their customary undergarment. It is easily possible to adjust the texture to the season, so that it shall be warm enough in winter and not too warm in summer.—Herald of Health.

History of the Potato.

In 1585 the potato was first brought into Germany. The first seed potatoes in Saxony were a present in 1591 from the Landgrave of Hesse to the Elector of Saxony. In 1617 they were grown as exotics in gardens at Leipsic. Swedish soldiers brought them into Western Germany about the conclusion of the Thirty Years' War. In 1717 they were reintrodnced into Saxony from Brabant, and within twenty-five years they began to be regularly cultivated, their use being much developed in the famine period of 1770 '71. In the year 1882 over 9,000,000 acres were given up to the cultivation of potatoes in Germany, the produce amounting to 23,000,000 tons.

"...is, then, is what you meant when you
...hat more than one-half the deaths which ...arise from Bright's disease, is it, Doctor?"
"Precisely. Thousands of diseases are torturing people to-day, which in reality are Bright's disease in some of its many forms. It is a hydra-headed monster, and the slightest symptoms should strike terror to every one who has them. I can look back and recall hundreds of deaths which physicians declared at the time were caused by paralysis, apoplexy, heart disease, pneumonia, malarial fever and other common complaints, which I see now were caused by Bright's disease."
"And did all these cases have simple symptoms at first?"
"Every one of them, and might have been cured as I was by the timely use of the same remedy. I am getting my eyes thoroughly opened in this matter, and think I am helping others to see the facts and their possible danger also."
Mr. Warner, who was visited at his establishment on North St. Paul street, spoke very earnestly:
"It is true that Bright's disease had increased wonderfully, and we find, by reliable statistics, that from '70 to '80, its growth was over 250 per cent. Look at the prominent men it has carried off, and is taking off every year; for while many are dying apparently of paralysis and apoplexy, they are really victims of kidney disorder, which causes heart disease, paralysis, apoplexy, etc. Nearly every week the papers record the death of some prominent man from this scourge. Recently, however, the increase has been checked, and I attribute this to the general use of my remedy."
"Do you think many people are afflicted with it to-day who do not realize it?"
"A prominent professor in a New Orleans medical college was lecturing before his class on the subject of Bright's disease. He had various fluids under microscopic analysis and was showing the students what the indications of this terrible malady were. 'And now, gentlemen,' he said, 'as we have seen the unhealthy indications I will show you how it appears in a state of perfect health,' and he submitted his own fluid to the usual test. As he watched the results his countenance suddenly changed—his color and command both left him, and in a trembling voice he said: 'Gentlemen, I have made a painful discovery; I have Bright's disease of the kidneys.' And in less than a year he was dead. The slightest indication of any kidney difficulty should be enough to strike terror to any one."
"You know of Dr. Henion's case?"
"Yes, I have both read and heard of it."
"It is very wonderful, is it not?"
"No more so than a great many others that have come to my notice as having been cured by the same means."
"You believe, then, that Bright's disease can be cured?"
"I know it can. I know it from my own and the experience of thousands of prominent persons who were given up to die by both their physicians and friends."
"You speak of your own experience; what was it?"
"A fearful one. I had felt languid and unfitted for business for years. But I did not know what ailed me. When, however, I found it was kidney difficulty I thought there was little hope and so did the doctors. I have since learned that one of the physicians of this city pointed me out to a gentleman on the street one day, saying: 'There goes a man who will be dead within a year.' I believe his words would have proved true if I had not providentially used the remedy now known as Warner's Safe Cure."
"Did you make a chemical analysis of the case of Mr. H. H. Warner some three years ago, Doctor?" was asked Dr. S. A. Lattimore, one of the analysts of the State Board of Health.
"Yes, sir."
"What did this analysis show you?"
"A serious disease of the kidneys."
"Did you think Mr. Warner could recover?"
"No, sir. I did not think it possible."
"Do you know anything about the remedy which cured him?"
"I have chemically analyzed it, and find it pure and harmless."
Dr. Henion was cured five years ago, and is well and attending to his professional duties today, in this city. The standing of Dr. Henion,
Mr. Warner, and Dr. Lattimore in the community is beyond question, and the statements they make cannot for a moment be doubted.
Dr. Henion's experience shows that Bright's disease of the kidneys is one of the most deceptive and dangerous of all diseases, that it is exceedingly common, but that it can be cured if taken in time.

A PERSON struck by lightning does not know it, the fluid being much quicker than thought. The nerves which convey pain are rather slow in their power to convey information. Stick a pin in the tail of an elephant and quite a perceptible interval occurs before the noble animal gives his opinion of the man or boy at the end of the nervous system on trial. Lightning does its work before the victim knows anything. Two men were struck while taking refuge under a tree. Both were carried into the house, and laid out for dead. One of the men revived, and after weeks of suffering and infirmity, he got out again, and is still living. He said he knew no more about having been struck by lightning than he was conscious of having lived before the flood. It was all news to him when told of the fact.

Mr. Malapropos (to Miss Charmante, who is smiling and animated)—"You remind me of an old French teacher of mine" (noticing a change in Miss C.'s expression at the adjective)—"oh, not that you're old, or look like her; not that, but——"

Miss Charmante (again radiant)—"No? But how then?"

Mr. Malapropos—"Well, she used to say, you know, that it was so absurd for people to laugh in conversation, for to laugh is always to distort one's face."

Miss Charmante—"And you consider that I——"

Mr. Malapropos—"Oh, but you don't, you know; that's how I happened to speak of it."—Harper's Bazar.

The Convert's Ire.

A well-known Baptist minister of this city relates that some time ago a convert was made of a somewhat ignorant girl, and at a prayer meeting subsequently he asked her what she would do if she heard another girl reviling the Lord Jesus. Straightening herself up, she said: "If she was larger nor me I would tell her to shut up; but if she was smaller I would slap her right across the mouth."—Boston Transcript.

Undigested Food

In the stomach develops an acid which stings the upper part of the throat and palate, causing "heartburn." It also evolves a gas which produces "wind on the stomach," and a feeling and appearance of distention in that organ after eating. For both this acidity and swelling Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is a much better remedy than alkaline salts, like hartshorn and carbonate of soda. A wineglassful of the Bitters, after or before dinner, will be found to act as a reliable carminative or preventive. This fine specific for dyspepsia, both in its acute and chronic form, also prevents and cures malarial fever, constipation, liver complaint, kidney troubles, nervousness, and debility. Persons who observe in themselves a decline of vigor should use this fine tonic without delay.

PROFESSOR T. G. WORMLEY, in his new treatise on the Micro-Chemistry of Poisons, says: "The microscope may enable us to determine with great certainty that a blood is not that of a certain animal, and may be the blood of man; but in no instance does it, in itself, enable us to say that the blood is really human, or indicate from what particular species of animal it was derived." His measurements show that there is but little difference in size between the blood corpuscles of man and those of a large variety of animals.—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

The Great German Physician.

The remarkable phase in the practice of Dr. Peter W. Schmidt (frequently called Dr. Pete) is, he never asked one to describe their disease but tells each one their trouble without asking a question. His success is phenomenal. His practice enormous. He is sought after by hundreds wherever he goes, because he cures when every other physician and remedy have failed. He has allowed his great medicines, Golden Seal Bitters and Lung Food for Consumption, to be offered to the suffering, and we assert without fear of successful contradiction that there is no disease they will not cure. Thousands of bottles have been sold. Thousands of broken-down and discouraged invalids saved. Send to Golden Seal Bitters Company, Holland City, Mich., for Facts for the Million! Free.

"Prospects."

Having been deeply interested by Rev. Mr. Van Auken's sermon, on the above topic, preached at the Congregational church, Feb. 7th inst, and after consulting others, find them similarly affected, we have determined to give an abstract of it for the benefit of our readers:

"Prospects" is the subject announced for our consideration this morning. Anticipation, expectation, ground or reason for hoping, are some of Webster's definitions of the word. When we are on the point of undertaking some new project we always ask, "What are the prospects?" and "Will it pay?" This last question we deem necessary to answer in the affirmative before we enter upon the project. The prospects of success have inspired individuals, societies, armies, and nations to their mightiest victories and achievements. Not one present would be where he is in his present vocation, had the prospects of other days been different.

Moses never could have led the Israelites from their awful bondage to perfect liberty if God had not first increased the prospects of success by the revelation of himself in the burning bush. With God for him his prospects were infinite.

I ask you to-day, What are your prospects? And by the question I do not refer to your plans, schemes, and projects of a worldly nature (not that I have no sympathy and wishes for you in these matters), but we have a weightier subject for consideration this morning: a subject that affects us not in time only, but in eternity.

What are the prospects of this church for usefulness? Are they made bright by the reasonable hope of a rich ingathering for Christ the coming year? On what grounds does that hope rest? Have we a live membership, of which every individual has a deep, realizing sense of his obligations to the church and to his God, or do we seem to think that because God has showered his blessing upon us in the past, he will forever, without our effort? Once our prospects were dark to outward appearance, compared with what they might be to-day. We had one-sixth our present membership, and no house of worship. But our hearts were bound together by the strong ties of christian love, and went up unitedly to God for his Spirit to enable us to perform aright all the duties enjoined upon us, and the prospects of this church on the day it was born, have been more than realized. The bright visions of the most sanguine, have become a reality. The secret of sucess has been faith in God, coupled not only with a willingness, but a desire to work for him.

Dear friends, shall we continue to flourish and prosper in a remarkable manner for the coming three years and six months, as we have in the past? If so, we must unload some of the rubbish, and lop off the dead branches. Some of us stand as soldiers with our weapons laid down. The church, the world, and our own hearts, condemn us; and our prospects are darkened thereby. Oh, that we might have a realizing sense of the awfulness of the sin of hindering the gospel! I ask of you to-day, my brother and my sister, if the prospects of this church are dark, what shall we do to brighten them; I ask of each of you, what will you do? But if you count them bright already, may they not be made brighter? If you say in your hearts as was said at the prayer meeting last Thursday evening, "For Zion's sake will I not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake, will I not rest, until the righteousness thereof goes forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth," surely our prospects will be greatly enlarged.

Some of you who are here to-day, not long since, made solemn vows that you would be more faithful, and seek to do more for Christ: what are the prospects of your keeping those vows?

For a moment I turn to you who are strangers to the Savior, and ask, what are your prospects for eternal life, and for paying the vows you made when you were in distress or affliction? Are you nearer God and heaven to-day? Is it not true that some of you are further from the di... life than ever before? It gives me painful thoughts and a sad heart to think of it!

It may seem unkind of me to express myself thus to you; but in the presence of an open Bible, standing as a watchman to give signals of approaching danger, with the eye of the Eternal resting upon me; and before you whom I shall one day meet at the judgment throne, I can but tell you the truth, that I believe that your real prospects are growing darker every day. Every day you delay makes it harder for you to change your mode of life. "Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots; then may ye do good that are accustomed to do evil."

Are you fearful that you will not hold out if you begin now?—look away from yourself unto the Lord Jesus, who has said: "My grace is sufficient for thee;" and, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end." My friends, come to Jesus to-day; that dark prospects may give way to brighter ones; that "the peace of God that passeth all understanding," and the love of God that surpasseth knowledge," may dwell in your hearts. You can conquer, as did the emperor Constantine, by the sign of the cross.

Do you know the story, "The sign of the cross is the countersign to-night"? "It was in the war twenty years ago. The sentry challenged someone who was creeping within the lines. 'Who goes there?' A feeble voice answered. 'A tired friend.' 'Advance and give the countersign,' was the reply. A worn out and jaded looking unarmed man, slowly made his appearance and said, 'I am a union soldier, and just escaped from a rebel prison. I have threaded the woods by night and swam the rivers by day, until I am well-nigh exhausted.' There was no chance for doubting the pathetic story, but the sentinel could only make reply. 'The orders are rigid to-night, that every man coming to the line without the countersign must be shot in his tracks. You must give the countersign, or die. You know the severity of the rules,' he added sorrowfully. The man hesitated. 'I did not expect this,' he said; 'I am not ready to die: I must have time to pray.' A five-minute's respite was granted by the sentinel—a christian himself, he hoped and prayed for divine interposition through the delay. The tired man knelt, and began to talk quietly to his Father in heaven. But while he was praying, he made the sign of the cross in the air, as if to strengthen himself with the thought of a dying Savior. The sentry saw it, and with a cry of gladness, clasped the praying man in his arms, saying, 'You are saved, and so am I! The sign of the cross is the countersign to-night!'"

Ye men and women, the condition of all peace in God is found in atonement. Will you take this countersign, this watchword? If so, it will pass you safely through the evils and dangers of this life, give you victory at death, and admit you to the presence of the Lord, and the King on his throne.

Temperance Column.

Conducted by a Committee of the W. C. T. U.

No More Tea.

In 1769, the English government received less than $1,500 from the American colonies as its revenue from the tea tax. Yet the American colonies voted that the sale of tea should be prohibited, and the people refused to drink tea rather than pay to the mother country $1,500 a year tax on tea.

Two hundred thousand liquor dealers, half of them foreigners, have imposed heavy burdens upon the American people. Communities without liquor saloons have little use for policemen, jails or poor-houses. In one district in Liverpool, of 50,000 inhabitants without liquor saloons, there were only forty-five persons who had to receive out door relief. In another district of about the same size, with liquor saloons, nearly 2,000 had to receive out-door relief. When a small town in Illinois excluded the liquor saloon, it reduced its pauper bill from $1,100 to $2.50 per year. In Boston, seventy-three per cent of all the arrests made by the police are due to the presence of the drink-houses in the city. Eighty per cent of the criminals, and seventy five per cent of the paupers in this country can be fairly charged to the business of the 200,000 liquor dealers, half of whom are foreigners. What benefits do these liquor dealers confer upon the nation to compensate the people for tolerating their presence? What right have they to so greatly increase the taxes of the people in order to raise the money which is necessary to take care of their victims?

Has the character of the American people changed in these hundred years? Are we the worthy children of forefathers who refused to drink tea and prohibited its sale rather than pay a $1,500 tax to the mother country, when we bow down before 200,000 liquor dealers and bear whatever burdens they may impose upon us? When the American people realize that their taxes would be reduced one half by blotting out the liquor saloon, I believe the people will make short work of the modern grog-shop. As our forefathers said, "No more tea!" so the time is near at hand when the cry of our people will be, "No more rum! No more money to take care of the worn-out victims of the rum shop! No more young people from our homes, to become the slaves of the liquor dealers!"

Royal Beauty Rare.

Royal beauty is so rare in Europe that the fair face of the Princess Victoria of Teck, said to be the prettiest royal maiden to be found in all European countries, will doubtless make her a fortune. A London letter to the Philadelphia Telegraph says.

The Empress Eugenie and Elizabeth of Austria, the Princess of Wales and Queen Marguerite of Italy were famous beauties, and the two latter are still charming enough to merit the admiration of the world. But the fair Alexandria is beginning to look like the mother of a grown-up family, and it is whispered that her profuse tresses are not the growth of her own shapely head. None of her daughters, except, perhaps, the youngest, Princess Maud, gives any promise of inheriting even a portion of her charms. The future Empress of Austria, the Princess Stephanie of Belgium, has a neat graceful figure, but a hopelessly plain face. The Queen of Spain has no claims whatever to good looks. Her predecessor, the luckless Mercedes, was a very pretty girl, but the Princess Christine, the sister of Mercedes, who died on the eve of her betrothal to the young King Alfonso, was a positive fright. None of the Orleans princesses are pretty. The three surviving daughters of Queen Isabella, of Spain, are all very plain, being thin and sallow and angular. The Empress of Russia is a beauty, despite her small stature, and she has the loveliest and softest brown eyes in the world. But her younger sister, the Princess of Thyra, Duchess of Cumberland, was homely enough to scare the poor young Prince Imperial into going to Zuintand rather than make her an offer of his hand, as M. Routher and the Empress Eugenie had planned that he should do. The Princess Louise of Wales has a heavy jaw and hanging under lip, and looks hopelessly dull and stupid. Altogether the present generation of young royal ladies is sadly deficient in physical comeliness. "If things go on like this," remarked the Princess Beatrice, then a young and saucy girl, on the occasion of her sister's betrothal to the Marquis of Lorne, "my mother will wind up by marrying me to a Yankee!" And this is what her cousins and her nephews may be forced to come to if they are positively set upon espousing none but a beautiful girl.

Two Mormons have gone into Dakota where one has gone to Arizona.

WHEN A CURE IS GUARANTEED

Why will you refuse to be relieved of that cough which is liable to become seated on your lungs and to cause you many a suffering day and sleepless night? Your children are liable to be taken with croup and die before a doctor can be summoned. Be wise and obtain a remedy that will not fail to give relief from coughs, colds, whooping cough, croup, and all other lung difficulties. HAMILTON'S COUGH BALSAM will do this and costs but a trifle. Price 25 and 50 cents per bottle.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

SECURE ADMIRATION.

Who can help admiring a lovely face, a clear, smoothe, beautiful complexion? These can be easily obtained by the use of HAMILTON'S ORIENTAL BALM. It will surely remove freckles, tan, pimples, and blemishes of every sort and is in no way injurious to the skin, but is the most harmless and elegant preparation of its kind. Price 50 cents per bottle.

MORTGAGE SA...

Default having been made in the condit... a certain mortgage, made and executed Milo Eaton and Ellen J. Eaton, his wife, of Charlevoix, Michigan, to Mary J. McGlashan, date February fourth, A. D. 1882, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for the county of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan, on the fourth day of February, A. D. 1882, in liber "4" of Mortgages, on page 477, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of Two Thousand Four Hundred and Fifty eight and 33-100 Dollars, ($2,458.33), principal and interest and no suit or proceedings at law having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage or any part thereof: Now, therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and the statute in such case made and provided, Notice is hereby given that on Thursday the twenty-second day of April, A. D. 1886, at one o'clock in the afternoon, I shall sell at public auction to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in South Arm township, located in the village of South Lake, commonly called East Jordan, in said county of Charlevoix, (that being the place and building in which the Circuit Court for Charlevoix County is holden), the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with interest at ten per cent, and all legal costs, including such attorney fee provided for in said mortgage as is allowed by the statute in such case made and provided, to-wit: All those certain pieces or parcels of land situate in the township of Charlevoix, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, and described as follows, to wit: Commencing at the quarter post between sections twenty-six (26) and thirty-five (35), in township thirty-four (34), north of range eight (8) west; thence due south twelve (12) and 25-100 chains; thence east to the shore of Pine Lake; thence north along the shore of Pine Lake, to the section line between sections twenty-six (26) and thirty-five (35); thence west along said section line to the place of beginning, containing eight and 5-8 (8⅝) acres, more or less. Also the north half of the north east quarter of the north west quarter, all of which is contained in section thirty-five (35) in township thirty-four (34) north of range eight (8) west, containing twenty-eight and ⅝ acres, more or less, together with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining.

Dated January 26th, 1886.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the condition of a certain mortgage, made by Mary Blackbird to John A. Bacot, dated October 3d, A. D. 1884, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, on the 3d day of October, A. D. 1884, in liber 8 of mortgages, on page 522, which said mortgage was on the 22d day of December, 1884, assigned by said John A. Bacot to Frederick W. Mayne, said assignment being on record in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 10 of mortgages on page 610, and on the 14th day of December 1885, was assigned by said Frederick W. Mayne to Hugh Miller, said assignment being recorded in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 13 of mortgages, on page 186, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of One hundred and ninety six and 15-100 dollars, as principal and interest, and no suit or proceedings at law having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof. Now, therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and the statute in such case made and provided, notice is hereby given that on Saturday, the 13th day of March, A. D. 1886, at one o'clock in the afternoon, I shall sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the town hall in the village of East Jordan, (that being the place where the Circuit Court for Charlevoix County is holden,) the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with ten per cent interest, and all legal costs, together with an attorney's fee of fifteen dollars, covenanted for therein, the premises being described in said mortgage as all that parcel of land, situate in the township of Hayes, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, and known and described as follows: The south west quarter (¼) of the south west quarter (¼) of section thirty-six (36) township thirty four (34) north of range seven (7) west, containing forty acres according to the United States survey.

Dated Charlevoix, Mich., Dec. 15, 1885.

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage, made and dated the tenth day of September, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four, executed by Henning Frizzell to the Pine Lake Iron Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, and doing business in the County of Charlevoix, in the State of Michigan, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of the said County of Charlevoix, in Liber 11 of mortgages at page 11, on the 15th day of April, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-five, at one o'clock in the afternoon, and the same is now owned by the said Pine Lake Iron Company. And whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of Fifty-Five Dollars and Twenty-two cents, principal and interest, which sum is a part of the purchase price of the premises herein described, and a further sum of fifteen dollars provided by law as an attorney's fee in the foreclosure of said mortgage, which is the whole amount claimed to be due and unpaid on said mortgage, and no suit or proceedings at law or in chancery having been instituted to recover the debt now remaining secured by the said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in the said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises herein described at public auction to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in the township of South Arm, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, which is the place of holding the circuit court for said county, on Friday, the 2d day of April next, at twelve o'clock meridian, which premises are described in the said mortgage as follows, to wit: Lots twenty (20) and twenty-one (21) in block number twelve (12) in the Pine Lake Iron Co.'s plat of Ironton, Town of Eveline, county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan.

Dated December 30th, A. D. 1885.

CHANCERY SALE.

In pursuance and by virtue of an order and decree of the circuit court, for the county of Charlevoix, in Chancery, in the state of Michigan, made and dated on the 28th day of May, in the year A. D. 1885, in a certain cause therein pending, wherein John A. Bacot is complainant, and Abraham She-quaw-yaw and Mary She-quaw-yaw, are defendants.

Notice is hereby given that I shall sell at public auction to the highest bidder at the front door of the town hall, in the township of South Aria, in said county and state, which hall is the place for holding the circuit court for said county, on Wednesday the 7th day of April A. D. 1886, at eleven (11) o'clock in the forenoon, all or so much thereof as may be necessary to raise the amount due, to the said complainant, for principal, interest and costs in this cause, of the following described land to-wit: The south east quarter (¼) of the south west quarter (¼) of section twenty-five (25), in township thirty-four (34) north range seven (7) west, containing forty (40) acres of land according to the United States survey thereof, being in the township of Hayes in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan.

Dated February 16th, A. D. 1886.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the money secured by a certain mortgage, dated the thirtieth day of October, 1884, executed by Benjamin Walker and Maria Walker, his wife, of Charlevoix county, Michigan, to Josiah E. Harding, of Allegan county, Michigan, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of Charlevoix county, in liber 9 of mortgages, on page 64, on the 28th day of October, A. D. 1884, and whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of three hundred and forty-six dollars, and no suit or proceeding having been instituted at law, or in equity, to recover the debt now remaining secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof, and whereas, it is and by the conditions of said mortgage it is provided that should any default be made in the payment of the interest thereon, or any part thereof on any day whereon the same is made payable, and should the same remain unpaid and in arrears for the space of thirty days, the principal sum together with all arrearages of interest thereon shall at the option of the said mortgagee or his assigns become due and payable immediately thereafter, and whereas, default has been made in the payment of the interest due on the principal sum on the day when the same became due, and whereas said interest has remained unpaid and in arrears for the space of over thirty days; the said Josiah E. Harding has elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole amount of said mortgage, principal and interest, due and payable, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative. Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Town Hall, in village of East Jordan, in the county of Charlevoix, Michigan, (that being the place where the Circuit Court is holden in said county), on the 27th day of April, 1886, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of that day, which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows: The west half of the southeast quarter of section seventeen, in town thirty-four north, of range seven west, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan

C. R. BELLINGER.

A Trip to the Tropics.

III.

Returning from the chapter of digression to the harbor of Port Antonio, which we were entering at the close of letter No. 1, let us go ashore. Whittier has aptly expressed our first impressions:

"Strange trees and fruits above us hung;
Strange odors filled the sultry air;
Strange birds upon the branches swung;
Strange insect voices murmur there."

After recovering from our first amazement at the luxuriant vegetation and the general curiousness of the scene we turn for a second look at a sight which will at once appeal to the memory of any reader who may have been in the tropics, namely, the native small boy. There he stands dressed in a single garment that originally reached to the locality of his suspender buttons, but as it is his first and only suit, he has slightly out grown it. Hatless, with both hands pressing a mango into his mouth, the saffron juice of the fruit trickling between his fingers, he is the typical small boy of Jamaica. He turns upon us such an inquiring look we are constrained to say: "By your leave, sir, we have paid a visit to your island." We do not proceed many steps toward the town before meeting a group, who, like ourselves, are foreigners. They greet us with Salaam Massa, and we, after being initiated into the mysteries of the language, reply Salaam "Baboo" (coolie). The men are slight built, have regular Caucasian features, and dress much after the manner of the small boy above described, as they also entirely dispense with the nether garment, wearing upon their heads a long cloth wound like a turban, their hair banged about the forehead precisely as worn by the school girl of to-day; usually certain long locks are left uncut, as they denote the condition in life, or "caste." The women indulge in gay colors to an alarming extent,—and while it cannot be said of them that "They wear the trousers" being none to wear, yet they carry the purse which consists of all the silver they can secure being melted into bands and bracelets with which they burden their necks, ankles, wrists, and arms, more as a secure manner of carrying their property than as ornaments. A whole chapter might be written of these coolies as they form an important element in the labor question of Jamaica. The demand for laborers on the Panama canal having so drained Jamaica of its laboring class that thousands of these East Indians from "Calent side," as they express it, are indentured by the planters, their passage is paid, and they receive as compensation one shilling (24c) a day and their provisions, which, however, is not an important item, as they subsist on rice. During the five years for which they are bound they are but little better than slaves, as they cannot leave their masters, and any time lost by sickness or otherwise must be made good at the expiration of their term. They are inveterate shop-keepers, and in nearly every case open a shop for the sale of "salt fish and yam" or some other commodity as soon as they regain their freedom. Proceeding a little farther, we see a strange caravan approaching. It is the fruit for the cargo of the steamer, our departure from Philadelphia having been cabled and the fruit bought in anticipation of our arrival in order to give quick dispatch to the steamer. In the process[illegible] were also strong express wagons of Yankee make drawn by well-cared-for horses and mules; there are women with immense bunches of bananas, weighing one hundred pounds or more, neatly balanced on their heads; [illegible] girls carrying small "Seven [illegible] bunches" likewise on their [illegible] men with one bunch strapped [illegible] the back and another on the head, leading donkeys so literally [illegible] with the fruit that only tail and ears are visible. Other donkeys with woven baskets over their backs filled with cocoanuts. Young women carrying on their heads hampers well filled with oranges, mangoes, sour sops, pineapples, star apples, etc., to sell to passengers and sailors. Small boys with arms full of water cocoanuts for the same purpose. Expressing surprise at the seeming unlimited quantity of fruit, principally bananas, that is pouring into town, we are told that "this isn't a circumstance," and while the company (our steamer) is consigned to and has for its head a genial Cape Cod sea-captain) is shipping as many as three cargoes a week of bananas, cocoanuts, oranges, and pineapples. There are two native firms in this same little town also engaged in shipping fruit to American ports. We are informed by a member of the American firm that they employ hundreds of negroes in different parts of the island in buying fruit, and in addition to the small steamer "S. S. Adel" of the Atlas line which is constantly employed in bringing fruit from various part of the island. They own twelve cutters, each carrying a crew of four men, also an unlimited number of seine boats, besides mules and horses, all of which are employed in bringing in bananas for shipment to cities along the coast from Boston to New Orleans. Speculating on the gripes, pains, and broken bones such a vast quantity of bananas and banana peels can accomplish, we look about us for new sights. The offices and warehouses of our American friends are homelike in their well-painted substantial appearance. While nestling at the foot of the adjacent hill, or built high up on some mountain path, are the bamboo, palm-thatched homes of the negroes. Some of the more enterprising have white-washed their dwellings, but enterprise is not often an element of the negro character. The buildings in the town are generally two stories high, the first floor being used as a shop; the second as the residence of the shop keeper. Windows in the dwellings are in a great measure dispensed with: "jalousies" similar to shutters supplying their place. Not a chimney is to be seen. Stoves are almost unheard of, and the brick, or stone ovens usually occupy some shed a comfortable distance from the house. In the town is a fine Episcopal church said to have cost £12,000 or $60,000, a substantial Wesleyan Methodist church, a fine court-house, and other public buildings. Climbing a hill about fifty feet high we find ourselves on a promontory overlooking the town, harbor, and sea. Here are many fine residences occupied by officials, of whom there are too many for the good of the island or the advantage of the taxpaying peasantry. On the bluff or promontory is an old Spanish fort with a dozen well mounted cannon that have been gathering rust for hundreds of years. Barracks and hospitals built at a later day are still standing, and are surrounded by beautiful grounds planted with trees and flowers.

Cocaine.

Cocaine is becoming one of the most popular remedies of the day. Its functions of allaying the sensibility of the nerves of mucous membranes and other tissues renders it valuable in surgical operations and in the treatment of throat and lung affections. It also possesses curative properties, and can be used advantageously where there is local irritation to be removed and reflex nervous disturbances to be prevented. In consequence of its remarkable qualities and of the prominence given to it in the medical treatment received by Gen. Grant, it is now coming into general use. Hay fever is not by any means the only disease for which it is declared to be an effective remedy. The chemists, who are compounding cocaine tablouds for the noses of catarrhal patients are also putting up cocaine troches for the throats of sufferers from broncaial and pulmonary complaints. There is reason for believing that the market will speedily be flooded with cocaine lozenges, cough drops, soothing syrups, patent plasters, and every kind of cure-alls. Advantage will be taken of the sudden reputation which this singularly effective curative agent and anæsthetic has obtained. Cocaine will be recognized by patent-medicine manufacturers as a popular catchword, and the business of prescribing and compounding it will be speedily overcome.—New York Tribune.

Concise Record of the Week.

EASTERN.

The effect of a decision of the New Jersey Supreme Court declaring the railroad tax law unconstitutional has been to practically bankrupt the State Treasury. There is not enough money on hand to meet the ordinary expenses, and the State Comptroller has shut down on all demands, refusing to sign warrants of any description. Even members of the Legislature are not permitted to draw their pay.

While attempting to cross the Susquehanna River in a row-boat, four young men were drowned at Harrisburg, Pa.

The destruction of Pollard's liquor store at Pittsburg, Pa., caused a loss of $100,000.

F. A. Smith, formerly of St. Louis, is now in prison for debt at New York, with no apparent chance of ever regaining his liberty. He invested his money in a steamboat line, but is now penniless. If he could pay $40 for court costs his case would be advanced on the docket.

Samuel Brigham, a bank cashier at Norwich, Conn., has been held in $15,000 bail for larceny.

The second and concluding volume of Blaine's "Twenty Years in Congress" has been published. It embraces the period between Johnson's installation as President and Garfield's election. The earlier chapters are occupied mainly with the reconstruction problem, the contest between the President and Congress, and the impeachment trial. Grant's eight years' administration is discussed in a generous and catholic spirit, and the closing chapters deal with current questions of political discussion.

A passenger train was derailed at Tamaqua, Penn., some of the cars falling over an embankment and being consumed by fire. Two passengers were probably fatally injured, and a number of others were badly hurt.

In thirteen years the creditors of the Sprague estate have received but fifteen per cent. of their claims. During the same time Trustee Chafee has drawn over $500,000 for his services.

Silas Blakeslee, an aged man living near Wallingford, Conn., gave 19 cents to a stranger who saved him from drowning.

James Hammer, a leading citizen of Lowville, Pa., who stood high in church circles, has disappeared, having squandered a fund of $10,000 of which he was trustee.

WESTERN.

Four of the men who recently broke jail at Carthage, Missouri, have been recaptured near Greenfield. Another of the party was picked up in Kansas, and was shot while attempting to escape at Galena.

Dr. J. H. Gleeson, of Cleveland, died in ten minutes after drinking a graduate of carbolic acid in a drug store on St. Clair street. Standing beside the fatal potion was a graduate containing whisky, and his mistake seems to the druggist an unaccountable one.

The New Albany Road paid $200,000 for the Medford and Bloomfield narrow-gauge line, forty-two miles in length, and will take possession April 1.

Martin Brockman and Fred Hermann, directors of the City Infirmary of Cincinnati, who fled last week, have been officially removed for malfeasance.

The employes of five shoe manufacturing firms at Milwaukee struck owing to a disagreement with the proprietors on the wages question.

Fire in Manheimer's marble dry goods store at St. Paul, Minn., destroyed fabrics worth $150,000, and damaged the building $6,000. The insurance is about $160,000.

Frank Smith, a convict in the Stillwater (Minn.) prison, smashed machinery, threatened to kill one man, and, breaking away from the dungeon, menaced Deputy Warden Reed, and was shot and killed by the latter.

Abbott Lawrence, assistant cashier of the National Exchange Bank of Milwaukee, was dangerously shot by George Warbner, bookkeeper for the same institution. The would-be assassin claimed that his victim had been annoying him.

Lumbermen who have returned to Dubuque from the Wisconsin pineries report that in forty years the production of logs has not been so expensive as this season. The cut will not be more than 80 per cent. of last fall's anticipations.

It is announced that the local whisky pool at St. Louis is on the verge of dissolution, and that all the distillers will be running to their full capacities in a short time. The meeting of the Western Export Association at Peoria was harmonious and all difficulties were arranged, the per cent. of out-put remaining at former figures. The members feel elated at the success of the gathering.

The national convention of coal mine operators and miners at Columbus, Ohio, agreed upon a scale of prices for the different sections, and also made provision for a board of arbitration to settle disputes of a national character.

Thomas A. Edison, the electrician, and Miss Nina Miller were married at Akron, Ohio, and will spend the spring at Fort Myers, Fla.

John Glab, Mayor of Dubuque, Iowa, announces that he will organize a stock company for the erection of a large distillery in the suburbs of that city.

Joseph Alsup, of Black Oak, Missouri, having a wife and several children, killed himself with a shot-gun when ordered to vacate a rented house.

Charley Maurice, a cow-boy, amused himself at Logansport, Ind., by riding his horse into saloons and demanding drinks at the point of a revolver. When he attempted to ride into the Postoffice policemen barred the way and landed him in the cooler.

Martin O. Simons, tried at Baraboo, Wis., for arson, was acquitted on the ground that there is no law prohibiting the burning of one's own house.

SOUTHERN.

A negro man named Burns, who had committed an assault upon a respectable white girl, was forcibly taken by a mob from the Martinsburg (W. Va.) jail and escorted to a grove skirting the town, where the mob formed themselves in a circle. What followed is thus described by a telegram from Martinsburg:

The negro was mounted on a horse and led to the center of the ring, where a halter was placed about his neck. The leader then advanced, and in a voice loud enough to be distinctly heard by all, said: "Joseph Burns, are you guilty of this crime?" "I am," was the low-voiced reply. "Do you deserve this punishment?" was the next question. "I do," said Burns, "and I ask for your prayers."

This was answered from the circle by a volley of fierce cries, and shouts of "Burn him!" "Cut him to pieces!" could be heard on all sides, mingled with the crack of revolvers. In a few moments, however, the mob grew more quiet, and then a man approached the center of the circle of desperate men, handed his hat to a companion, and offered up a fervent prayer for the doomed man. Burns sitting quietly on the horse with his chin resting on his breast. The prayer concluded, the rope was thrown over the branch of a tree a few steps away, and the end taken back to one side of the circle, where fifty men soon had hold. The leader then spoke a word in a low tone, and the prisoner shot upward and was swinging backward and forward in the moonlight, while the air rang with yells and cheers from the mob. A revolver cracked, and then, while the despairing wretch was endeavoring to grasp the rope which was choking out his life, a volley of revolver shots rang out on the air and Burns was dead, pierced by fifty balls.

A colored lunatic near Savannah, Ga., strangled two boys in a church-yard and left their bodies to be devoured by buzzards.

The Panama Canal Company will ship from New Orleans a third party of 250 negro laborers.

Samuel Kaiser, of Fort Worth, Texas, has been awarded damages of $25,000 against H. B. Claflin & Co., of New York, who attached his stock and ruined his business before his indebtedness to them had matured.

A. A. Steagall, of Henrietta, Texas, charged with incest with his daughter and with murdering her babe, was hanged by a mob, but was cut down by the Sheriff before life was extinct.

A fire which originated on a cotton steamer at Wilmington, N. C., swept along Water street for three blocks, causing losses estimated at $1,500,000. The First Methodist Church and two freight depots were among the buildings burned.

A Texas paper states that Mrs. J. W. Phillips, one of the women who was found murdered at Austin on Christmas Eve, were the paramour of a prominent Texas politician, in whose company she was on the night of the murder, and that the man must have been a witness to her taking off. Phillips, who is held for the murder of his wife, was terribly wounded the same night, and has but recently recovered. It is said that a woman friend of Mrs. Phillips has given important testimony, and that she was given $3,000 to leave the State, but was prevented by one of Pinkerton's detectives.

WASHINGTON.

The House Committee on Postoffices and Post Roads unanimously agreed to report adversely all bills before it for the purchase or construction of telegraph lines by the Government.

Secretary Manning has issued his third call for $10,000,000 of 3 per cent. bonds, the principal and accrued interest to be paid April 1.

Major Williams, a special agent of the Treasury, reports that nearly all imported books are undervalued more than 50 per cent. He recommends that duties be assessed on the average retail price, and that stereotype plates be treated as originals.

The statue of Gen. John A. Rawlins, Gen. Grant's friend, is so obscurely situated in Washington that it is difficult to find it. Congress has been memorialized by numerous army associations to find a better place for the statue. Resolutions directing the Secretary of War to do this have been favorably acted upon by committees in both branches, and early action will probably be had.

The House Committee on the Judiciary has favorably reported a bill providing that no person shall be held to answer for any crime whereof the punishment may be loss of life or liberty except on presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces or in the militia when in actual service in time of war or public danger.

Secretary Manning says that the net reduction in annual revenue incident to the adoption of the Morrison tariff bill would be $12,003,000.

The House Committee on Postoffices and Postroads has completed the postoffice appropriation bill. It appropriates for the next fiscal year $54,326,588, an increase of $625,588 over the appropriation for the present fiscal year and a decrease of $659,573 as compared with the department's estimates. The estimated revenue for the next fiscal year is $47,142,252, and the estimated deficiency is $7,442,914.

POLITICAL.

The bill creating a non-partisan board of election in Toledo, Columbus, Cleveland, and Cincinnati has passed both branches of the Ohio Legislature.

Washington telegram: "Mr. Morrison says that the Ways and Means Committee will not hear any general discussion of the new tariff bill. This will be a severe disappointment to the steel and glass manufacturers of Pennsylvania. Pittsburgh manufacturers have been writing to the Republican members of the committee to secure dates for a hearing, and their letters show as much interest in the bill as was manifested two years ago. The Republicans are likely to make this effort in their favor, but the committee will probably be guided by Mr. Morrison's wishes in the matter."

It is intimated that Secretary Bayard may soon retire from the Cabinet and that he will be succeeded by ex-Senator Thurman.

T. R. Hudd, Democrat, has been elected in the Fifth Wisconsin District to succeed the late Joseph Rankin in Congress.

A liquor bill—practically the same as the old Scott law—has been passed by the Ohio House.

The President has nominated John H. Shaffer to be Postmaster at Kankakee, Ill.

Washington special: "There is deadly war between ex-Speaker Randall and Representative Bingham. The story is afloat that the former grossly insulted the latter about ten days ago at a banquet in Philadelphia, at which they were among the invited guests. Mr. Bingham, in speaking of the late Gen. Hancock, made some remarks to which Mr. Randall took exception, and the story goes that the ex-Speaker went so far as to make a personal attack upon Mr. Bingham, saying at the same time: 'I owe you a thrashing and I'll give it to you now.' It was only by the intercession of their friends that a row was averted. The matter has been the subject of considerable comment for several days, but all those who were witnesses to the affair refuse to talk on the subject, although they admit that the statement above given is substantially correct."

MISCELLANEOUS.

It is reported that the suit to determine the validity of the Bell telephone patent will be tried at Columbus, Ohio.

The Ontario Provincial Government has adopted high license in a modified form. It has decided that in cities over 20,000 inhabitants the fee shall be $250; in cities under 20,000 $200. In towns the fee is fixed at $150, in villages at $130, and in townships $100.

Washington's birthday was observed at the National Capital by the closing of the Executive Departments. Congress held no session. The American colony in the City of Mexico celebrated the day by laying the corner-stone of a hospital in the suburbs, on which occasion Joaquin Miller read a poem. The Soldiers' Memorial Hall at Toledo, Ohio, was formally opened, with patriotic speeches. At night a grand military promenade concert and a ball were held in the building. The Michigan Club, a Republican organization, held its first anniversary at Detroit in the shape of a banquet, covers being laid for more than 1,000 persons. Senator Palmer presided, and Senators Logan, Evarts, Conger, Manderson, Gov. Alger, Gov. Foraker, and others were present and made speeches.

It is not true that the Chinese Consul General has advised Chinamen to quit America and return home. The report originated from arrangements being made with steamship companies to carry back poor, sick, and unemployed Chinese at half rates.

The Circuit Court at Columbus, Ohio, affirmed the judgment in the Dalton contempt case, and the matter was at once referred to the Supreme Court of the State for final settlement.

According to the New York Produce Exchange the visible supply of wheat and corn is, respectively, 52,841,939 and 8,867,578 bushels.

FOREIGN.

Socialists of London, to the number of ten thousand, massed in Hyde Park, London, last Sunday, listened to speeches from three platforms, and adopted resolutions censuring the Government for its failure to commence public works in behalf of the unemployed. Thirty thousand persons have applied to the Mansion House for relief.

The Irish party will hold a meeting in London on St. Patrick's Day, Parnell presiding, the object of which will be to issue to England the ultimatum of the Irish people concerning home rule. Meetings of the same nature will be held throughout Ireland the same day.

The loyalists of County Tyrone at a monster meeting resolved to oppose home rule and maintain the union.

The new Lord Lieutenant of Ireland made his state entry into Dublin, and reports say there was no display. A body of students following the procession was attacked, and some of them were seriously injured.

The Greek Ministers of War and Marine threaten to resign unless war against Turkey is declared.

The German mint is turning out a large amount of silver coin for Egypt, 6,000,000 piasters having already been forwarded.

Lord Randolph Churchill was welcomed to Belfast by large bodies of Orangemen in regalia. Precautions were taken against rioting.

Colonel Sir Edmund Henderson, the head of the London Metropolitan police force, who has been severely censured for the inefficiency of his men during the recent riots in London, has resigned.

At a meeting in London of the delegates from various chambers of commerce, Mr. Forwood, a prominent merchant of Liverpool, attributed the present depression in trade mainly to the appreciation of gold.

Apropos of the London riots, the statistics of pauperism in the British metropolis show that during the last week of January there were 100,597 persons receiving relief there, of whom 57,834 were inmates of poor-houses and 42,763 received out-door relief. The total was an increase of 2,652 as compared with the corresponding week of last year, and of 5,843 as compared with the last week in January, 1884.

Serious commercial depression exists in Sweden.

A young commercial traveler, enjoying his honeymoon at Monaco, lost all his property at the gaming-table and then destroyed himself.

The commercial bank of South Australia has suspended payment. Failures in Sweden have increased until the situation is as serious as in 1857.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

On a ranch near Deming, New Mexico, General Crook and the Apache Chief Geronimo held a conference, in which the latter asked leave to return to his reservation. Crook demanded an unconditional surrender, but the Indian leader rode away with a white flag flying.

Three ranches at Wheatland, Cal., were visited by masked men, who drove out the Chinese, marched them to Wheatland, and then set them at liberty. At one ranch the Chinese quarters were fired and destroyed.

The deposits in the Government savings banks of Canada during January were $595,393. The amount standing to the credit of patrons is $19,056,028.

The Illinois Central Railroad is selling round-trip tickets from Chicago to New Orleans, good for forty days, at $22.50.

Gen. Hazen, of the Signal Service, has sued the New York Times for $100,000 damages for libel.

A man named Lillie owns a mill at Shamokin Hill, Pa. His twin daughters, Kate and Susie, aged 6 years, strayed to an up stairs room where a shaft was revolving. The little ones ventured too near the machinery, and their clothes caught in the shaft. After having been thrown around for an hour they were found by an older sister. When the machinery was stopped their bodies were found to be terribly lacerated. Katie was dead, and Susie has but little chance of recovery.

The House Ways and Means Committee have recommended the passage of a resolution requesting the Secretary of the Treasury to investigate the undervaluation frauds in New York City, and more particularly the charges that a conspiracy has existed in the custom-house by which invoices were illegally raised.

A local option law has passed the Virginia Legislature.

The National Editorial Association, in session at Cincinnati, elected C. H. Jones, of Florida, President for the ensuing year, and decided to hold the next convention at Denver in June next.

A man named Peronnier, believed to be insane, caused a sensation in the French Chamber of Deputies by drawing a revolver and firing twice with a downward aim, at the same time throwing a letter toward M. Clemenceau. Peronnier was quickly seized, and hurried to prison.

The bill granting lands in severalty to certain Indians passed the Senate Feb. 25. Mr. Edmunds introduced the bill reported last year from the Foreign Affairs Committee providing for the inspection of meats for exportation, prohibiting the importation of adulterated articles of food and drink, and authorizing the President to prohibit by proclamation, in his discretion products of countries unjustly discriminating against American products. Mr. Frye, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably the bill authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Staten Island Sound, known as Arthur Kill, and to establish the same as a post-road. This is the measure in which the Baltimore & Ohio is interested in obtaining entrance into New York City. The Blair education bill was debated. The House indulged in a warm partisan debate over the pension appropriation bill. Mr. Townshend, of Illinois, said that the bill appropriated $55,751,240, or about $15,000,000 more than was appropriated last year so far; due to the accelerated work being done in the Pension office. Mr. Henderson of Iowa took issue with Mr. Townshend, declaring that the average appropriation for pensions in the last six years was $77,419,000. He then began a long partisan speech, in which he criticised the letter of Commissioner Black on the subject of arrearages of pensions, which, he said, had been circulated all over the country twenty-four hours before it was sent to the Appropriations Committee, "with a $33,000,000 lie in its stomach." Mr. Henderson defended ex-Commissioner Dudley's administration of the pension office, and in speaking of the charges of partisanship Messrs. Warner, of Ohio, and Randall, of Pennsylvania, replied briefly to Mr. Henderson. The former renewed the charges of partisanship and neglect of duty to combat political campaigns made against ex-Commissioner Dudley. Mr. Randall thought that the Southern members had shown a wonderful, full-hearted disposition to pension veterans and widows of veterans. Mr. Browne, of Indiana, defended Mr. Dudley. The postoffice and military academy appropriation bills were reported to the House. The latter appropriates $297,805, or $111,274 less than the estimates. The Hennepin Canal bill was up in the House again. Messrs. Murphy, of Iowa, and Rowell, of Illinois, made speeches in its support.

NATIONAL LAW-MAKERS.

Brief Summary of the Proceedings of Congress.

The Blair educational bill was discussed again in the Senate on Feb. 19. Senator Evarts supported the bill, Senator Ingalls opposed the bill as a Southern measure. He saw no reason why the common schools should be turned over to the Federal Government, and he criticised the South for calling on the General Government for aid. Senator Hoar denied that the bill was a Southern measure. He himself drafted the first of these education bills ten or fifteen years ago. The measure was a Northern idea, supported by Northern sentiment. Only three Southern votes were given to the best bill of the kind. Senators Wilson (Md.) and Harris opposed the bill on constitutional grounds. They objected to interference on the part of the General Government with the schools of a State. Senator Morrill, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably Senator Butler's bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to deliver, upon satisfactory proof of ownership, to the claimants thereof, the silverware, jewelry, and other property deposited in the Treasury by the Secretary of War in June, 1863, as property captured by the United States army during the late war, and providing that all such property remaining in the Treasury for two years after the passage of the act shall be sold at public auction, and the proceeds of the sale covered into the Treasury. The Senate passed bills to remove the political disabilities of Alexander P. Stewart of Mississippi, Thomas L. Rosser of Virginia, and E. G. Butler of Missouri. A resolution was introduced directing the Secretary of War to report the facts of the murder by Mexican troops of Capt. Emmet Crawford, of the United States army. In the House of Representatives, Mr. Scott, of Pennsylvania, delivered a long speech on the silver question. He defended the course of the President and Secretary Manning in the management of the nation's finances, and regretted that his party colleagues had not left it to the Republican side of the House to attack the administration. He declared the charge that these officers were under the influence of capitalists to be unfounded. They had violated no law and had conformed to the very letter of the statutes. They had, indeed, recommended the suspension of the silver coinage, but who could say that this advice might not prove to be wise and conducive to the public good? Mr. Kelley, of Pennsylvania, renewed his request to have printed in the Record a review of the testimony in the Fitz John Porter case, prepared by Judge Advocate Holt. Mr. Bragg, of Wisconsin, who had previously objected, said that, as the battle was over, he was in favor of a general amnesty, and would make no objection. The request was granted.

The bill appropriating $200,000 for a monument to be erected in Washington to the memory of Gen. Grant passed the Senate Feb. 23. In the debate preceding the vote, Senator Plumb opposed the bill, saying that no fit monument to the memory of Lincoln had been erected, and that a monument would be idle as a testimonial of the nation's love and regard for Gen. Grant. Senator Blair said that the Lincoln monument in Washington was not worth $25 as a work of art, and Senator Hoar replied that the Committee on the Library would consider the matter of an appropriate monument to the memory of Lincoln. Senator Morgan, of Alabama, introduced a preamble and resolution concerning the recent report from the Judiciary Committee condemning the Attorney General for refusing to send to the Senate copies of papers. The resolutions direct the Committee on Privileges and Elections to report whether the offense charged against the Attorney General is impeachable, and whether the Senate can take jurisdiction of the alleged offense and condemn the Attorney General in advance of a trial by a resolution of the Senate, there being no impeachment in the mode required by the Constitution. The committee is further instructed to inquire and report whether the Senate has the power to punish the Attorney General for contempt of its rightful authority, whether the Attorney General has really violated any law in his refusal to furnish certain papers, and whether the Senate has the right under the Constitution to withhold its consent to the removal of persons by the President who are unfit for office, or can bind its members by any declaration of the duty of the Senate. A favorable report was made on a bill to confirm the entries made under the public land laws. Bills were introduced to facilitate the administration of the laws in Alaska, appropriating $10,000 for a quarantine station at San Francisco, and a like sum for a public building at Fort Pelge. The House of Representatives passed a bill to forfeit the unearned land grant of the Atlantic and Pacific Road. Mr. Morrison reported a resolution directing that the surplus in the Treasury be paid out on the public debt. The resolution was accompanied by a report declaring that $173,680,862 was held by the Treasury on Jan. 31, 1885, in excess of all other liabilities than the redemption of said United States notes; that this sum is largely in excess of the sum required for the purpose for which it is held, and that a considerable part of it should be applied to the payment of the interest-bearing debt of the United States now payable. Mr. Hewitt submitted a minority report. The Invalid Pensions Committee reported the bill granting pensions to all invalid soldiers or their widows or children who are dependent on their daily labor for a living.

A bill appropriating $254,000 for the relief of settlers in Nebraska and Kansas who have been deprived of their lands by a prior grant to the Northern Kansas Railroad, and a bill allowing one or more officers of the army to accept temporary service under the Corean Government, with compensation therefor, passed the Senate Feb. 24. The Senate also passed the bill permitting national banks to change by a vote of two-thirds of their shareholders, and with the consent of the Comptroller of the Currency, their names, capital stock, and location, provided the location shall not be changed to another State nor to a place more than thirty miles distant from the original location. The bill gave rise to considerable debate, during which Senator Beck (Ky.) insisted that the control of the matter should be given to the Secretary of the Treasury, instead of the Comptroller of the Currency. He charged the Comptrollers with having a racket to drive out of business every bank that was not a national bank. They had always done the work of the national banks, and when they resigned they went into those banks. One of them had no sooner left the Government service than he became President of a national bank, and another became Vice President of a national bank. The House passed the half-gallon tax bill without a division. Mr. Butterworth (Ohio) offered a substitute by the shape of a bill amending the Carlisle bill by requiring the maximum capacity of the packages into which spirits may be drawn to be thirty gallons instead of ten, but the substitute was rejected. The House passed also the bill to quiet the title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in Iowa, and the bill annexing a portion of Idaho to the Territory of Washington. The Committee on Public Lands reported favorably the bill forfeiting certain grants to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. Mr. Murphy, of Iowa, called up the Hennepin Canal bill and made a speech in its support. By means of the proposed canal, he said, the wheat of six Western States could be transported to the seaboard at a saving of six cents a bushel. If the canal were built the people of the Northwest would save enough in one year to build the canal two or three times over. The United States had formidable competitors in the Liverpool market, and, if the rates of transportation were not reduced, it would soon find itself without that market.

A STORY is related of a Connecticut infantry company in the war of the rebellion which is believed to be without a parallel. The company, which was recruited in the town of Greenwich, had no less than twelve pairs of brothers in its ranks. There were, in addition, three instances in which father and son stood side by side, and three brothers-in law.

WEST BROOKFIELD, Mass., has six couples who have experienced more than fifty years of wedded bliss, and one of the marriages was fifty-seven years ago. One of the marriage certificates recently issued by Town Clerk Bush was to Rev. W. B. Stone, aged 75 years, and brother of Mrs. Lucy Stone Blackwell. The veteran groom's bride was Miss Martha Robinson, aged 71 years, the sister of Mr. Stone's first and second wives, and also of ex-Governor Robinson, of Kansas.

THE President of the New York Press Club has been presented with a gavel made from a large chip of the keel of the old ship New Orleans, which has lain in Sackett's Harbor since the war of 1812, when it was built to meet the St. Lawrence, which the British sailed into Lake Erie. She was never used, however, as peace was declared before she was completed. The gavel is turned and carved, and a silver dolphin extends along the handle. The hammer is made of a bolt of Swedish iron taken from the wood above a port-hole of the vessel.

THE Chinese Minister at Washington was formerly the Governor of a province. After he had made his fortune, the Emperor saw that he was getting rich too fast, and, much to his disgust, exiled him here on a salary of $25,000 a year and all expenses paid. The Minister and his attaches are prompt in returning all card calls made upon them. They make no exceptions. If the humblest grocer should send his card, a distinguished mandarin would appear in person within a few days and smile and beam upon the Washington caller.

JO CHANDLER HARRIS, of the Atlanta Constitution, the best known humorist of the South, was born at Booghia, on the south coast of Africa. His father was a missionary. Mr. Harris is a Sanskrit scholar, and thoroughly versed in Hebraic and Buddhist literature. Just before the civil war he emigrated to America, and taught school in a village near Lake Teeteelootchkee, Fla. During the civil war he served in the Confederate army. He is hardly forty years of age, but has snow-white hair, which tells the sorrow of his life. He is noted for his generosity, amiability, and tenderness.

AN Englishman in Madras, by a lucky accident, made a photograph of a tiger in the act of seizing its prey. The camera was focused on a buffalo tied to a stake some thirty feet off, and had just received a dry plate, when a tiger leaped from the jungle and struck down the buffalo with a single blow. The operator kept his presence of mind and released his shutter before taking to his heels. The negative proved a poor one, but showed the relative attitudes of tiger and buffalo pretty well, and confirmed the generally accepted opinion that the tiger, with his knock-down blow, endeavors to dislocate the neck of his victim.

WOULD-BE flax-growers will be glad to hear that an impetus is likely to be given to the revival of that industry in England and Ireland by the invention of a machine which accomplishes the remarkable operation of scutching flax-straw without producing any tow. At present for every twenty stone of scutched flax there are six or seven stone of tow; but the new machine prepares every particle of the flax fiber without this waste. The straw is separated from the fiber by the rapid action of perforating pins. In Lille and the surrounding districts of France hundreds of the machines are being introduced, and it is there considered that the invention will revolutionize the industry.

THIS may be true; it is a shame to tell of it. A New York paper says: When one goes to the opera and sweeps the tiers of boxes with an opera-glass for a moment, the question comes, is it proper to look? Upon careful examination and scientific computation it is pretty certain that of the ladies at the opera in any five boxes adjoining one another not less than one out of every three is three-quarters naked above the waist—that is, of the square inches of surface, from the waist up, three-quarters are exposed to the view of the air. While this is true of opera-goers, of those who go to balls it is far worse. The percentage of semi-nude figures increases until fully 95 per cent. is reached.

A CURIOUS circumstance happened at West Vienna, on Oneida Lake, N. Y., recently, that is of so rare a nature that we doubt if its like was ever known. Some fishermen went out on the lake to examine their lines, and, chiseling out a fish-hole, accidentally dropped the chisel into the lake. It had a wooden handle about four feet long, and the water was some forty feet deep. Soon after this they caught a lawyer, and dropped him into the hole where they lost the chisel, and paid out a long line. After a while they drew up the line, and found the chisel and lawyer attached to it, the fish having passed many times around the tool and tangled it up in the line.—Oswego Palladium.

THE Englishman is generally thought to be somewhat cranky on the subject of cold baths. When the Englishman travels through uncivilized countries, whatever personal luggage he may leave behind, the portable bath tub is sure to be taken along. Some years ago Punch published a picture which showed the servant rapping at the door of his sleeping master, at 6 o'clock in the morning and saying: "Your bath is ready, sir. I have just broken the ice on the top of it." Mr. Robert Porter, of Stoughton, Mass., is probably of English ancestry, and residence in New England seems to have aggravated the original bath malady. He has an arbor roughly built over a spring and the weather inside is as cold as it is outside. In this spring he bathes every day, summer and winter. He took his bath there daily in January while the thermometer was eighteen below zero.

GEN. NELSON A. MILES, United States army, is the youngest man of his rank, and the only one who has come from civil life. He was a dry-goods clerk in Boston when the civil war began. Major General Terry, also from civil life originally, was an editor in Connecticut. Miles is a man of ability and an earnest student. He is about 43 years of age, is tall, broad-shouldered, and deep-chested. His head is large, round, and full. His brown hair is thin, and curling over a very broad forehead. His nose has a soldierly hook. His eyes are clear and resolute in their expression, under very strongly defined eyebrows. A heavy, curling brown mustache shades his firm-lined mouth. His square chin is clean-shaven and blue in tint. He married a niece of General and John Sherman, a sister of Don Cameron. By that marriage he is connected with the Ewings, Camerons, McCooks, Shermans, Blaines, Dahlgrens, McLeans, and several other political families.

MR. HENRY M. HUGUNIN, of Chicago, has recently submitted to the principal scientific societies and institutions of England, Scotland, France, Germany, and the United States a plan for rearranging the calendar, so as to bring the year more into accordance with the natural divisions of the seasons. He proposes to make the present 21st day of December the 1st day of January, because it is the anniversary of the winter solstice, when the southward march of the sun (so to speak) over the inclined surface of the earth is terminated and the great luminary begins its journey northward. Following his suggestion farther, he would have the 21st of March, the date of the vernal equinox, when the sun crosses the equator, made the 1st day of April; the 21st of June, or the summer solstice, when the sun again turns southward, would become the 1st of July, and the 22d (or 23d) of September, noting the equinox, when the sun again crosses autumnal the equator, would be rated as the 1st of October. Thus the common time, he claims, would be brought into more exact harmony with accepted meteorological and astronomical data, and a more scientific and distinct boundary of each of the four seasons would be established. In this connection he suggests that, by general consent, the 21st day of December, 1890, shall be celebrated throughout the world as the beginning of the year 1891. If his plan has no other merit, it has an eye to 'the eternal fitness of things," and shows that he has given considerable study to the subject.

FITZ JOHN PORTER.

His Bill Passed by the House of Representatives After a Warm Debate.

Exciting Scene Between Cutcheon, of Michigan, and Bragg, of Wisconsin.

[Associated Press report.]

The Fitz-John Porter bill was passed by the National House of Representatives on the 18th of February, the vote being: Yeas 171, nays 113. Prior to the voting Messrs. Phelps (N. J.), Curtin (Pa.), and Warner (O.) spoke in favor of the bill. Mr. Bragg (Wis.) moved the previous question and closed the debate. Mr. Everhart (Pa.) moved to recommit the bill, with instructions to strike out the words "prior to his appointment under this act," so as to make the proviso read: "Said Fitz-John Porter shall receive no pay, compensation, or allowance whatsoever." Mr. Reed, suggesting that this gave an opportunity for vindicating Porter from any question of money, demanded the yeas and nays. The motion to recommit was lost on a vote of yeas 112, nays 173.

Mr. Bragg then withdrew his demand for the previous question and again took the floor. In the course of a speech in support of the bill he declared that Mr. Cutcheon (Mich.), in attempting to show that there had been a general engagement at the second battle of Bull Run on Aug. 29, had ingeniously used a table of the casualties between Aug. 16 and Sept. 2. Mr. Cutcheon declared that he had so stated in his speech.

Mr. Bragg—You took a table of figures from a heading that covered almost a month, and you have published it in your speech as evidence of the losses on the 29th, and your Republican constituents who do not read anything but your speech in a Republican newspaper will think that an historical evidence of the war.

Mr. Cutcheon declared that the heading of the table showed precisely what it was. Mr. Bragg declined to yield, and Mr. Cutcheon asserted his right to reply, as he had been misquoted.

Mr. Bragg (advancing to the bar of the House)—I state what you said. I state what the figures are.

Mr. Cutcheon also advanced into the space in front of the Speaker's desk—Now you are trying to ram a falsehood down the throat of this House. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Bragg—I draw my own inference as to your purposes, and defiantly will repeat them if you desire. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

At this time there was a good deal of confusion and excitement in the House, and it was with difficulty that the voice of either could be heard; but as the speaker rapped the House to order and insisted to Mr. Cutcheon that he must not interrupt Mr. Bragg without permission, the former indignantly exclaimed: "Then the gentleman must not falsify logs."

"Ah," says Mr. Frye, "I see," "I am glad I have driven that radical from under Stanton's petticoats so that he has come to the front."

Mr. Bragg, continuing, said:

"Would to God there was more freedom of conscience allowed in the Republican party, then Porter would have vastly more votes. But as there is a Presidential candidate in training for the 'grand old party' who is to run on the Fitz-John Porter issue, it will not do for more Republicans to come over, because the Black Eagle of the West might not like it." [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side and groans from the Republican side.]

Mr. Bragg said he was glad to hear the groans, because it showed there was a little life left in the Republicans. Groans did not proceed from a strong body in a happy and contended frame of mind, but from one suffering from cramp in the bowels. He again demanded the previous question.

Mr. Cutcheon rose to a question of personal privilege, and was granted permission by the Speaker to explain away the charge made by Mr. Bragg. As Mr. Cutcheon was about to explain, Mr. Bragg interrupted, and was called to order by the Republicans. Mr. Bragg shouted, defiantly:

"I will give you cause for a personal explanation if you let me speak. The gentleman stated that Fitz-John Porter was lying two and a half miles from the head of his corps, but there is no evidence of that. I will give him cause for a personal explanation if you want it."

JOHN B. GOUGH DEAD.

The Greatest of Temperance Orators Passes Away at Philadelphia—His Last Words.

[Philadelphia telegram.]

John B. Gough, the eloquent temperance lecturer, died on the 18th of February, at the residence of Dr. R. Bruce Burns, in Frankford, a suburb of Philadelphia, where he was taken on Monday night when stricken with paralysis while lecturing at the Frankford Presbyterian Church. His wife was at his bedside when he died. There were also present Mrs. Pridge, his sister; Mrs. Burns and two nieces, Misses Mary and Fanny Whitcomb; Mr. John Wanamaker, the Rev. Thomas Murphy, and Mrs. Jacob Wagner.

Mr. Gough's last intelligible words were spoken on the lecture platform Monday evening, Feb. 15. "I," said Mr. Gough, "have seven years in the record of my own life when I was held in the iron grasp of intemperance. I would give the world to blot it out; but alas! I cannot." Stepping forward with impressive gesture, the lecturer said: "Therefore, young men, make your record——"

He failed to finish the sentence, but sank helplessly into a chair.

SKETCH OF THE DECEASED.

John B. Gough was born at Sandgate, Kent, Aug. 22, 1817. His parents were poor, and he contributed, by exercising his talents as a reader, to their scanty resources. At the age of 12 he emigrated to New York and became apprenticed to a tradesman, with whom he settled on a farm in Oneida County, New York. In December, 1831, he obtained employment in New York City as a book-binder. He soon fell into habits of dissipation, and was frequently thrown out of employment. To such degradation did he sink that, night after night, he sang comic songs and played the buffoon to the habitues of the lowest groggeries, who in return supplied him with drink. He married in 1839, and became a book-binder on his own account; but intemperance prevented his success. He had suffered from delirium tremens had lost his wife and child, and was reduced to the utmost misery, when a Quaker invited him in the street to take the temperance pledge. Having told his story at a temperance meeting, he at once became a leading orator in the temperance cause. In 1842 some of his former companions induced him to violate his pledge, and he confessed the fact at a public meeting at Worcester.

Since 1843 he has labored incessantly in behalf of temperance with ability and success. His reputation as an orator quickly spread through the United States and Canada, and reached England. In 1853 the London Temperance League invited him to visit Great Britain. The visit, intended to last only six weeks, was protracted to two years, during which he advocated the cause of temperance throughout the island. He then resumed his labors in America. In 1857 he again went to England, and lectured with still greater success than before until 1860, when he returned to America. He then began to lecture on other topics with great success, acquiring a large income. In 1845 he published his "Autobiography"; a volume of "Orations," in 1851; a collection of "Temperance Lectures," 1870; and "Sunlight and Shadow, or Gleanings from My Life's Work," 1880. In 1873 he announced that he was about to leave the field as a public lecturer; but he appeared subsequently at intervals. In 1878 he again visited England.

For twenty years twenty or thirty managers sought Mr. Gough's services, and he lectured incessantly from four to six months in the year. He never asked for an advance in fees, but always accepted the terms offered him and visited every point to which he was invited that was within his reach. His lectures brought him from $1 to $500 a night, and he earned from $20,000 to $30,000 a year.

GEO. WILLIAM CURTIS.

The Relations of President and Senate Defined by the Mugwump Head Center.

[New York telegram.]

The New York Herald prints a long interview with George William Curtis, in regard to the dispute between the President and the Senate. Mr. Curtis said that perhaps the President was justified in refusing to make confidential communications public, but his refusal should only apply to such as had already been made to him. He should give the people to understand that in the future all papers would be open for inspection. Then any one who had any information to lay before the President would know what to expect. No one could suffer by such an arrangement. It would serve to make people more careful of what they said and for whom they signed. And that certainly was desirable. The signing of petitions for office had grown to absurd proportions. Many prominent men will sign anything, and a Governor of this State, Mr. Curtis said, had told him that he signed every petition that was presented to him. But whenever he signed such papers he wrote to the appointing power to say that the signature meant nothing at all, and that if he really wanted to help an applicant he would write in a private way. This was not fair to those who had secured the appointment. President Van Buren's practice was similar. If Martin said or wrote such and such a thing, it would not do to rely upon it; but if Martin's son said or wrote it, why then it was perfectly reliable. These were tricks of politicians, to be sure, but they showed how great this abuse was capable of becoming. Mr. Curtis said that he agreed with Senator Sherman on the right of the Senate to see the recommendations for appointment. The Senate was a part of the executive power. The Constitution said that the President should nominate, and by and with the consent of the Senate appoint certain officers. As part of the executive power the Senate had the right to know what influences, considerations, and information had decided the President in making a nomination. Its action could not be thoroughly intelligent unless it had such information. The object of the Senate in demanding these papers was two-fold. First, it wanted to defend the character of the men who had been removed. In the second place, it wished, if possible, to throw discredit on the President, and to show that he had violated his pledges. This latter was its prime object. The Senate belonged to the opposition party, and it had the right to attack the President's position if its warfare was honorable. The President could block the Senate's game by furnishing it with the information asked. The Senate has said that the information was wanted as secret information. It was pretty certain, however, that if anything likely to injure the President was obtained in this way it would speedily become public. Let the President try the Senate's secret-session plan. If the information thus given should leak out he could thereafter reply to the Senate's demands by saying: "I shall give you the information you ask, but I shall also give it to the public at the same time." The President, Mr. Curtis thought, had nothing to fear. Suppose that his reason for removing a Postmaster was that he was drunk, would the publication of that fact hurt the President? Would not such action deter other Postmasters from like offenses? In conclusion, Mr. Curtis said that he was compelled to differ with the President as to his prerogative. Mr. Cleveland was, perhaps, right in declining to make his action retroactive and in refusing to turn over communications intended as confidential and in many cases so marked. But his course in the future was clear. He should place all communications on record, and the writers should know that letters to the President are letters to the country. Mayor Low's idea was praiseworthy. He let the people know that he felt at liberty to make anything public, as he deemed best. Mr. Curtis said that a demand of this sort had never been complied with by any other President from Washington's time to the present, but Mr. Cleveland was elected under peculiar circumstances, under a movement intended to reform politics. A great step for reform would be his putting an end to a secrecy that was not supported by reason of the Constitution.

Senator Edmunds' Resolutions.

[Washington special to Chicago Times (Dem.).]

The indications now are that the compromise between the extreme and the moderate Republican Senators relative to the attitude to be maintained toward the administration has been successful, and that while Mr. Edmunds' resolutions do not go so far as he would be glad to go, the Senators who have been disposed to hang back will go as far as those resolutions. These represent the concessions that had to be made by the extremists to Senators who were opposed to a policy of wholesale rejection. The resolutions have been misapprehended in many quarters. The only nominations to be rejected are those of persons nominated to succeed persons suspended, information regarding whose suspensions the administration refuses to send to the Senate. Care will be taken not to call for information where the Republicans do not have what they call a "good case," and information will be asked for as to some classes of removals, and in some States more than in others. The papers will be called for in a great many postoffice cases.

It is probable that the Postmaster General will be asked to furnish the papers in the case of every Presidential postmaster in the State of Virginia, for instance. This is due to the fact, as alleged by the Virginia Republicans, that the Virginia Republican postmasters were all removed upon charges which either reflected upon them personally or upon those who secured their appointment. The Virginia Senators take this as a personal affront, and the Postoffice Committee will undoubtedly support them in their request for the production of the papers. As it is possible that all of the papers will be refused, it may be expected that all of the Presidential postmasters in Virginia whose names are now pending before the Senate will be rejected.

MOODY and Sankey are moving New Orleans as it never was moved before. In a single day there were reported three hundred conversions.

MICHIGAN AFFAIRS.

—Frank Fuller, of Corunna, has sold his news and stationery business to Mrs C. F. Billings.

—A prominent Saginaw lumberman says that sixty days hence a dry board would be as difficult to find as a snowball.

—The barn of E. L. Cadwell, Lansing, and residence of D. Mevis, adjoining, have been badly damaged by fire. Four horses were burned alive.

—Corunna Commandery, K. T., No. 21, has decided to attend the triennial conclave of the Grand Encampment of the United States, to be held at St. Louis, Mo., Sept. 11 next.

—At a meeting of the Adrian College faculty, Saturday morning, Miss Lettie A. Heberling, of the Wallace School, Sterling, Ill., was elected Preceptress in the place of Miss Dotson, resigned.

—Wesley Smith, a well-known conductor, had a narrow escape from death. While eating at the Antrim depot hotel, a piece of meat lodged in his throat. Dr. Abe Stephenson, who was near by, saved him by vigorous measures.

—Lee Corey, suicided at Putney's Mill, by hanging. Corey used a large rope, fastened it to the harness lines and secured it to the gable of the barn roof, then made a slip noose in the rope, which he placed around his neck and jumped into the hay mow.

—A young man named Amasa Hubble stole a horse of Mrs. Ellen Culbertson, living one mile south of Saranac, and was tracked to Middleville by her son and Deputy Sheriff Dodge, of Saranac, and captured with the horse at the Dibble House.

—The Knights of Pythias had a splendid ball and banquet at Hastings the other night. At the close of the exhibition drill Sir Knight P. T. Colgrove, on behalf of the Hastings Division, presented Commander Ed Y. Hogle with a magnificent sword, and, though a surprise, he responded fittingly.

—Greenly Masonic Lodge, Adrian, founded many years ago by Grand Master and ex-Gov. Wm. L. Greenly, has merged its identity with Adrian Lodge, No. 10. The occasion was celebrated by a banquet. Representatives of lodges from Manchester, Clinton, Tecumseh, Blissfield, Palmyra, Clayton, and Chelsea were present.

—A German farmer of Blissfield is deeply worried in consequence of a note for $200 which he gave for twenty bushels of Bohemian oats. "I no care so much about myself, but I feels sorry for de man vot buys my note, for they don't can collect sometings out me." This is a rare case of disinterested sorrow. Time may perhaps assuage it.

—The Common Council made a lease to the Government of the lower floor of the new City Hall, at the annual rent of $800; but an injunction issued by Commissioner George L. Bennett, upon the prayer of fifteen citizens, was served upon Mayor Kimball restraining the Council from letting up or leasing this city property for postoffice purposes.
